

This is a digital copy of a book that was preserved for generations on library shelves before it was carefully scanned by Google as part of a project to make the world's books discoverable online.

It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

Usage guidelines

Google is proud to partner with libraries to digitize public domain materials and make them widely accessible. Public domain books belong to the public and we are merely their custodians. Nevertheless, this work is expensive, so in order to keep providing this resource, we have taken steps to prevent abuse by commercial parties, including placing technical restrictions on automated querying.

We also ask that you:

- + Make non-commercial use of the files We designed Google Book Search for use by individuals, and we request that you use these files for personal, non-commercial purposes.
- + Refrain from automated querying Do not send automated queries of any sort to Google's system: If you are conducting research on machine translation, optical character recognition or other areas where access to a large amount of text is helpful, please contact us. We encourage the use of public domain materials for these purposes and may be able to help.
- + Maintain attribution The Google "watermark" you see on each file is essential for informing people about this project and helping them find additional materials through Google Book Search. Please do not remove it.
- + Keep it legal Whatever your use, remember that you are responsible for ensuring that what you are doing is legal. Do not assume that just because we believe a book is in the public domain for users in the United States, that the work is also in the public domain for users in other countries. Whether a book is still in copyright varies from country to country, and we can't offer guidance on whether any specific use of any specific book is allowed. Please do not assume that a book's appearance in Google Book Search means it can be used in any manner anywhere in the world. Copyright infringement liability can be quite severe.

About Google Book Search

Google's mission is to organize the world's information and to make it universally accessible and useful. Google Book Search helps readers discover the world's books while helping authors and publishers reach new audiences. You can search through the full text of this book on the web at <http://books.google.com/>

LIBRARY
UNIVERSITY

THE SACRED AND PROFANE
HISTORY OF THE WORLD
CONNECTED,
FROM THE CREATION OF THE WORLD
TO
THE DISSOLUTION OF THE ASSYRIAN EMPIRE AT THE DEATH OF SARDANAPALUS, AND TO THE DECLENSION OF THE KING-DOMS OF JUDAH AND ISRAEL, UNDER THE REIGNS OF AHAZ AND PEKAH: INCLUDING
THE DISSERTATION ON THE CREATION AND FALL OF MAN.

—○○○○—
BY SAMUEL SHUCKFORD, D.D.
CHAPLAIN IN ORDINARY TO HIS MAJESTY, GEORGE THE SECOND.

—
Revised, Corrected, and Greatly Improved,
BY JAMES CREIGHTON, B. A.

FOUR VOLUMES IN TWO.
VOL. III.

—○○○○—
THE FIRST AMERICAN, FROM THE FIFTH LONDON EDITION.

Illustrated with a New and Correct Set of Maps and Plans, and an Extensive Index.

—
PHILADELPHIA:
PUBLISHED BY WILLIAM W. WOODWARD,
NO. 52, SOUTH SECOND STREET.

1824.

153517

D57

S5

V.3-4

INDIANA UNIVERSITY LIBRARY

ATLANTIC OCEAN
VIA AIR

1-24-23

TO THE RIGHT HONOURABLE
LORD VISCOUNT
CHARLES TOWNSHEND,

BARON OF LYNN REGIS, KNIGHT OF THE MOST NOBLE ORDER OF THE GARTER, &c.

THIS VOLUME

IS

MOST HUMBLY DEDICATED,

BY HIS LORDSHIP'S

MOST OBEDIENT

AND MOST HUMBLE SERVANT,

SAMUEL SHUCKFORD.

PREFACE.

THE first and second volumes of this History, which I offered some years ago to the public, so fully explain the nature and design of my undertaking, that there is no need of any farther account of it. This third volume contains the Sacred History from the time when the Israelites passed the Red Sea to the death of Joshua; and I have, as in the former volumes, made such observations, as I thought might obviate or answer objections or difficulties in the Scripture accounts of some facts in those times. I have also given such hints of the heathen nations, as belong to this period, and may enable me to deduce the Profane History in a clear light, when I shall come down to an age, which may afford plenty of materials for a relation of the affairs of it.

I am sensible that the reader may expect from me some account of the Jewish year, which he will not find in the ensuing volume. If the Israelites, when they came into Canaan, had not been instructed to compute such a number of days to a year, as might come very nigh to the true measure of it, they could not have continued long to keep their set feasts in their proper seasons. The heathen nations had as yet no notion of the year's containing more than three hundred and sixty days.* But such a year falling short five days, and almost a quarter of a day of a true solar revolution, it must be evident that the stated feasts of Moses's law, if they had been observed in a course of such years, would have returned five days and almost a quarter of a day, in every year, sooner than the true season of the year for observing them could have returned with them, and this in a very few years must have brought them into great confusion.^b Moses appointed the Passover to be killed and eaten on the fourteenth day of the first month at even.^c On the same evening they began to eat unleavened bread,^d and continued eating it till the evening of the one-and-twentieth day.^e The wave sheaf was to be offered on the second day of unleavened bread.^f Fifty days after,^g or on the fifth day of the third month, two wave loaves were to be offered for the wheat harvest;^h and on the fifteenth day of the seventh month,ⁱ they were to celebrate their ending the gathering in all the fruits of their land.^k Moses lived almost forty years after his giving the Israelites these institutions. Now if all this while three hundred and sixty days had been computed to be a year, it is evident, that the feasts of the law would by this time have gone backwards almost two hundred and ten days, from what was the real season of the year, at which they were at first appointed; for forty times five days and almost a quarter of a day amount to near that number. But we find that, when the Israelites came into Canaan, and were to keep the Passover there on the fourteenth day of the month Abib,^l the corn was ripe in the fields.^m Jordan then overflowed all its banks, for which it was annually remarkable all the time of harvest;ⁿ so that the Passover, and consequently the other feasts, fell this year about the times, when Moses at first stated them. Therefore the Israelites must have had some method to adjust their computed year to the true measure of a real one; otherwise the observation of their set festivals would have remarkably varied from their true seasons in a few years.

* See Preface to vol. i.

By what particular method the ancient Israelites regulated their year in this manner, may perhaps be diffi-

* They must in a few years have come to celebrate the Passover, before they could have had lambs fit to be eaten. The wave sheaf-offering would have come about, before the barley was ripe to be reaped, and the Pentecost before the time of wheat harvest. Prideaux, Preface to part i of his Connection.

^c Exod. xii, 6—8: Levit. xxiii, 5.

^d Exod. xii, 18.

^e Ibid.

^f Joseph. Antiq. lib. iii, c. 10.

^g Levit. xxiii, 15, 16.

^h Exod. xxxiv, 22.

ⁱ Levit. xxiii, 39.

^k In Canaan the produce of the earth seems to come on in the same course as in Egypt. In Egypt the barley was in the ear, when the wheat and the rye were not grown up, Exod. ix. 31, 32; so in Canaan the barley harvest came on first: then the wheat harvest, and after these, the gathering their other fruits, the fruits of their vineyards and oliveyards, &c.

^l Josh. v, 10.

^m Ibid; see book xii.

ⁿ Josh. iii, 15.

cult to be ascertained. However, I shall endeavour to offer, what I think may be gathered from some hints in Moses's institutions relating to this matter.

Moses, in order to calculate and regulate the sacred festivals, directed the Israelites to observe the month Abib;^o which was to be unto them the beginning of months, that is, the first month of the year.^p On the fourteenth day of this month at even, they were to kill and eat the Passover.^q The day after, or the fifteenth, was the first day of unleavened bread,^r and, which ought to be particularly remarked, the first day of unleavened bread was always to fall upon a Sabbath; which I think is hinted in Levit. xxiii, 11. The wave sheaf was to be waved on the morrow after a Sabbath;^s but the wave sheaf was thus offered on the second day of unleavened bread;^t and consequently if that day was the morrow after a Sabbath, then the day preceding or first day of unleavened bread was a Sabbath. If this point be rightly stated, it should be remembered, that the Sabbaths in this first month will fall thus; the first day a Sabbath, the eighth day a Sabbath, the fifteenth a Sabbath, the twenty-second a Sabbath, and the twenty-ninth a Sabbath. A month was ordinarily computed to be thirty days, neither more nor less.^u Accordingly, if we go through the second month, the Sabbaths in it must be thus: the sixth day a Sabbath, the thirteenth a Sabbath, the twentieth a Sabbath, and the twenty-seventh a Sabbath.^v In the third month the Sabbaths will fall

^o Deut. xvi, 1.

^p Exodus xii, 2.

^q Ibid. 6—8; Levit. xxiii, 5.

^r Levit. xxiii, 6.

^s Ver. 11. The Hebrew words are, מחרת השבת i. e. crastino sabbati, on the day after the Sabbath.

^t Joseph. Antiq. lib. iii. ubi sup.

^u Moses thus computes the months in his account of the Flood. From the seventeenth day of the second month, to the seventeenth day of the seventh month; for five whole months he reckons one hundred and fifty days, Gen. vii, 11, 24; viii, 3, 4, which is exactly thirty days to each month; for five times thirty days are one hundred and fifty.

^v Scaliger intimates that the twenty-second day of this second month was a Sabbath. Lib. de Emendat. Temp. p. 153, which, if true, would overthrow the order of the Sabbaths I am offering. But, 1. If the twenty-second of this month had been a Sabbath, then the fifteenth must have been a Sabbath also; and the people would have rested in their tents upon it, Exod. xvi, 30. But the fifteenth was a day of travel; the Israelites took their journey from Eim unto the Wilderness of Sin, on the fifteenth day of the second month, Exod. xvi, 1, so that this day was not a Sabbath, and consequently neither was the twenty-second. 2. Scaliger's opinion is founded upon an imagination that the quails were given in the very evening, and the manna on the morning after the Israelites came into this wilderness. If this were the fact, the Israelites gathering manna for six successive days, before Moses observed to them that to-thus: the fourth day a Sabbath: and the day after this Sabbath was the day of Pentecost, or the fiftieth day from the day of the bringing the sheaf of the wave offering;⁷ for from the day of waving it, on the day after a Sabbath, they were to count seven Sabbaths complete; unto the day after the seventh Sabbath fifty days, and upon that fiftieth day they were to offer the two wave loaves and their new meal-offering.² Accordingly, from the sixteenth of the first month to the fifth day of the third month, counting inclusively, are fifty days; and the fiftieth day falls regularly on the morrow or day after the Sabbath, as Moses calculates it.³ The other Sabbaths in the third month fall thus: the eleventh day a Sabbath, the eighteenth a Sabbath, and the twenty-fifth a Sabbath. In the fourth month the Sabbaths fall as follows: the second day a Sabbath, the ninth a Sabbath, the sixteenth a Sabbath, the twenty-third a Sabbath, and the thirtieth a Sabbath. In the fifth month, the seventh day will be a Sabbath, the fourteenth a Sabbath, the twenty-first a Sabbath, and the twenty-eighth a Sabbath. In the sixth month, the fifth day is a Sabbath, the twelfth day a Sabbath, the nineteenth a Sabbath, and the twenty-sixth a Sabbath. We are now to begin the seventh month: and here I must observe, that Moses was ordered to speak unto the children of Israel, saying, In the seventh month, in the first day of the month, shall ye have a Sabbath.^b It may be here queried, whether this Sabbath was to fall seven days morrow is the Sabbath (See ver. 22, 23,) would indeed suggest that the Sabbath fell on the twenty-second. But how improbable is it that the Israelites should have fixed their camp, explored the country, found that they could not be supported in it, mutinied, obtained a miraculous supply from God; and all this in the remaining part of a day almost spent in travel? A supply given thus instantaneously would hardly have been known to be a miracle. They could not so soon have judged enough of the country they were in, to determine whether it might not be the natural product of it. In the wilderness of Shur they travelled three days before they came to high complaints for want of water, Exod. xv, 22. In like manner they came into the Wilderness of Sin, on the fifteenth day of the month, on a second day of the week. In about four days they had eaten up all that could be provided for them; and found absolutely that the land they were in could not support them. In this extremity they were ready to mutiny; on the fifth day, the twentieth day of the month, and the seventh day of the week at even, Moses obtained the quails for them, and on the next morning the manna. They gathered manna for six days, and then the Sabbath was on the twenty-seventh. In this way of computing, we allow the affairs transacted a necessary space of time; which will fix the Sabbaths to the days I have supposed to belong to them.

⁷ Levit. xxiii, 15.

² Levit. xxiii, 16.

³ Levit. xxiii, 17; Numb. xxviii, 26.

^b Levit. xxiii, 24.

after the last Sabbath, and be one of the weekly Sabbaths of the year: or whether it was to be a common day of the week in itself, but ordered to be kept as a Sabbath by a special appointment. An answer to this query is easy to be collected from considering the appointments of this season. The tenth day of this seventh month was to be a day of atonement to afflict their souls, and they were especially ordered to do no work on that same day. There could have been no need of that particular order, if this tenth day had been a Sabbath; for upon account of its being a Sabbath day, no manner of work must have been done therein;^c this tenth day therefore did not fall upon a weekly Sabbath. But we may observe, that it would have been a weekly Sabbath, if some special appointment had not here taken place to prevent it; for as the twenty-sixth day of the sixth month was a Sabbath, the days going on in their common order; the third day of the seventh month would have been a Sabbath, and consequently the tenth. But the tenth day thus appearing not to have been a Sabbath, it must be allowed that the third also was not a Sabbath day: and consequently, that there must have been some particular appointment, to cause the Sabbaths not to go on in the course in which they would otherwise have proceeded. Now the injunction of the first day of the seventh month's being a Sabbath appears very plainly to have been this appointment; and would always cause the tenth day not to fall on a Sabbath, but on a week-day, pertinently to the injunction of having no work done therein; so that I think, there can remain nothing farther to be considered, than at what distance this Sabbath day, on the first day of the seventh month, was to be kept from after the last preceding Sabbath. And I think we may conclude that seven days must have been the interval; for I think this was the law of the Sabbath without variation. Between Sabbath and Sabbath, six days they were to labour and do all their work; but the seventh day was to be the Sabbath;^d and if this be allowed me, it will be plain that the Israelites must have here added two days to the end of the sixth month to make the sixth day of the week the last day of it; for the twenty-sixth day of this month was, as I have observed, a Sabbath;^c consequently, if this month, like other months, had contained only thirty days, the last day of it would have been the fourth day of the week, and the first day of the seventh month could not have been a Sabbath, in the manner which Moses appointed. Here therefore the Israelites kept two week-days more than this month would otherwise have afforded; and began the seventh month with the Sabbath, according to the injunction. But to go on; the first day of the seventh month being thus a Sabbath; it will follow, that in this month the eighth day would be a Sabbath, the fifteenth a Sabbath, the twenty-second a Sabbath, and twenty-ninth a Sabbath. The tenth day of this month was the day of atonement;^f the fifteenth day began the feast of tabernacles,^g a feast to be kept for the gathering in the fruits of the land.^h This feast was thus to begin with a Sabbath,ⁱ and after seven days' celebration, it was ended on the eighth day, namely, on the twenty-second day of this month, with another Sabbath.^k The twenty-ninth day of the seventh month being a Sabbath, the Sabbaths in the eighth month will fall thus: the sixth day will be a Sabbath, the thirteenth a Sabbath, the twentieth a Sabbath, and the twenty-seventh a Sabbath. In the ninth month, the fourth day will be a Sabbath, the eleventh a Sabbath, the eighteenth a Sabbath, and the twenty-fifth a Sabbath. In the tenth month, the second day will be a Sabbath, the ninth a Sabbath, the sixteenth a Sabbath, the twenty-third a Sabbath, and the thirtieth a Sabbath. In the eleventh month, the seventh day will be a Sabbath, the fourteenth a Sabbath, the twenty-first a Sabbath, and the twenty-eighth a Sabbath. In the twelfth month, the fifth day will be Sabbath, the twelfth a Sabbath, the nineteenth a Sabbath, and the twenty-sixth a Sabbath, and the thirtieth day of this month would be the fourth day of the week. But here it must be remembered, that the first day of the ensuing year, the first of the month Abib, must fall upon a Sabbath;^l so that here, as at the end of the sixth month, two days must be added to make the week and the year end together; that the first day of Abib may be regularly a Sabbath, after a

^c Exod. xx, 10.^d Exod. xx, 9, 10.

^c Vid. quæ sup.

^h Ver. 39.

^k Ibid.

^f Levit. xxiii, 27.

ⁱ Levit. xxiii, 39.

^l Vid. quæ sup.

^g Ver. 34.

due interval of six days between the last foregoing Sabbath and the day of it. In this manner Moses's appointments appear to carry the Israelites through the year in fifty-two complete weeks, amounting to three hundred and sixty-four days; and this would be a great approximation to the true and real solar year, in comparison of what all other nations at this time fell short of it. But still it must be remarked, that even a year thus settled would not fully answer; for the true length of the year being, as I have said, three hundred and sixty-five days and almost six hours; Moses's year, if thus constituted, would still fall short one day and almost six hours in every solar revolution, and this would have amounted to almost fifty days in the forty years, which he was with the Israelites, and therefore, had the Israelites began and continued computing their year in this manner, they would have found at their entering into Canaan on the tenth day of their month Abib, that they were come thither, not just at the time of harvest, as they might have expected, nor when Jordan overflowed its banks, as it did annually; but rather they would have been there almost fifty days before the season, so that we must endeavour to look for some farther direction in Moses's appointments, or we shall be yet at a loss to say how the Israelites could keep their year from varying away from the seasons. But I would observe, that there are several hints, in the injunctions of Moses, which may lead us through this difficulty. The feasts of the LORD were to be proclaimed in their seasons;^m and it is remarkable, that the season for the wave sheaf offering is directed in some measure by the time of harvest. When ye be come into the land, which I give unto you, and shall reap the harvest thereof, then shall ye bring a sheafⁿ—Thus again: seven weeks shalt thou number unto thee; begin to number the seven weeks from such time as thou beginnest to put the sickle to the corn.^o The numbering these weeks was to begin from the day of bringing the sheaf of the wave-offering,^p therefore the wave sheaf-offering and the Pentecost at the end of the weeks appear evi-

^m Levit. xxiii, 4.

^o Deut. xvi, 9.

ⁿ Ver. 10.

^p Levit. xxiii, 15.

dently to have been regulated by the corn season; which was sure to return annually after the revolution of a true year, however the computed year might vary from, or not come up to it. And the only question which can now remain is, whether the Israelites were to keep all their other feasts on their set days, exactly at the return of the computed year; or whether their other feasts were regulated along with these of the wheat sheaf and Pentecost, so as to have their computed year corrected and amended as often as the return of harvest showed there was reason for it. Now this last intimation appears plainly to me to have been the fact; for I observe, that the fifteenth day of the seventh month is supposed never to fall before they had gathered in the fruits of their land: because on that day they were always to keep a feast for the ending all their harvest.⁴ But if the computed year had gone on without correction, the fifteenth day of the seventh month, every year falling short a day and almost a quarter of a true solar year, would in a number of years have come about, before the time for beginning their harvest. And Moses lived long enough to have seen it very sensibly moving towards this absurdity; and consequently cannot be supposed to have left it fixed in such a manner. Rather the whole computed year was to be regulated by the season of harvest. When the year was ended, the Israelites were to proclaim for the ensuing year the feasts of the LORD;⁵ and they were, I think, to be kept at their times according to this public indiction of them: and in order to fix their times right, they were in the first place to observe the month Abib,⁶ the harvest month,⁷ to appoint the beginning of that to its true season. This they might do (as often as they found it varying from it, by the corn not growing ripe for the sickle at or about the sixteenth day of this month, the second day of unleavened bread,⁸ on which they were wont to

⁴ Ver. 39.

⁵ Levit. xxiii, 4.

⁶ Deut. xvi, 1. I need not, I think, observe, that the weather in Judea was not so variable as in our climate; and consequently, that seed time and harvest were seasons more fixed with the inhabitants of this country than with us.

⁷ It may be queried, whether Abib be the name of a month. The Israelites in these times seem to have named their months no otherwise than first, second, third, &c. Nomina mensium ab initio nulla fuere, says Scaliger. The Hebrew word Abib signifies ripening, and perhaps Moses did not mean by Chorlesh ha Abib, the month Abib, intending Abib as a proper name, but the month of ripening, or of the corn being fit for the sickle.

⁸ Exod. xii; Levit. xxiii, ubi sup.

offer their wave sheaf)* in the following manner. When, I say, they found at the end of the year, from the experience of two or three past years, as well as the year then before them, that harvest was not so forward as to be fit to be begun in about sixteen days; they might then add so many days to the end of their year as might be requisite, that they might not begin the month Abib until, upon the sixteenth of it, they might expect to put the sickle to the corn, and bring the wave sheaf in their accustomed manner. This, I think, might be the method in which the ancient Israelites adjusted their year to the seasons; and I conceive, that when they added to their year in this manner, the addition they made was of whole weeks, one, two, or more, as the appearing backwardness of the season required; that the first of Abib might fall upon a Sabbath, and the other Sabbaths of the year follow in their order, as I have above fixed them. We may observe, concerning this method of adjusting the year, that it is easy and obvious; no depths of human science, or skill in astronomy, are requisite for proceeding according to it. The Israelites could only want once in about twenty years to lift up their eyes, and to look into their fields,† and to consider before they proclaimed the beginning of their month Abib, whether, or how much they wanted of being white to harvest; and this, with the observing their sabbaths as above related, would furnish them a year fully answering all the purposes of their religion or civil life. Now this method being thus capable of answering all purposes, without leading them to a necessity of fixing equinoxes, estimating the motions of the heavenly bodies, or acquainting themselves with any of those schemes of human learning, by which the heathen nations were led into their idolatries, I am the more apt to think, that this was the method which God was pleased by the hand of Moses to suggest to them.

I am aware of only one point, which can furnish any very material objection to what I have offered. The Israelites were ordered by Moses to keep the beginning of their months as solemn feasts, on which they were to offer special sacrifices;‡ and they were to celebrate them like their other high festivals with blowing of trumpets.^a And they seem to have carefully observed this appointment in their worst, as well as in their best, from their earliest to their latest times. In the days of Saul, these days were kept as high feasts, on which a person, who used to sit there, was sure to be missed, if absent from the king's table.^b They are mentioned as held by David and Solomon amongst the solemn festivals.^c As such, Hezekiah afterwards provided for the observance of them.^d The Prophets mention them in like manner,^e and Ezra took care to revive them at the return from the captivity;^f and it appears to have been the custom of all the Israelites, who feared God, to observe these days among the feasts of the house of Israel, as is evident from the character given to Judith, amongst other things, for her care in this matter.^g In their later days the Jews fixed the days of these feasts, by the appearance of the new Moon;^h and great pains were taken to begin the month and the moon together.ⁱ This was the practice, when the author of the book of Ecclesiasticus wrote; for he tells us, that from the Moon is the sign of feasts;^k and the Jewish writers say, that Moses appointed this practice, and that the Israelites proceeded by it, from the beginning of the law.^l The LXX indeed seem to have been of this opinion, and accordingly, except in three or four places only,^m in their translation of the Hebrew Scriptures, they render the expression for the beginning of the months by the Greek word μηνιαία,ⁿ or μηνιωνία, the term constantly used by the heathen writers for their festival of the new Moons observed by them.^o And we have followed the LXX, and do generally call the first days of the months, the new moons, in our English Bibles. But

* Joseph. ubi sup.

† John iv, 35.

‡ Numb. xxviii, 11.

^a Numb. x, 10.

^c 1 Chron. xxiii, 31; 2 Chron. ii, 4; viii, 13.

^e Isaiah i, 13, 14; lxvi, 23; Ezek. xli, 1; Hos. ii, 11; Amos viii, 5.

^f Ezra iii, 5.

^b 1 Sam. xx, 5.

^d 2 Chron. xxxi, 3.

^g Judith viii, 6.

^h Talmud in Tract. Rosh. Hashanah; Maimonides in Keddush; Hachod.; Selden de anno civili veterum Judæorum; Scaliger. Can. Isagog. lib. iii, p. 222; Clem. Alexand. Stromat. lib. vi, p. 760, edit. Oxon.

ⁱ The English reader may see the translation of Jurieu's History of the Doctrines and Worship of the Church, vol. i, p. ii, c. 8, Prideaux, Connect. Preface to vol. i.

^k Eccles. xliii, 7.

^l Vid. Spen. de Leg. Heb. p. 810.

^m Vid. 2 Chron. viii, 13; Isaiah lxvi, 23; Amos viii, 5.

ⁿ Numb. x, 10; xxviii, 11; 1 Sam. xx, 5; 2 Kings iv, 23; 1 Chron. xxiii, 31; Psalm lxxxi, 3; et passim.

^o Vid. Herodot. lib. de vit. Homer c. 33; Plutarch de vitand. ære alieno, p. 828; Theophrast. Character. Ethic. iv; Lucian. in Icaro Menip. p. 731.

if the ancient Israelites fixed these festivals in this manner, they could not compute their months and year as I have intimated; for in a calendar formed according to what I have offered, the new Moons and first days of the months would not agree with one another. The most learned Dean Prideaux has given a full account of the manner of the Jewish year in their later ages. It consisted of twelve lunar months, made up, alternately, of twenty-nine or of thirty days, and brought to as good an agreement as such a year could have with the true solar year, by an intercalation of a thirteenth month every second or third year.^p And some year of this sort the Israelites must have used in and from the time of Moses, if they had observed the new Moons from his time, making them the directors of the beginning of their months, and keeping their feasts according to them.

But I would observe, 1. That it cannot be conceived, that Moses had any notion of computing months according to this lunar reckoning, for five successive months in his account were deemed to contain one hundred and fifty days;^q but had he computed by lunar months, one hundred and forty-eight days would have been the highest amount of them. In like manner, twelve months only made a Jewish year, until, at least, after the times of David and Solomon; for had there been in their times a thirteenth month added to the year, and that so frequently as in every second or third year, neither would twelve captains in David's, nor the same number of officers of the household in Solomon's time have been sufficient, by waiting each man his month, to have gone throughout all the months of the year in their waitings.^r No man of them waited more than one month in any one year,^s and therefore no years at this time had more than twelve months belonging to them. But the best writers seem fully satisfied in this point. "It can never be proved," says Archbishop Usher, "that the Hebrews used lunary months before the Babylonian captivity."^t Petavius seems to think, not till after the times of Alexander the Great, when they fell under the ^q Gen. vii, 12, 24; viii. 3.

^p Prideaux's Connect. Pref. to Part i.

^r 1 Kings iv, 5; 1 Chron. xxvii.

^s 1 Kings iv, 7.

^t Chronol. Pref. to the Reader. Vid. Scaliger. Emend. Temp. p. 151.

government of the Syro-Macedonian kings." 2. It is not probable, that God should command the Israelites to regulate their months by the Moon, or to keep a feast upon the particular day of the new Moon; for the law, if this had been a constitution of it, would have been calculated rather to lead them into danger of idolatry, than to preserve them from it. The practice of the later Jews in this matter prompted an author, cited by Clemens Alexandrinus, to charge them with idolatry;² which charge, though I cannot think it well grounded, yet abundantly hints to me, that a feast of new Moons is not likely to be a precept of Moses's law. I think God would not have directed him to institute any thing, which could carry such an appearance of evil: especially when one great design of the manner of giving the law is declared to be, that *the Israelites when they lifted up their eyes to Heaven, and saw the Sun, and the Moon, and the Stars, even all the host of Heaven, should not be driven to worship them.*¹ The nations, whom the Israelites were to drive out, seem to have served these gods, and in this manner; and it is not likely the Israelites should be required to do so unto the LORD their GOD;³ rather it might be expected, that they should be instructed in a method of beginning their months opposite to any show of agreement with the heathen superstitions. They were commanded not to use honey in any of their sacrifices;^a not to sow their fields with mingled seed;^b not to round the corner of their heads, nor mar the corners of their beards;^c which things were practised by the heathens as rites of religion, and therefore the Israelites were not allowed to do them. The Israelites were to be a peculiar people unto the LORD their GOD; and whilst there runs through the whole law a visible design of many of its institutions to separate them from other nations for this great purpose, is it likely there should be a direction for them to begin their months with the Moon, which was worshipped by the heathens as a high deity? I dare say, this beauty of

¹ Petav. Rationar. Temp. part. ii, lib. i, c. 6.

² Μὴδὲ κατὰ Ἰουδαίᾳ σέβασθαι, καὶ γὰρ θεοὶ μόνος ὡμῶν τοῦ Θεοῦ γινώσκων, οὐκ ἐπιστάνται, λατρεύοντες ἀγγέλους καὶ ἀρχαγγέλους, μῆνι καὶ σελήνῃ, καὶ οὐ μὴ σελήνῃ φατῇ, σάββατον ἐκ ἀρχῆς τοῦ λογιζομένου πρώτου, οὐδὲ νεκρῶν ἀρχὴν, οὐτὶ ἀζύμια, οὐτὶ εὐρηνη, οὐτὶ μετὰ τὴν ἡμέραν. Clem. Alexand. Stromat. lib. vi, p. 270.

³ Deut. iv, 19.

^a Id. xii, 31.

^b Levit. ii, 11.

^c Id. xix, 19.

^d Ver. 27.

Heaven,^d lucidum cœli decus, says Horace,^e queen of Heaven,^f glory of the stars,^g Horace expresses it, siderum regina,^h was not a regulator or director of the religious festivals of the God of Israel; rather his chosen people were led into some plainer method of computing their months, and that such a method,ⁱ as might so vary the beginning of them from a determined relation to any light of Heaven, as to evidence, that the appointed holidays, which they kept, they did indeed keep only unto the LORD. The author of the Book of Ecclesiasticus observes concerning the Moon, that the month is called after her name;^j but this was not so to an ancient Israelite. In our English language the words Moon and month may have this relation; and a like thought is to be supported in the Greek tongue, in which the author of Ecclesiasticus wrote his Book. Μην, the month, may be a contraction from μην, the Moon, though I think it more natural to derive μην from μην, than μην from μην. However, in the Hebrew, jareach,^k or lebanah^l are the words which signify Moon; and chodesh^m is the word for month; and these have no such affinity to one another. 4. Indeed, in the Hebrew Bible, there is, I think, no one text, either in the Books of Moses, or in any other of the Books of the Old Testament, which intimate that the Israelites observed the day of the new Moon in any of their festivals. The Israelites were to offer their burnt-offerings unto the LORD in the beginning, not of their Moons, but [כְּרֵאשֵׁי חֳדָשִׁים] be-Rashei Chadsheichem, "on the beginnings of their months,"ⁿ and the expression is the same, Numb. x, 10. The Israelites are there commanded to blow with the trumpets . . . on the beginning of their months; but nothing relating to the Moon is suggested to them. And this expression runs through all the texts of Scripture, in which the LXX have used the word νεομηνια or νεομηνια; or we in English, the new Moons. When the Shunamite would have gone to the Prophet, her husband said unto her, wherefore wilt thou go to him to day? It is neither (we render the place,) new Moon, nor sabbath; the LXX say ou νεομηνια ουδε σαββατον but the Hebrew words are, loa chodesh ve loa shabbath,^{*} it is not the month-day, nor the sabbath. Thus again the Psalmist directs, to blow up the trumpet, not as we render it, in the new Moons, nor, as the LXX ev νεομηνια; but, ba chodesh, upon the month day.[†] In none of the texts, that suggest this festival, is there any mention ha Jareash or hal Lebanah, of the Moon; for not the first day of the Moon, but the first day of the month, was the day observed by them. It is remarkable, that this signification of the Hebrew texts was so undeniable to the Jewish Rabbins, that they could not but own, that their observing the first days of months upon new Moons did not arise from any direction of the words of the law,[‡] they say it was one of the matters which Moses was taught in the Mount, and by tradition was brought down to them.[§] It is, I think, undeniable, that the Jews did admit the use of a new form of computing their year some time after the captivity, which differed in many points from their more ancient method,

^d Eccles. xliii, 9.^e Carm. Seculare.^f See Jer. vii, 18.^g Eccles. ubi sup.^h Hor. ib.ⁱ Eccles. xliii, 8.^j Vid. Gen. xxxvii, 9; Deut. iv, 19; Josh. x, 19; Job xxxv, 5; Psalm viii, 4; Eccles. xii, 2; Isaiah xlii, 10; Jer. viii, 2; Ezek. xxxii, 7; Joel ii, 10, &c.^k Cantic. vi, 10; Isaiah xxiv, 23; xxx, 26.^l Gen. viii, 4; Exod. xii, 2; Levit. xxiii, 24; Deut. i, 3; 1 Kings i, 7, &c.^m Numb. xxviii, 11.

* 2 Kings iv, 23.

† Psalm lxxxi, 4. The latter part of the verse is thought by some writers to intimate something contrary to what I am offering. Blow up the trumpet, says the Psalmist, on the month day, after which follows, בַּכֶּסֶה לַיּוֹם חַגֵּגֵנוּ, bacceseh lejom chaggenu. The word ceseh, they say, is derived from the verb casah, to cover, so that bacceseh may signify, at the covering, or when the Moon is in conjunction with the Sun, covered, as it were, so as to give no light. Thus these writers think this verse intimates that the new Moon had been a solemn festival. But I would observe, the expression thus taken is so singular, unlike any thing to be met with in any other place of Scripture, notwithstanding the frequent mention of the festival here intended, that I think we cannot safely build upon it. Others derive the word ceseh, from כָּסַס casas, to number out, and accordingly render bacceseh, upon the appointed day: but were this the sense of the place, the word would, perhaps, have been written not בַּכֶּסֶה, bacceseh, but כָּסַס baccosea, see Proverbs vii, 21. The reader may see what has been offered upon this text in Scalig. de Emendat. Temp. lib. iii, p. 153; Cleric. Comment. in loc., and will, after all, find the passage to be obscure, at most but doubtfully explained by those who have written upon it. לַיּוֹם is the same as בַּיּוֹם. See Proverbs vii, 21. חַג הַמִּצֵּת is the known expression for the feast of tabernacles. Deut. xvi, 13. And I have been apt to suspect, that transcribers have misplaced the letter p in the word ceseh, and wrote כָּסַס instead of כָּסַס, i. e. bacceseh for hasuccoth. In the Hebrew the letters of the one word might readily be written for the letters of the other. And if we may make this emendation, hasuccoth lejom haggenu, will signify on the day of our feast of tabernacles; and the Psalmist will appear to recommend the observing two solemn feasts, which fell almost together in the same month; the one the month day, or, first day of the seventh month, on which was to be a memorial of blowing of trumpets, Levit. xxiii, 24; the other the first day of the feast of tabernacles. See ver. 34.

‡ Maimonid. More Nevoch. p. iii, c. xlvi.

§ Abarb. in Parasch.

and which obliged them in time to make many rules for the translation of days and feasts; an account of which we may find in the writer of their antiquities.[†] But the law, as Moses or Joshua left it to the observance of their fathers, or as it was observed until after David's or Solomon's time, seems to have been a stranger to all these regulations. I might perhaps say, that the Jews in following these were in many points led contrary to Moses's directions. When our Saviour was betrayed, he was apprehended on the night of the Passover, after he had eaten the Passover with his disciples,[‡] and carried early in the evening to the high priest's house first,^{*} and afterwards before Pilate into the judgment hall; for the Jews, who prosecuted, had not then eaten the Passover, and upon this account could not go into the judgment hall. They intended our Saviour's accusation should be capital; the law had appointed, that persons defiled with the dead body of a man should be kept back and not eat the Passover until the fourteenth day of the second month;[‡] they judged the persons, who were to accuse our Saviour, so as to bring him unto death, would be under the restriction of this law; and therefore they left off their prosecution until they should go home and eat the Passover. On the next morning, on the day after the Passover, they assembled, and carried him again to Pilate, and took counsel against him to put him to death,[‡] and in this morning passed the several matters that are related to have preceded our Saviour's crucifixion; namely, Pilate's sending him to Herod,[‡] Pilate's wife's message to Pilate upon account of her dreams,[‡] Herod's remanding Jesus back again to Pilate,[‡] Pilate's then delivering him to the Jews to be crucified,[‡] upon which they immediately led him away and crucified him,[‡] and the next day was the sabbath;[‡]

[†] See Godwin's Moses and Aaron, lib. iii, c. 7.

[‡] Matt. xvii, 17—31, &c.; Mark xiv, 12—27, &c.; Luke xxii, 7—34, &c.

^{*} It was rather very early in the morning, about the time of cock-crowing, and shortly after (πρωι, or πρωια, about break of day) the priests and scribes assembled; and, after some investigation, brought him before Pilate and accused him. But it does not appear that they brought him before Pilate twice, as Dr. Shuckford asserts; and our Lord expired about three o'clock in the afternoon of the same day in which he was apprehended. Ewrr.

[‡] Numb. ix, 10, 11.

[‡] Matt. xxvii, 1; Mark xv, 1; Luke xxii, 66.

[‡] Luke xxiii, 7.

[‡] Matt. xxvii, 19.

[‡] Luke xxiii, 11.

[‡] Ver. 21—24.

[‡] Matt. xxvii, 27—35; Mark xv, 16—24; Luke xxiii, 26—33; John xix, 16—18.

[‡] Mark xv, 42; Luke xxiii, 54; John xix, 31.

so that in this year, the Jews had at least a day between the evening of eating the Passover and the sabbath; but had they at this time proceeded according to Moses's institutions, I think the first day of unleavened bread, the day immediately following the evening of the Passover, would have been the sabbath.^f

I have now offered the reader what I have for some time apprehended, that the institutions of Moses's law hint to have been the first and most ancient method used by the Israelites for computing and regulating their year. I have much wished to find some one learned writer directing me in this matter; but as I cannot say I do, I hope I have expressed myself with a proper diffidence. If the reader shall think what I have offered may be admitted, a small correction must be made in what I have suggested concerning the ancient Jewish year, in my preface to my first volume. And if I shall find myself herein mistaken, I shall be hereafter better able to retract what I have thus attempted in a preface only, than if I had given it a place in the following books among the observations upon the law of Moses. I have taken no notice of a sentiment of Scaliger, which seems to be admitted by Archbishop Usher, that the ancient Israelites computed their year in twelve months of thirty days each, adding five days at the end of the twelfth month yearly, and a sixth every fourth year,^g because it is a thought for which I find no shadow of proof from any hint in Scripture, or remains of antiquity. Scaliger indeed attempts to compute the year of the Flood to have been reckoned up by Moses to contain three hundred and sixty-five days;^h but in order to give colour to his supposition, he represents that the raven and the dove, sent by Noah out of the ark, to see if the waters were abated, had been sent out at forty days' interval the one from the other,ⁱ but Moses's narra-

^f According to the Jewish calculation of the year, after they used lunar years, the interval between the Passover and the sabbath following it, was different in different years. For instance, there was a day between in the year of our Saviour's crucifixion, the day of the Passover falling that year as on our Thursday: but it is evident, a Jewish lunar year ordinarily containing but three hundred and fifty-four days, that the Passover in the next year would fall as on a Tuesday, and consequently there would be three days between the Passover and the sabbath, &c.

^g Scaliger lib. de Emendat. Temp. p. 151; Usher's Chronol. Epistle to the Reader.

^h Scaliger, p. 152, &c.

ⁱ Gen. viii, 7, 8.

tion intimates nothing like it, nor will any reader allow it to be probable, that collects and duly compares the particulars related by Moses of the rise and fall of the waters, and of Noah's conduct and observations. The raven and the dove here spoken of, were undoubtedly sent out, both upon one and the same day. As to Archbishop Usher's seeming to be of opinion that the ancient Jewish year was in this manner made up of three hundred and sixty-five days, with an allowance for about a quarter of a day in every year, he had computed, and found that a number of years of the Israelites were capable of being made to answer to a like number of Julian years, and this led him to think they were, as to length, of much the same nature. I need only observe that, if the Israelites computed their years in the manner above-mentioned by me, a number of such years will not much vary in the sum of them, from the sum of a like number of Julian.

I intended an attempt in this place to answer the objections of some writers, who would argue that Moses had not composed the books we ascribe to him, but having in many parts both of this and the former volumes obviated the difficulties, which seem to arise from some short hints and observations now interspersed in the sacred pages, which the learned are apprized had not been inserted by the authors of the books, they are now found in,^k I should in a great measure only repeat what I have already remarked, were I to refute at large what is offered upon this topic. If the reader has a mind to examine it, he may find the whole of what can be pretended on the one side in Spinoza,^l and Le Clerc's third dissertation prefixed to his comment on the Pentateuch may furnish matter for a clear and distinct answer on the other. We have indeed a hint or two upon this argument in some remains of a very great writer: "The race of the kings of Edom, it is observed, before there reigned any king in Israel, is set down in the book of Genesis, and therefore that book was not written entirely in the form now extant, before the reign of Saul." The reader may find this difficulty attempted to be cleared in its proper place, I shall therefore only refer to what is already said upon it.^m

^k See book xii, et in al. loc.

^l Tract, Theologico-polit. in part. alter. c. viii.

“The history [in the Pentateuch] hath been collected, we are told, from several books, such as were the history of the creation composed by Moses, Gen. ii, 4, the book of the generations of Adam, Gen. v, 1, and the book of the wars of the LORD, Numb. xxi, 14.” It is something difficult to form any notion of the force of the argument here intended. St. Matthew writes, The Book of the generation of JESUS CHRIST:ⁿ can we hence argue, that the gospel we now have and ascribe to him, was collected from a book of the generation of JESUS CHRIST written by him? Spinoza indeed offers the point, which may perhaps be here intimated, to this purpose. The books which Moses wrote are expressly named, and sometimes cited in the Pentateuch; consequently the Pentateuch is a different work from the books cited in it.^o But the fact is this: Moses has, in some parts of his books, told us expressly, that he wrote them, and this writer would infer the direct contrary from these very intimations.

In the xxxiiiid chapter of Numbers, ver. 1, 2, we have these words: These are the journeys of the children of Israel, which went forth out of the land of Egypt, with their armies, under the hand of Moses and Aaron. And Moses wrote their goings out according to their journeys, by the commandment of the Lord. And these are their journeys according to their goings out, &c. Let us now suppose, that these words, and what follow them to the end of the 49th verse of this chapter, were perhaps Moses’s conclusion of the book he wrote upon this subject, whether he called it Motzah, a word answering to Exodus, or Shemoth, i. e. The Book of Names, as the Jews seem afterwards to have nominated it, or whether he really affixed no title to it. Let us suppose that it began from the first chapter of Exodus, and contained all the journeyings of the Israelites, with the historical circumstances, which led to or attended them, and that it ended with the recapitulation of them mentioned in this chapter. In the xxivth chapter of Exodus, it may seem to be intimated, ⁿ Matt. i, 1.

^m See vol. ii, b. vii, p. 137.

^o Tractat. Theologico-polit. in part. alter. c. viii.

that Moses wrote another book called the Book of the Covenant.^p Let us now suppose, that Moses at first wrote in this book no more than what God had commanded, and the people solemnly engaged themselves to perform, at their entering into covenant with God; namely, what is mentioned in the xixth, xxth, xxiid, and xxivth chapters of Exodus. It may still be reasonably concluded, the covenant being not limited to the observance of the few commandments contained in these chapters, but obliging the Israelites to obey God's voice, to observe all the statutes and judgments which God should give them;^q that the commandments afterwards given unto Moses were also written in this book in the following order. First, The laws given in Mount Sinai, towards the end of which might be thus written, These are the statutes, and judgments, which the LORD made between him and the children of Israel, in Mount Sinai, by the hand of Moses.^r After which words, we may possibly imagine, he added the laws contained in the xxviith chapter of Leviticus, and concluded with these words, These are the commandments which the LORD commanded Moses for the children of Israel in Mount Sinai.^s Next to these might be added the laws, which God gave out of the tabernacle of the congregation.^t And in this manner we may imagine that the book of the covenant had consisted of all the laws which God gave the Israelites both from Sinai, and from the tabernacle of the congregation. In the xxixth chapter of Deuteronomy, we are told of a covenant, which the LORD commanded Moses to make with the children of Israel in the land of Moab; besides the covenant which he made with them in Horeb.^u And we find these words at the end of one of his chapters: These are the commandments and the judgments which the LORD commanded, by the hand of Moses, unto the children of Israel, in the plains of Moab, by Jordan near Jericho.^v It will not be doubted but that Moses wrote all the words of this law also in a book.^w Let us suppose that the words above cited were the conclusion of it. Let us suppose farther, that unto all these Moses added, in an-

^p Exodus xxiv, 4—7.

^q Levit. xxvi, 46.

^r Chap. i, 1; Numb. i, 1.

^s Numb. xxxiv, 13.

^t See Exodus xxxiv, 27.

^u Levit. xxvii, 34.

^v Deut. xxix, 1.

^w Deut. xxxi, 24.

other book, the words which he spake unto all Israel on this side Jordan² in the wilderness; and all these, together with the book of Genesis, make the Pentateuch, or five books, which we call the books of Moses.

It will here be said, that if we look for the books of Moses in the Pentateuch in this manner, we must allow that some paragraphs and even chapters do not follow now exactly in the places where Moses at first put them. But in answer to this, I apprehend, that it will not be thought a very material question, whether any of the leaves, sheets, rolls, or skins, which were written by Moses have, or have not, by some accident, been decomposed, and are not perhaps put together again, every one in its proper place; but the point is, whether in the present Pentateuch we have all, and nothing but all, that Moses wrote in the books which were penned by him. And of this a serious examinant may sufficiently satisfy himself. If we must suppose, that Moses wrote his books under such titles as I have mentioned, yet under these the whole of all the books of Moses may be collected, and perhaps some passages and sections, which now seem to be misplaced, may be hereby put into an order, that may add clearness and connection, which they may be suspected to want in their present situation. And if we collect and examine the several little notes, remarks, and observations, which, though now found in several places of the Pentateuch,³ were undoubtedly not written by Moses, but added by some later hand; a judicious examiner will see of these, 1. That they are not so many as they are hastily thought to be. 2. That they are all inconsiderable; none of them so necessary in the places where they are found, ² Deut. i, 1. I might here answer a trifling cavil suggested concerning the Book of Deuteronomy, raised from the words here cited. It is pretended that beneber ha Jarden, which we translate on this side Jordan, do rather signify beyond, or on the other side Jordan, and consequently, that these words imply that Moses had not written the Book of Deuteronomy, for that the book so called was written by a person who had passed over Jordan, and could, according to the intimation of these words, remark, that the words of Moses were spoken on a different side the river from the place where the book was written. But were there no other, the tenth and thirteenth verses of the fiftieth chapter of Genesis are sufficient to show that the word beneber had the signification in which we here take it. When Joseph went up out of Egypt to bury his father, they journeyed from Goshen into Canaan, and came to the cave of Machpelah before Mamre, in their way to which they stopped at the threshing floor of Atad, beneber ha Jarden, not beyond, but on this side Jordan, for they did not travel into Canaan, so far as to the river Jordan.

³ Vid. Clerici Dissertat. de Scriptore Pentateuch.

but that, if they were omitted, the text would be full, clear, and connected without them. In this manner we may make the utmost allowance to the several objections offered against the books of Moses; and have a clear conviction, that there is no weight in any of them. That the Pentateuch contains the books of Moses, has been constantly believed and testified by the Jews in all ages. Spinoza himself confesses, that Aben Ezra only, a very modern writer, pretended to have doubts of it, and that his intimations are but dark and obscure. Josephus tells us, as a truth never questioned, that five of their sacred books were the books of Moses;^b and our Saviour explains to us in what sense they were Moses's books, being, as he tells us, Moses's writings. Had ye believed Moses, said he, ye would have believed me, for he wrote of me; but if ye believe not his writings how shall ye believe my words?^c If it were possible to show, that the books we now read for Moses's were not the books alluded to by our Saviour, something might be offered upon this subject. But whoever will attempt this, will find himself not able to propose any thing, which can require refutation.

When Moses had made an end of writing what he was to leave the Israelites, he commanded the Levites, saying, Take this book of the law, and put it in the side of the ark^d of the covenant of the LORD your GOD, that it may be there for a witness against thee.^e It is here queried, what the book was which Moses here gave the Levites, whether all his written works in one code or volume, or whether it was the words of this law;^f some one single book, which he had just then finished, a part only of his writings. Spinoza is for this latter opinion, this best suiting his purpose, to insinuate that the Levites had charge only of a small part of what Moses wrote; and consequently, that all, except what was committed to their keeping, was soon lost.^g 1. But I think, that the words dibreî hattorah hazzaoth, do not perhaps signify the words of this law,^h limited to a single book or part of Moses's writings. The particle וְאֵת

^b Joseph. contra Apion. lib. i, c. 8.

^d See Prideaux, Connect. b. iii, part i, Account of the Ark.

^e Deut. xxxi, 26.

^g In Tract. Theolog. polit. ubi sup.

^c John v, 46, 47.

^f See ver, 24.

^h Deut. xxxi, 24.

zaoth is, I think, sometimes used as plural,¹ and the expression above is probably of this import; when Moses had made an end of writing the words of the law, even all these [words or things.] The fact might be thus: Moses wrote his book thus far, to this place, and then gave the Levites the charge of them. 2. The words used by Moses to the Levites are general: he delivered to them, not the book of this law, not any particular part of his writings, but this book of the law in general;² the particle this was here used, because Moses had the book then in his hand, which he delivered to them. Seper ha Torah,³ or Seper Torah,⁴ was the name of the whole code or volume of the sacred writings, never once given by Moses to any single part of his works, but imposed here as a general title of the book which contained the whole. The law was that part of the code for an introduction to, illustration, history, or confirmation of which, all the other parts were written, and therefore the whole might well be called the book of the law, the law being the principal and most important part of the code called by this title. As Moses gave the sacred volume, which he left to the Israelites, this general title, so we find it used in all after ages for the title of this book, even when not only the works of Moses, but also the Psalms and the Prophets, were contained in it. Joshua wrote his book in the book of the law,⁵ and yet in Josiah's time the volume found in the temple, which undoubtedly contained all that Joshua had written in it, as well as Moses, was called by its general name, the book of the law only. In our Saviour's time the books of Scripture were of three sorts, as Josephus afterwards reckoned them;⁶ namely, the books of Moses, the Prophets, and the Psalms.⁷ And our Saviour, who thus distinguishes them, when he intended to speak of the particulars which made up the sacred code, yet in general not only calls all the books of Moses the law,⁸ but cites the book of Psalms as part of the law,⁹ as the Jews also did in his age,¹⁰ and St. Paul afterwards cited Isaiah in like manner.¹¹ Moses,

¹ See Judges xiii, 23.

² 2 Kings xxii, 8.

³ Joshua xxiv, 26.

⁴ Luke xxiv, 44.

⁵ John xv, 25.

⁶ 1 Cor. xiv, 21.

⁷ ספר חמשה חומ

⁸ Joshua xxiv, 26; 2 Chron. xxxiv, 14.

⁹ Joseph. contra Apion. lib. i, c. 8.

¹⁰ Luke xxiv, 44.

¹¹ Chap. xii, 34.

at delivering his writings, called the whole tome the book of the law, and this continued to be the general title of the whole volume of the sacred books in all ages, whatever particular books were annexed to or contained in it. As to the book of the wars of the Lord, we have no reason to think that any such book was written by Moses. It is, indeed, cited in a book of Moses,⁶ but so is the book of Jasher in that of Joshua;⁷ and yet the book of Jasher was a composition more modern and of far less authority than the book of Joshua. The reader may see what is offered concerning the citation of the book of Jasher in Joshua,⁷ and will find it reasonable perhaps to account for the citation in Numbers of the book of the wars of the Lord, in like manner. In what is above offered, the reader will see the greatest liberty taken by me in the suppositions I have made concerning the original divisions or titles of the books of Moses, and the dislocations or transpositions which may be conceived now to be in some chapters or paragraphs of them. I was willing to allow, for the sake of argument, the utmost that could with any show of reason be pretended; being sure, that, after all, nothing could be concluded to prove that Moses had not written what we ascribe to him. But I must not leave this topic without observing, that I cannot say, that Moses did actually divide his writings into books in the manner above supposed, or that the chapters, which we may imagine not to be now found in their proper places, were originally otherwise disposed by Moses than we now find them. Of all the books written by Moses, the book of Genesis only could be composed by him in the opportunity of great leisure.⁸ He must have lived in the hurry of a variety of engagements in the management of a most restless people, all the time he was writing his accounts of them; and consequently, what is contained in what we now call the books of Exodus, Leviticus, Numbers, and Deuteronomy, might be at first minuted down, and put together, as works generally are, which are composed and finished in such circumstances. The historical parts were registered, as the occurrences arose which were the matter of them. The laws given were recorded when, and as it pleased

⁶ Numb. xxi, 14.

⁷ See book xii.

⁸ Joshua x, 13.

⁹ See vol. ii, b. ix, p. 223.

GOD to direct Moses to write them; sometimes immediately at their being given, at other times not until occasions arose, which demanded a recollection of them. Some things were repeated, added to, or explained, as circumstances required: and Moses had no time to go over and methodize anew what he had written in this manner, but put the whole together, and gave it to the Levites, still adding a few matters which were to be recorded after his ordering the Levites the charge of his books; namely, what we find from the 24th verse of the xxxist chapter of Deuteronomy to the end of the xxxiiid chapter, as Joshua afterwards added to what was left by Moses, the occurrences of the times that succeeded. In this manner, perhaps, we may fully account for all that can seem in any ~~wise~~ to intimate that we have not now the books of Moses in the order and form in which he left them; and this account of his books seems to me most likely to be the true one, and consequently most reasonable to be admitted.

As to the particulars contained in the ensuing volume, I must submit them to the Reader, and I hope they may be received with that candour which has been shown to my former volumes. What is now published might have been more various and entertaining, had it reached down to an age which could have afforded more matter of profane history to be interspersed in it. But divers of the Scripture occurrences herein treated of, were not to be passed over cursorily; and the entering into these more largely obliged me to conclude this volume something short of the period at which I proposed to myself to end it. I am abundantly sensible of the obligations I am under to many of my superiors, for the reputation they give me by their favour. The truly great find a real pleasure in cherishing any well-intended endeavours of their inferiors. And if my abilities, as an author, were equal to the gratitude and inclination of my mind, I should well deserve the continuance of that good opinion which many persons, who are in stations above my being otherwise known to them, are pleased to conceive of me themselves, and to create of me in others. But I am afraid I should appear guilty of an act of vanity rather than of gratitude, if I were to proceed in intimations of this nature, or to say, how much the Right Honourable Mr. ONSLOW, the Speaker of the House of Commons, has been a patron of my studies in this manner.

My thanks are acknowledged to be due to a learned divine of a foreign University, Mr. WOLLE, of Leipzig, and also to Mr. ARNOLD, professor of the English and French Tongues there, for my reputation in their country. I am sorry that I am not able to read the translation of my books, which one of them has, some years ago, published in the German tongue; and the very learned dissertation prefixed to that translation by the other. Hopes were at one time given me of seeing this dissertation in English, and from the short extract of it in our Republic of Letters,* I cannot but think I should have satisfaction in every part of it, except in that which relates to my own character. I have not those abilities, which this learned divine ascribes to me. I may have been happy in the choice of a subject, which, if I could manage suitably, might afford a work very useful even to the learned world. I can only endeavour to go through it with as much attention as my situation in life will allow me; but am able to perform no part of it without many imperfections. My procedure in it must be by slow steps; being obliged many times to lay aside my studies on account of avocations, which in my circumstances must be attended to; and oftentimes to defer, or entirely to drop subjects, which might be considered, as I can or cannot get a sight of books which would conduct my inquiries. However, if I find my endeavours continue acceptable to the public, I shall, as soon as I can, in one volume more, offer the remaining part of this undertaking.

* Republic of Letters for September, 1731.

SHELTON, NORFOLK,
Oct. 21, 1736.

THE

SACRED AND PROFANE

HISTORY OF THE WORLD CONNECTED.

BOOK X.

MOSES and the Israelites joined in a song of thanksgiving for their deliverance from the Egyptians ;¹ after which they moved from the Red Sea into the wilderness of Shur,² where they wandered three days and could find no water.³ At Marah they found water, but could not drink it because it was bitter ;⁴ *And the people murmured against Moses, saying, What shall we drink? And he cried unto the LORD, and the LORD showed him a tree, which when he had cast into the waters, the waters were made sweet.*⁵ We are informed,⁶ that God at this time gave Moses some particular command, and proved him, or made trial of his obedience ; for this must be the sense of the place. Our English translators have evidently mistaken the words of Moses : they render the passage, There he made for THEM a statute and an ordinance, and there he proved THEM. This translation seems to hint, that some laws were here given to the Israelites, and that they were the persons here proved ; but the commentators are at a loss to ascertain any laws given at this time.⁷ If we attend to the Hebrew text, the affix used by Moses does not signify THEM, but HIM ; and Moses himself was the person here applied to, and not the Israelites, and the statute and ordinance here given was to him, not to them. This agrees with the 26th verse, where the text is justly translated, not, If ye will

¹ Exodus xv.

² Ver. 22.

³ Syncell. Chron. p. 128 ; Philo de Vita Moysis, lib. i ; Joseph. Antiq. lib. iii, c. 1.

⁴ Exodus ~~xv~~, 23.

⁵ Ver. 25.

⁶ Ver. 26.

⁷ See Pool's Synops. in locum.

hearken; but, If THOU wilt diligently hearken, &c. When the Israelites were got over the Red Sea, we do not read that the pillar of the cloud and of fire went before them into the wilderness of Shur. Moses very probably led them thither, without any special direction from God; they travelled here three days without water, and when they found water it was bitter, and they could not drink it. In their distress they murmured, and Moses prayed to God for assistance: God accepted his prayer, and gave him (chok ve Mishpat,) a special order and appointment what to do; namely, to take a bough from a tree to which he was directed, and to put it into the waters, and by this he proved or tried him.⁸ He gave him an opportunity to show his readiness strictly to perform whatever orders should be enjoined him; and hereupon God promised him, that if he would thus punctually observe all his appointments, that then he would continually extricate him out of every difficulty.

We read of no place called Marah in the profane authors; for indeed the Israelites gave the place this name, because the waters they found here were bitter, the word Marah in their language signifying to be bitter; but the best heathen writers agree, that there were lakes of bitter waters in those parts where the Israelites were now travelling. Diodorus informs us, that there were such waters at some little distance from the city Asinoe.⁹ Strabo says the same thing;¹ and Pliny carries on Trajan's river from the Nile to the bitter fountains.² Now these bitter fountains, and the bitter lakes mentioned by Strabo and Diodorus, and the bitter waters which the Israelites found at Marah, may easily be conceived to be the same. The city Arsinoe, agreeably to both Strabo's and³ Diodorus's position of it, was situate near the place of the present Suez; and not far from the neighbourhood of this place reached Trajan's river, which was carried on to the bitter lakes, whither the Israelites may be conceived to have wandered. They went from the Red Sea into the wilderness of Shur, through which they could not pass towards Canaan, for want of water; then they turned about towards Egypt, where they hoped to find plenty, and came to Marah upon the coast of Suez.

⁸ We meet many instances in the Scriptures, of God's appointing persons applying to him for favours, to do some act as a proof of their entire submission and obedience to him. Jacob was ordered to use peeled rods, Gen. xxx. Naaman to wash in the river Jordan, 2 Kings v. And in Exodus xvi, the Israelites were proved in this manner. They were ordered to gather of the manna a certain rate every day, that God might prove them, whether they would walk in his law or not. Thus was Moses here proved, he was ordered to put a bough into the water; a thing in itself insignificant, but his doing it testified his readiness to observe any injunction which God should think fit to give him.

⁹ Diod. Sic. lib. iii, p. 120.

² Plin. Nat. Hist. lib. vi, c. 29.

¹ Strabo, Geog. lib. xvii, p. 804.

³ Didor. & Strabo ubi sup.

Josephus gives a very idle account of the change of the taste of the waters of Marah.³ He supposes that the country they were now in afforded no water naturally; that the Israelites sunk wells, but could not find springs to supply enough for their occasions, and that what they did find was so bitter, that they could not drink it; that they sent out every way to search, but could hear of no water; that there was indeed a well at Marah, which afforded some water, but not a quantity sufficient for them; and that what it supplied them with was so bitter, that even their cattle could not drink it; that upon the Israelites uneasiness with Moses, he prayed to God, and took his rod, and split it down in the middle, and persuaded the people that God had heard his prayers, and would make the water fit for them to drink, if they would do as he should order them. Upon their asking what he would have them do, he directed them to draw out of the well, and pour away the greatest part of the water; the doing this, he says, stirring and dashing about the waters by the buckets they drew with, purged, and by degrees made them potable. But, 1. This account of Josephus differs from what the profane writers, as well as Moses, relate concerning the country where the Israelites now were. Josephus represents it as a place where no water was to be had; but, according to Moses, the people were in extremity at Marah, not for want of water, but of good water. To this Strabo agrees, who supposes water enough in this place, many large lakes and fosses,⁴ though he tells us they were in ancient days bitter, until by a communication⁵ of the river, the late inhabitants of the country found out the way to meliorate their taste. 2. Had the Israelites found a well, as Josephus supposes, if the supply of water it afforded was too scanty for their occasions, what relief would it have been to them to draw off and throw away the greatest part of their defective supply, in order to sweeten a small remainder? Or, 3. How could the dashing water about at the bottom of a well sufficiently purify it from its mineral taste; which most probably was given it from the very earth, against which they must thus dash it? But it is needless to refute at large this fancy of Josephus.

The writer of the Book of Ecclesiasticus hints a different reason for the cure of those bitter waters; who suggests, that the wood, which Moses was directed to use, had naturally a medicinal virtue to correct the taste of the waters at Marah. *Was not, says he, the water made sweet with wood, that the virtue thereof might be known?*⁶ But I cannot think, that the opinion of this writer can be admitted: for, 1. It does

³ Josephus Antiq. lib. iii, c. 1.

⁴ Διηγείας πλάνης και λίμναι σπληνίζουσι αυταις. Strabo, lib. xvii, p. 804.

⁵ Τον ποταμον καταλμασιν λιμνών, αι προταρον μεν ποταμοι παραι, τμηθεις δι τω διωργος μεταβαλλοντο τε κρησι τε ποταμοι. Id. ibid.

⁶ Eccclus. xxxviii, 5.

not seem probable, that Moses here used a whole and large tree; rather he took a little bough, such as he himself put into the water, and immediately the taste of the waters changed. 2. If it could be thought, that Moses employed the people to take down a very large tree, and convey it into the water, can we suppose that even the largest tree, steeped in a lake, should immediately communicate a sufficient quantity of its natural sweetness, to correct the taste of water, enough for the occasions of so many hundred thousands of people? But, 3. We have great reason to think, that there was no tree in these parts of this virtue. Had there been such a one, after the virtue of it was thus known, especially Moses having recorded this his use of it, it would certainly have been much used by others, and as much inquired after by the naturalists. But though Strabo, Diodorus Siculus, and Pliny have all remarked, that there were bitter waters in these parts of the world, yet they knew of no trees of a medicinal quality to correct their taste. Pliny tells us of a method afterwards invented to meliorate the taste of such waters;⁷ but though he has treated largely of the powers and virtues of trees and plants,⁸ and particularly the trees in these parts of the world,⁹ yet he never heard of any of this sort, and therefore undoubtedly there were not any. The author of Ecclesiasticus was a very learned man, and had given himself much to reading the writings of his fathers; and had carefully collected their sentiments, to which he added some observations of his own;¹ and this seems to have been his own. Had it been a received opinion of the Jewish writers, I think Josephus would have had it; or had there really been a tree of this nature, the heathen naturalists would have observed it. But from their entire silence, I imagine that the author of Ecclesiasticus, speculating in the chapter where we find this hint, upon the medicines which God had created out of the earth,² suggested this hint purely from his own fancy, without any authority for it. The Book of Ecclesiasticus is but a modern composition, in comparison of Moses's writings, being first published in Egypt about one hundred and thirty-two years before CHRIST;³ and being published in Egypt was much read by the Jews of Alexandria. Accordingly Philo, who lived there about our Saviour's time, was acquainted with the opinion of this author; but he very justly doubts the truth of it, and queries whether the wood here used had naturally, or whether God was not pleased to give it its virtue for this particular occasion.⁴

From Marah the Israelites removed to a place, where they ⁷ Nitrosæ aut amaræ aquæ polentâ additâ mitigantur, ut intra duas horas bibi possint. Plin. Nat. Hist. lib. xxiv, c. 1.

⁸ Plin. Nat. Hist. lib. xxiv, per tot. lib.

⁹ Ibid. c. 12.

¹ Prologue to Eccclus.

² Eccclus. xxxviii, 4.

³ Prideaux, Connect. part ii, b. i, vol. iii, p. 62.

⁴ Philo de vitâ Mosis, lib. i.

found twelve fountains of water, and threescore and ten palm trees. A place not unlike this is described by Strabo,⁶ which the Israelites called Elim. From hence, after some days rest, they marched first to the Red Sea;⁷ perhaps to the very place where they came over out of Egypt, and from thence they went into the wilderness of Sin, on the fifteenth day of the second month, after their departing out of the land of Egypt,⁸ i. e. exactly a month after their leaving Egypt; for they left Egypt soon after midnight of the fourteenth day of the first month.⁹ The wilderness of Sin was a barren desert, not capable to supply them with provision; which as soon as they felt the want of, they were ready to mutiny, and most passionately wished themselves in Egypt again.¹⁰ But God was here pleased miraculously to relieve them, by great flights of quails, a sort of birds very common upon the coasts of the Arabian, or Red Sea;¹¹ and besides sending these, he rained them bread from Heaven. Every morning, when the dew was off, there lay a small round thing, as small as the hoar frost upon the ground;¹² which was like coriander seed, of a white colour, and the taste of it was like wafers made with honey.¹³ When the Israelites saw it, they knew not what it was, and therefore asked one another מַה הִוא man hua; for they are two Hebrew words, and signify what is this? Man signifies what, and hua this: and not knowing what name to give it, they called it man, or what, i. e. is it, ever after.¹⁴

⁶ δωδεκὰ πηγὰς ὕδατος, τρεῖς καὶ δέκα φοινῶν, οὗ το ἔστιν ἐν τῇ ἡμετέρῃ τῇ, καὶ ἀπὸ τῆς, καὶ ὁνομαζομένη. Strabo. Geog. lib. xvi, p. 776.

⁷ Numb. xxxiii, 10.

⁸ Exod. xii.

⁹ Exod. xvi, 1.

¹⁰ Ibid. xvi, 3.

¹¹ Joseph. Antiq. lib. iii, c. i, sect. 5; Athenæus Deipnos. lib. ix. c. xi.

¹² Exod. xvi, 13, 14.

¹³ The Hebrew writers have had various conceits about the taste of manna; some of them perhaps deduced from some expressions in the Book of Wisdom. That Apocryphal author says of the manna, that it was able to content every man's delight, agreeing to every taste, and that serving to the appetite of the eater, it tempered itself to every man's liking. Wisdom xvi, 20, 21. Lyra; from the Rabbins, represents, that it had the taste of any sort of fish or fowl, according to the wish of him who ate it: but then with St. Augustine he restrains the privilege of finding in the manna the taste of what they most loved, to the righteous only. The authors of Talmud Joma, and Lib. Zohar say, the manna had all sorts of tastes, except the tastes of the plants and sallads which grew in Egypt; but there is no end of pursuing or refuting the fancies of these writers. Moses says of the manna here in Exodus, that its taste was like wafers made with honey. In Numbers xi, 8, he says, the cakes made of it had the taste of fresh oil; so that we may conjecture, that it had a sweetness when gathered, which evaporated in the grinding, beating, and baking. It tasted like honey when taken off the ground, but the cakes made of it, were as cakes of bread, kneaded with oil. The Israelites used it as a sort of bread, they had the quails instead of flesh, Exodus xvi, 12; Numb. xi. The manna is represented to have had no high taste, Numb. xi. 6, and we have not any hint from Moses of its being so variously delightful to the palate, as the author of the Book of Wisdom seems to suggest.

¹⁴ Our English word, manna, Exod. xvi. 15, seems to intimate, that the Israelites put the two words man hua together, as the name of this food; but they used but one of them; for they called it man and not man hua. See Exod. xvi, 15, 31, 35; Numb. xi, 6, 7, 9; Deut. viii, 3, 16; Joshua v, 12; Nehem. ix, 20; Psalm lxxviii, 24, &c.

The Israelites were ordered, every head of a family, to gather as many omers⁵ of this manna every morning as he had persons in his family;⁶ but as they went out to gather without taking measures with them, it so happened, that some gathered more than their quantity, and some less. However, they carried their gatherings home; for they measured what they had gathered with an omer; and he that had gathered more than his quantity gave to him that had less, so that every one had his just quantity made up, and no more. The words of the 18th verse, as our English version renders them, seem to imply, that God was here pleased miraculously to adjust the several quantities which were gathered. We translate the place, The children of Israel gathered some more, some less, and when they did mete it with an omer, he that gathered much had nothing over, and he that gathered little had no lack. These words may seem to hint, that God was pleased miraculously so to order it, that when they came to measure, the store of him that had gathered too much was diminished to the exact number of omers which he was to have; and the defective quantity of him, that had not gathered his due quantity, was miraculously increased to the just measure of what he was to have gathered; so that he that had gathered much had nothing over, and he that had gathered little had no lack, the divine Providence causing the quantity, which every one had gathered, to answer exactly to the appointed measure. Josephus, I think, took this to be the fact.⁷ But, 1, to what purpose could it be for God to command the people to gather an omer for each person; if he designed miraculously so to order it, that let them gather what they would, they should find their gatherings amount to an exact omer, neither more nor less? 2. The words of Moses, if rightly translated, express the fact to have been very different from this representation of it. The word, which we translate had nothing over, should be rendered,⁸ he made to have nothing over; and in like manner the word translated had no lack, should be rendered he caused to have no lack. Now Moses was the person who thus ordered it, and the 17th, 18th, and 19th verses should be word for word thus translated.

Ver. 17. And the children of Israel did so, and gathered some more, some less,

Ver. 18. And they measured with an omer, and Moses⁹

⁵ An omer is the tenth part of an ephah, probably about three pints and a half of our measure.

⁶ Exodus xvi, 16.

⁷ Josephus Antiq. lib. iii, c. i, sect. 6.

⁸ This is the true sense of the Hebrew verbs in the conjugation they are here used in. קָמַר in the conjugation kal, signifies to abound, or to have over, but קָמַר in hiphil is to cause to abound: thus קָמַר in kal signifies, to fall short, or to want, but קָמַר in hiphil is to diminish, or, to cause to want. See Isaiah xxxii, 6.

⁹ In the Hebrew text, Moses, the nominative case to three verbs, is put after the last, a construction very common in the ancient languages.

caused him that had more, not to abound, and him that had less, not to fall short; (for they gathered, each one according to¹ his eating.)

Ver. 19. And said, Let no man leave of it till the morning.

So that the fact here was, that Moses directed them to give to one another; they that had more than their measure, to make up what was wanting to them who had less; that all might have their full quantity, and no more. 3. St. Paul very plainly intimates that this was the fact, by alluding to what the Israelites here did with their manna; in order to induce the Corinthians to contribute a relief to the poorer Christians, such as the Corinthians could at that time well spare out of their abundance. *I mean not, says he, that other men be eased and you burthened: but by an equality, that now at this time your abundance may be a supply for their want, that their abundance also may be a supply for your want, that there may be an equality; as it is written, He that had gathered much had nothing over, and he that had gathered little had no lack.*²

Another order given to the Israelites about the manna was, that they were every day to eat what they had gathered, and to leave none all night for the next day's provision.³ Some of the people were not strictly careful in this point, but left some of their manna until the morning, *which bred worms and stank.*⁴ Every sixth day, they were to gather twice as much as on any other days, because the seventh day was the sabbath; on which day they were to gather no manna, nor do any sort of work.⁵ Accordingly on the seventh day there fell no manna, for there went out some of the people to gather, but they found none;⁶ and what remained of the double quantity, which the people gathered on the sixth day, and reserved for the seventh, did not stink, neither was there any worm therein; though if any part of any other day's gathering was not eaten on the day when it was gathered, it would not keep, nor be fit to be eaten on the day following.⁷ Thus miraculously did God feed the people in the wilderness for about forty years; for they had this supply of manna, until they came unto the borders of the land of Canaan.⁸ Aaron, directed by Moses, in obedience to God's express command, put an omer of manna into a pot; in order to keep it in memory of the wonderful supply of food, which God had thus given them.

¹ The words, they gathered each one according to his eating, are a remark by way of parenthesis, to give a reason for what Moses directed. He caused them that had over much, to give to them that had less than they were to have, because they gathered, as we say, from hand to mouth, and it would have been of no service to have laid up what they had to spare.

² 2 Corinth. viii, 13, 14, 15.

³ Ver. 20.

⁴ Ver. 24.

⁵ Ver. 23.

⁶ Exod. xvi, 35; Joshua v, 12,

⁷ Exod. xvi, 19.

⁸ Exod. xvi, 27.

From the wilderness of Sin, Moses led the Israelites to Rephidim, making two short halts by the way, which are not mentioned here in Exodus; one of them was at Dophkah, the other at Alush.⁹ From their encampment in the wilderness of Sin to Rephidim might be, I imagine, about twenty miles. At Rephidim they were distressed for want of water; and murmured against Moses, for bringing them into extremity. Moses cried unto the Lord, and received directions to smite a rock at mount Horeb with the rod, which he had used in performing the wonders wrought in Egypt; and upon his doing this in the sight of the elders of Israel, God was pleased to cause a river of water miraculously to flow out of the rock, to supply their necessities.¹

The most learned archbishop Usher remarks, that the rock, out of which Moses thus miraculously produced the water, followed the Israelites throughout the wilderness.² Tertulian is said to have been of this opinion;³ and the Jewish rabbins were fond of it. The most learned primate says expressly, that the rock, which Moses smote, followed them; but some other writers soften the prodigy, and assert, that the water from the rock became a river, and was made to flow after the camp, wherever the Israelites journeyed, until they came to Kadesh. The reasons given for this opinion are, 1. It is remarked, that from the time of this flow of waters from the rock at Horeb, until they came to Kadesh, the Israelites are not said to have ever wanted water;⁴ and it is argued, that they must continually have wanted it in their passage through the wilderness, if God had not thus miraculously supplied them. 2. Some passages in the Psalms are thought to imply, that a river from the rock attended them in their journeyings. 3. It is hinted, that a text in Deuteronomy confirms this opinion; and lastly, it is pretended, that St. Paul says expressly, that the rock followed them.

1. "It is said, that the Israelites never wanted water, after this supply from the rock at Horeb, until they came to Kadesh; though the wilderness they travelled through was so dry a place, that they could not have found water in it, without some continual miracle." To this I answer, 1. We are nowhere told in Scripture, that God wrought this particular miracle upon the rock, in order to continue a supply of water for the Israelites, during the whole time of their journeying in the wilderness; and, if a miracle was really necessary, why this rather than some other? The Israelites knew how to dig wells

⁹ I may here hint once for all, that these, and the other names we have of the several places where the Israelites made their encampments in the wilderness, are generally names given by them to the places where they stopt, and that the places were not called by any particular names, except by the Israelites upon account of their encamping at them.

¹ Exod xvii, 5, 6.

² Usher's Annals.

³ Hæc est aqua, quæ de comite petri populo defluebat. Tertullian. de Baptismo.

⁴ Numb. xx.

when they wanted water; and it is probable that they dug many in their passage through the wilderness, as we read they dug one at Beer:⁵ and it is reasonable to suppose that God might frequently give them water,⁶ by causing them, when they dug for it, to find water-springs in a dry ground;⁷ than to suppose that a mountainous rock moved after them in their journeyings, or that any streams from it became a river, and was made to form itself a channel to flow to them in all their movements. 2. But though the wilderness was indeed a dry place, and may in general terms be called a dry and thirsty land, where no water is,⁸ though the Israelites complained of it as such,⁹ and the heathen writers give it this character;¹ yet we must not take their expressions so strictly, as to imagine that no water was to be found in any parts of it. Strabo speaks of fountains of water in the driest deserts;² and from Diodorus we may collect, that in the most unpromising parts of this country there were proper places to sink wells, which would afford abundance of water.³ The Israelites might be reduced to difficulties in many places, but unquestionably in others they found receptacles of water of divers sorts;⁴ so that the true reason why we read of no miraculous supply of water, from the time of their leaving Horeb until they came to Kadesh, may be their not necessarily wanting such a supply in that interval. But,

II. It is represented, that from Psalms, lxxviii, 16—20, cv, 41, it may be justly inferred, that rivers of water flowed from the rock after the Israelites, in their several marches. I answer: The expressions cited from the Psalmist prove only, that the rock smote by Moses poured forth a large quantity of water. God brought streams out of the rock, and caused waters to run down like rivers. He opened the rock, and the waters gushed out; they ran in the dry places like a river. Philo the Jew relates, that, upon Moses striking the rock, the water poured out like a torrent, affording them not only a sufficient quantity for the allaying their present thirst, but to fill their water vessels; in order to carry away water with them, when they marched forwards.⁵ A very considerable supply must be wanted by so large a multitude, and the words of the Psalmist well describe such a supply; but they do in no wise intimate, that rivers from the rock followed

⁵ Numb. xxi, 16.

⁶ See ver. 18.

⁷ Psalm cvii, 35.

⁸ Psalm lxviii, 1.

⁹ Numbers xxi, 5.

¹ Ερημος και ανυδρος εστι. Diodor. Sic. lib. ii, c. 54; vid. Strab. Geog. lib. xvi.

² Διαρροιας γαρ και λιμνης ποταμους εχουσα ολη τις—και σπηλαια υδατα. Strab. Geog. lib. xvi.

³ Κατα γαρ την ανυδρον χωραν λογιματη κατασκευαζοντες υπηλθα φραγμα—χρησται διαβασει αυτους. Diodor. lib. ii. c. 48.

⁴ Πολλαχι συσπιδεσθαι ομνισκει υδατων.

⁵ Παντα ποταμοι, η δε κρηνην αιχμηται, ως μη τότε μονον παρασχειν αλος οφειες, αλλα και προς παντα χρονην τοσούτοις μυριασιν ανδρσινα ποτιν τα γαρ υδρα παντα επληροσαν, ως και προηρον απο των πηγων, ας πικρας μη ποταμους φουα, μεταβαλλοντο δε επωροσυνθη διασπρεσσετο γλυκυιον. Philo de Vit. Mosi, l. i.

them, when they left the place where the supply was given. But,

III. Moses, Deut. ix, 21, mentions a river, or brook, which descended out of the mount, and flowed near the camp, after the Israelites were departed from Rephidim, and were encamped at mount Sinai.⁶ Now if this brook was a river, which flowed from mount Horeb, it could be none other than that which was caused by Moses striking the rock; for before that miracle there was no water; and if it came from hence, it seems evident, that the stream of this water flowed near the camp, after they had left Rephidim, the place where the supply was first given. But a few observations will set this fact in a clear light: and, 1. I think it evident, that no supply of water was given to the Israelites from any rock at Rephidim. The direction to Moses, when he cried unto the Lord, was to take the elders of Israel with him, and to go from Rephidim, the place where the Israelites were encamped, unto Horeb, and there to smite a rock, in order to obtain water;⁷ so that the supply of water was not obtained at Rephidim, where the Israelites were encamped, but at a place some distance from Rephidim, whither not the people but the elders of Israel accompanied Moses, and where what he did was done, not in the sight of the congregation, but in the sight of the elders of Israel.⁸ 2. Horeb and Sinai were near and contiguous to one another, being only different cliffs of one and the same mountain, which appears evident from several passages in the books of Moses. When God delivered the commandments in an audible voice from mount Sinai,⁹ he is said to speak unto them in Horeb.¹ And when the people stood before the Lord their God, under the mountain, and the mountain burned with fire,² which mountain was unquestionably mount Sinai,³ they stood before the Lord in Horeb.⁴ And in the day of their assembly, when they desired not to hear the voice of the Lord any more,⁵ which petition was made when they were assembled at mount Sinai,⁶ they are said to be at Horeb.⁷ From these and many other passages, which might be cited, it appears, either according to St. Jerome, that Horeb and Sinai were but two names for one and the same mount;⁸ or rather they were two mountains so contiguous, that whilst the people lay encamped at the foot of them, they might be said to be at either. Therefore, 3. The water which Moses obtained from the rock at Horeb, might supply the camp all the time the Israelites were at Sinai,

⁶ Exodus xix, 2.

⁹ Ibid.

² Chap. iv, 10, 11.

³ Deut. iv, 10.

⁴ Exodus xx, 19.

⁵ Mihi autem videtur, quod duplici nomine idem mons, nunc Sina, nunc Choreb vocetur. Hieron. de locis Heb.

⁸ Ibid. xx.

⁷ Ibid. xvii, 5, 6.

¹ Deut. i, 19.

² Exodus xix, 18.

³ Chap. xviii, 16.

⁴ Deut. xviii, 16.

⁵ Ibid. xviii, 16.

⁶ Ibid. xviii, 16.

⁷ Ibid. xviii, 16.

⁸ Ibid. xviii, 16.

⁹ Ibid. xviii, 16.

¹⁰ Ibid. xviii, 16.

¹¹ Ibid. xviii, 16.

¹² Ibid. xviii, 16.

¹³ Ibid. xviii, 16.

¹⁴ Ibid. xviii, 16.

¹⁵ Ibid. xviii, 16.

¹⁶ Ibid. xviii, 16.

¹⁷ Ibid. xviii, 16.

¹⁸ Ibid. xviii, 16.

¹⁹ Ibid. xviii, 16.

²⁰ Ibid. xviii, 16.

²¹ Ibid. xviii, 16.

²² Ibid. xviii, 16.

²³ Ibid. xviii, 16.

²⁴ Ibid. xviii, 16.

²⁵ Ibid. xviii, 16.

²⁶ Ibid. xviii, 16.

²⁷ Ibid. xviii, 16.

²⁸ Ibid. xviii, 16.

²⁹ Ibid. xviii, 16.

³⁰ Ibid. xviii, 16.

³¹ Ibid. xviii, 16.

³² Ibid. xviii, 16.

³³ Ibid. xviii, 16.

³⁴ Ibid. xviii, 16.

³⁵ Ibid. xviii, 16.

³⁶ Ibid. xviii, 16.

³⁷ Ibid. xviii, 16.

³⁸ Ibid. xviii, 16.

³⁹ Ibid. xviii, 16.

⁴⁰ Ibid. xviii, 16.

⁴¹ Ibid. xviii, 16.

⁴² Ibid. xviii, 16.

⁴³ Ibid. xviii, 16.

⁴⁴ Ibid. xviii, 16.

⁴⁵ Ibid. xviii, 16.

⁴⁶ Ibid. xviii, 16.

⁴⁷ Ibid. xviii, 16.

⁴⁸ Ibid. xviii, 16.

⁴⁹ Ibid. xviii, 16.

⁵⁰ Ibid. xviii, 16.

⁵¹ Ibid. xviii, 16.

⁵² Ibid. xviii, 16.

⁵³ Ibid. xviii, 16.

⁵⁴ Ibid. xviii, 16.

⁵⁵ Ibid. xviii, 16.

⁵⁶ Ibid. xviii, 16.

⁵⁷ Ibid. xviii, 16.

⁵⁸ Ibid. xviii, 16.

⁵⁹ Ibid. xviii, 16.

⁶⁰ Ibid. xviii, 16.

⁶¹ Ibid. xviii, 16.

⁶² Ibid. xviii, 16.

⁶³ Ibid. xviii, 16.

⁶⁴ Ibid. xviii, 16.

⁶⁵ Ibid. xviii, 16.

⁶⁶ Ibid. xviii, 16.

⁶⁷ Ibid. xviii, 16.

⁶⁸ Ibid. xviii, 16.

⁶⁹ Ibid. xviii, 16.

⁷⁰ Ibid. xviii, 16.

⁷¹ Ibid. xviii, 16.

⁷² Ibid. xviii, 16.

⁷³ Ibid. xviii, 16.

⁷⁴ Ibid. xviii, 16.

⁷⁵ Ibid. xviii, 16.

⁷⁶ Ibid. xviii, 16.

⁷⁷ Ibid. xviii, 16.

⁷⁸ Ibid. xviii, 16.

⁷⁹ Ibid. xviii, 16.

⁸⁰ Ibid. xviii, 16.

⁸¹ Ibid. xviii, 16.

⁸² Ibid. xviii, 16.

⁸³ Ibid. xviii, 16.

⁸⁴ Ibid. xviii, 16.

⁸⁵ Ibid. xviii, 16.

⁸⁶ Ibid. xviii, 16.

⁸⁷ Ibid. xviii, 16.

⁸⁸ Ibid. xviii, 16.

⁸⁹ Ibid. xviii, 16.

⁹⁰ Ibid. xviii, 16.

⁹¹ Ibid. xviii, 16.

⁹² Ibid. xviii, 16.

⁹³ Ibid. xviii, 16.

⁹⁴ Ibid. xviii, 16.

⁹⁵ Ibid. xviii, 16.

⁹⁶ Ibid. xviii, 16.

⁹⁷ Ibid. xviii, 16.

⁹⁸ Ibid. xviii, 16.

⁹⁹ Ibid. xviii, 16.

¹⁰⁰ Ibid. xviii, 16.

¹⁰¹ Ibid. xviii, 16.

¹⁰² Ibid. xviii, 16.

¹⁰³ Ibid. xviii, 16.

¹⁰⁴ Ibid. xviii, 16.

¹⁰⁵ Ibid. xviii, 16.

¹⁰⁶ Ibid. xviii, 16.

¹⁰⁷ Ibid. xviii, 16.

¹⁰⁸ Ibid. xviii, 16.

¹⁰⁹ Ibid. xviii, 16.

¹¹⁰ Ibid. xviii, 16.

¹¹¹ Ibid. xviii, 16.

¹¹² Ibid. xviii, 16.

¹¹³ Ibid. xviii, 16.

¹¹⁴ Ibid. xviii, 16.

¹¹⁵ Ibid. xviii, 16.

¹¹⁶ Ibid. xviii, 16.

¹¹⁷ Ibid. xviii, 16.

¹¹⁸ Ibid. xviii, 16.

¹¹⁹ Ibid. xviii, 16.

¹²⁰ Ibid. xviii, 16.

¹²¹ Ibid. xviii, 16.

¹²² Ibid. xviii, 16.

¹²³ Ibid. xviii, 16.

¹²⁴ Ibid. xviii, 16.

¹²⁵ Ibid. xviii, 16.

¹²⁶ Ibid. xviii, 16.

¹²⁷ Ibid. xviii, 16.

¹²⁸ Ibid. xviii, 16.

¹²⁹ Ibid. xviii, 16.

¹³⁰ Ibid. xviii, 16.

¹³¹ Ibid. xviii, 16.

¹³² Ibid. xviii, 16.

¹³³ Ibid. xviii, 16.

¹³⁴ Ibid. xviii, 16.

¹³⁵ Ibid. xviii, 16.

¹³⁶ Ibid. xviii, 16.

¹³⁷ Ibid. xviii, 16.

¹³⁸ Ibid. xviii, 16.

¹³⁹ Ibid. xviii, 16.

¹⁴⁰ Ibid. xviii, 16.

¹⁴¹ Ibid. xviii, 16.

¹⁴² Ibid. xviii, 16.

¹⁴³ Ibid. xviii, 16.

¹⁴⁴ Ibid. xviii, 16.

¹⁴⁵ Ibid. xviii, 16.

¹⁴⁶ Ibid. xviii, 16.

¹⁴⁷ Ibid. xviii, 16.

¹⁴⁸ Ibid. xviii, 16.

¹⁴⁹ Ibid. xviii, 16.

¹⁵⁰ Ibid. xviii, 16.

¹⁵¹ Ibid. xviii, 16.

¹⁵² Ibid. xviii, 16.

¹⁵³ Ibid. xviii, 16.

¹⁵⁴ Ibid. xviii, 16.

¹⁵⁵ Ibid. xviii, 16.

¹⁵⁶ Ibid. xviii, 16.

¹⁵⁷ Ibid. xviii, 16.

¹⁵⁸ Ibid. xviii, 16.

¹⁵⁹ Ibid. xviii, 16.

¹⁶⁰ Ibid. xviii, 16.

¹⁶¹ Ibid. xviii, 16.

¹⁶² Ibid. xviii, 16.

¹⁶³ Ibid. xviii, 16.

¹⁶⁴ Ibid. xviii, 16.

¹⁶⁵ Ibid. xviii, 16.

¹⁶⁶ Ibid. xviii, 16.

¹⁶⁷ Ibid. xviii, 16.

¹⁶⁸ Ibid. xviii, 16.

¹⁶⁹ Ibid. xviii, 16.

¹⁷⁰ Ibid. xviii, 16.

¹⁷¹ Ibid. xviii, 16.

¹⁷² Ibid. xviii, 16.

¹⁷³ Ibid. xviii, 16.

¹⁷⁴ Ibid. xviii, 16.

¹⁷⁵ Ibid. xviii, 16.

¹⁷⁶ Ibid. xviii, 16.

¹⁷⁷ Ibid. xviii, 16.

¹⁷⁸ Ibid. xviii, 16.

¹⁷⁹ Ibid. xviii, 16.

¹⁸⁰ Ibid. xviii, 16.

¹⁸¹ Ibid. xviii, 16.

¹⁸² Ibid. xviii, 16.

¹⁸³ Ibid. xviii, 16.

¹⁸⁴ Ibid. xviii, 16.

¹⁸⁵ Ibid. xviii, 16.

¹⁸⁶ Ibid. xviii, 16.

¹⁸⁷ Ibid. xviii, 16.

¹⁸⁸ Ibid. xviii, 16.

¹⁸⁹ Ibid. xviii, 16.

¹⁹⁰ Ibid. xviii, 16.

¹⁹¹ Ibid. xviii, 16.

¹⁹² Ibid. xviii, 16.

¹⁹³ Ibid. xviii, 16.

¹⁹⁴ Ibid. xviii, 16.

¹⁹⁵ Ibid. xviii, 16.

¹⁹⁶ Ibid. xviii, 16.

¹⁹⁷ Ibid. xviii, 16.

¹⁹⁸ Ibid. xviii, 16.

¹⁹⁹ Ibid. xviii, 16.

²⁰⁰ Ibid. xviii, 16.

²⁰¹ Ibid. xviii, 16.

²⁰² Ibid. xviii, 16.

²⁰³ Ibid. xviii, 16.

²⁰⁴ Ibid. xviii, 16.

<

without the rock's moving from its place; for they were encamped very near the rock from whence this supply of water was given, all the time they were at Sinai. 4. We need not suppose, that the water, which God was pleased to give at Horeb, ceased to flow, as soon as the Israelites were relieved by it. It is more reasonable to imagine, that God directed Moses to strike a place where there was naturally a spring, though, until the rock was opened, the water was bound down to subterraneous passages; but after it had taken vent, it might become a fountain, and continue to flow, not only whilst the Israelites continued in these parts, but to future ages. It might cause the brook, which descended out of the mount, and supplied them with water all the time they lay encamped here, and the brook caused by it may, perhaps, run to this day.⁹ But, though this may be true, yet it will not hence follow, that the streams of this brook flowed after the camp, when they departed from Horeb, and took their journeys out of the wilderness of Sinai into the wilderness of Paran.

But, IV. The chief argument, for supposing that the rock followed the Israelites in their journeys through the wilderness, is taken from the words of St. Paul, 1 Cor. x, 4, who says, Our fathers did all drink the same spiritual drink (for they drank of that spiritual Rock, which followed them, and that Rock was CHRIST.) But I think it is very evident, that the apostle here speaks not of the rock of Horeb, but of CHRIST, who, though invisible, was the spiritual support of the Israelites in the wilderness. In ver. 3, he alludes to the manna which was given them; but then treats of the spiritual meat which sustained them, designing to turn the thoughts of the Corinthians from the manna to God, who gave the manna and made it a sufficient nourishment to his people: *Man liveth not by bread alone.*¹ The manna of itself had been but a very slender provision; but, by the direction of God, the morning dew would have been an abundant supply; or he could, if he had pleased, as well have sustained them the whole forty years without any food at all, as he did Moses in the mount forty days and forty nights, without eating bread or drinking water. We must not therefore look at the manna, as if that were sufficient to² nourish the people; but consider the power of God, who was their spiritual meat, and invisibly supported them. In the same manner we must consider the supply they had of drink. The rock at Horeb, struck by the rod of Moses, sent forth waters; but the benefit was not owing to the rock, but to CHRIST, who was the spiritual and invisible rock of his people; who by his power gave them this supply, and whose presence was with them, not only at this time, but in all their journeyings. The meaning of St. Paul is very plain and easy; and we evidently play with the letter, instead of attending to the design of his words, if we infer from them, that the rock at Horeb, or any water from it, followed the Israelites through the wilderness. Upon the whole, if we had any authority from Scripture to say, that the rock at Horeb followed the camp, or that the waters from Horeb flowed after the Israelites, we should have no reason to question the fact. The power of God could have caused either; but neither Moses nor any other sacred writer says any thing like it, nor was any such fact known to either Philo or Josephus; so that I think it a mere fiction³ of the Rabbins, and that it ought to be rejected. A due application will enable every sober querist to vindicate the miracles recorded in Scripture; but it is an idle labour, and will prove of disservice to religion, to add miracles of our own making to those which the Scriptures set before us.

⁹ We find from the accounts of modern travellers, that there runs now a brook from mount Horeb, which supplies water to the monastery called St. Saviour's, being a Greek convent situate at the foot of the mountain. Chorebus, says Belonius, lib. ii, c. 63, commodissimo fonte instructus est; and in c. 62, speaking of the convent, he says, Monasterium aquâ abundat: rivas enim ex monte defluens monachorum cisternam replet aquâ limpida, frigida, dulci, denique optima, &c.

¹ Matt. iv, 4; Deut. viii, 3.

² Deut. viii, 3; xxix, 6.

Whilst the Israelites were at Rephidim, the Amalekites, near whose country they then encamped,⁴ attacked them;⁵ whereupon Moses ordered Joshua to choose out a number of the ablest men to sustain the assault, and he himself went up the hill with his rod in his hand, and Aaron and Hur with him.⁶ The battle had many turns: whilst Moses held up his hands the Israelites had the better; but whenever he let his hand fall, the Amalekites prevailed.⁷ Upon observing this event, Aaron and Hur, Moses being quite tired, caused him to sit down upon a stone, and supported his hands all the remainder of the day until the evening; and upon this Joshua obtained a complete victory over the Amalekites.⁸ Then the Lord ordered Moses to leave it upon record, and to remind Joshua that it was his design utterly to extirpate the Amalekites;⁹ which purpose of God was revealed to Balaam;¹ and Moses, according to the directions given him to write it in a book,² took care to record it in his book of Deuteronomy, in ³ The Rabbins were fruitful inventors of this sort of miracles. Jonathan B. Uziel says of the well, which the Israelites dug at Beer, that Abraham and Isaac and Jacob first dug it; but that Moses and Aaron drew it after them into the wilderness by the rod, and that it followed them up high hills, and down into low vallies, and went round about the camp of the Israelites, and gave every one drink at his tent-door, and that it followed them until they came to the borders of the land of Moab, but that they lost it upon the top of a hill over against Beth-Jeshimon. See Targum Jonathan on Numbers xxxi.

⁴ The country of the Amalekites lay next to Sier. Gen. xiv, 7.

⁵ See Deut. xxv, 18.

⁷ Ver. 11.

⁸ Ver. 14.

² Exod. xvii, 14.

⁶ Exod. xvii, 9, 10.

⁸ Ver. 11, 12, 13.

¹ Numb. xxiv, 20.

the most express terms.³ And because God had vouchsafed the Israelites this victory upon the holding up his hands, he, in order to give God the glory, and not to take the honour to himself, built an altar in memory of it, and called it Jehovah Nissi, or the Lord is he who exalteth me;⁴ and he declared to the Israelites, that for this base attempt against them, the Lord would war against the Amalekites from generation to generation.⁵

This certainly must be the meaning of the 16th verse of the xviith chapter of Exodus: the Hebrew words are difficult to be translated, and I think none of the versions express clearly the sense of them. We render the place, For he said, Because, the LORD hath sworn, that the LORD will have war with Amalek, &c. The vulgar Latin translation runs thus, Quia manus solii Domini, et bellum Domini, erit contra Amalek: i. e. *Because the hand of the throne of the LORD, and the war of the LORD will be against Amalek.*⁶ This version rather shows that the translators were at a loss how to render the place intelligibly, than expresses the true meaning of it. The LXX say, οτι εν χειρι πυφαια πολημη ο Θεος επι Αμαληκ: i. e. That the LORD fights [with a hidden hand] i. e. secretly against Amalek. The sense here is clear and plain; but there are no words in the Hebrew text to answer to *εν χειρι πυφαια, with a hidden hand.*⁷ The Hebrew words are, Ciyad nul Ces Jah Milcamah Lahovah ba Namalek; which verbally translated are, *Because the hand upon the throne of the LORD, war to the LORD against Amalek.*⁸ The place has evidently the following difficulties. 1. There must be some words understood to fill up the sentence. The hand upon the throne of the LORD war against Amalek, must be supposed to be the same as, the hand of the LORD is upon his throne, that there shall be war against Amalek. The sentence must be thus transposed and filled up to make it bear any sense. 2. In order to its bearing the sense, which our

³ Deut. xxv, 17, 18, 19.

⁴ Exod. xvü, 15.

^b Ver. 16; Deut. xxv, 17, 18, 19.

⁶ Ecce manus super sedem, bellum Domini cum Amalek, &c. Vers. Syriac. Nunc est mihi quod jurem per solium, quod erit Deo bellum in Amalekitas. Vers. Arabic. Cum juramento dictum est hoc á facie terribilis, cujus Majestas est super solium gloriæ, fore, ut committatur prælium a facie Domini contra viros domus Amalech. Targum Onkelos.

⁷ It has been suggested to me by a very learned friend, that the two words π α , which in the present Hebrew text stand next to one another, might perhaps be taken by the LXX to have been originally but one word, $\pi\alpha\alpha$, and they might derive such a word from $\pi\alpha\alpha$ caash, to cover, and imagine that $\pi\alpha\alpha$ $\beta\gamma$ might be rendered in secret, or covertly: but if this may be a just correction and translation of the text, the LXX should have rendered the verse to this purpose, rather than as they have translated it. Because his (i. e. Amalek's) hand has been covertly against you, the LORD will have war with Amalek, &c.

* The Hebrew words are,

כי יר על כס יה, מלחמה ליהוה בעמלק
 Amalek contra Jehovah bellum Domini thronum supra manus quia.

English version puts upon it, The hand of the Lord is upon his throne, must be supposed to signify, God has sworn, his laying his hand upon his throne must import his taking an oath. But, 3. In all the Old Testament, though the expression of God's having sworn occurs almost thirty times, yet it is not, I think, once expressed in words like what we here meet with, but always by the verb (שָׁבַע) shaban. The Lord hath sworn is (נִשְׁבַּע יְהוָה) Nishban Jehovah.⁹ The annotators are at a loss to ascertain the sense of the place; and certainly the Hebrew words, as our present copies run, are very hard to be reconciled to any sense whatsoever, unless we admit a very unusual expression for God hath sworn, which is not to be met with in any other place of Scripture. As to the LXX, they might perhaps think the place corrupted by transcribers; and by putting in οὐκ ἐστιν ὁ θεὸς ὁ ὠμοῦσθε, instead of rendering the Hebrew words, they rather guessed what might make the passage good sense, than had authority for their translation. If I may be indulged the liberty, I could suggest what would give the place a clear meaning, without varying much from the present Hebrew text. The reason given in Deuteronomy why Amalek should be utterly destroyed is, because he here attacked the Israelites. The words of Moses are, *Remember what Amalek did unto thee by the way—how he met thee, and smote the hindmost of thee, &c. Therefore it shall be, when the Lord thy God hath given thee rest—that thou shalt blot out the remembrance of Amalek from under Heaven: thou shalt not forget it.*¹ This was the reason why God determined to have war with Amalek; because he here basely assaulted the Israelites. Now let us suppose the true reading of the passage before us should be thus: Ci Jad nal Cem, jehi Milchemah Lahovah be Namalek,² which translated word for word is, Because his hand hath been against you, the Lord will have war with Amalek, &c. The emendation of the text is very little: כֹּס might be easily written כַּס, the letters are so similar that the difference is scarcely perceptible; יהי might be written for יחי; for the final י might easily be omitted by no very careless transcriber. And this very small emendation will restore the text to admit an easy ⁹ Gen. xxii, 16; Judges ii, 16; 1 Sam. iii, 14; 2 Sam. ii, 9; Psalm cx, 4; Isaiah xiv, 24, lxii, 3; Amos iv, 2, &c.

¹ Deut. xxv, 17, 18, 19.

² כֹּס יְהוָה מִלְחָמָה לִיְהוָה בְּנָמָלֶךְ
Amalek contra Jehovah bellum erit vos contra manus quia
i. e. ejus

כֹּס is vobis, Exodus xvi, 23. In like manner קַל signifying contra, כֹּסֶךְ may be contra vos, or perhaps it was written כֹּסֶךְ-לִי more agreeably to the Hebrew regimen. It may perhaps be here remarked, that Milchemah is a noun feminine, that I put the verb Jehi in the masculine termination, contrary to true syntax. But to this I think I may answer, that the Hebrew language is not always critically exact in this particular. Vid. Capell. Crit. Sac. lib. iii, c. 16; & lib. vi, c. 8.

and clear meaning, and supposes Moses to hint here the very thing which he expressed afterwards more copiously, when he came to write what he was directed to transmit to posterity upon this occasion.³

Soon after this victory over the Amalekites, Jethro the priest of Midian, Moses's father-in-law, came with Zipporah his daughter, the wife of Moses, and her two children, Gershom and Eliezer, into the wilderness to the camp at mount Horeb.⁴ Moses received him with the utmost respect, and told him all the wonderful works which had been wrought for their deliverance.⁵ Jethro full of joy gave praise to God for his favours to them;⁶ and offered a sacrifice of thanksgiving, and invited Aaron and the elders of Israel to it.⁷ The day after, seeing Moses engaged all day long in determining little controversies, he observed to him, that he was fallen into a way, which would be full of fatigue to himself, and not give a due dispatch to the public business. Therefore he advised him to range the people in classes of thousands, hundreds, fifties, and tens, and to appoint proper officers over the several classes, and reserve only matters of appeal and of the highest moment to his own decision.⁸ Moses approved of this advice of Jethro, and according to it appointed such officers as he had directed, to hear and decide the lesser controversies, and to dispense justice under him unto the people.⁹

A noble author makes the following reflection upon Jethro's advice here given to Moses. He says, that "the great founder of the Hebrew state had not perfected his model, until he consulted the foreign priest, his father-in-law, to whose advice he paid such remarkable deference."¹ The reflection insinuates, that a part of the Jewish polity was a contrivance of Jethro, and therefore that the whole cannot be pretended to be a divine institution. In answer hereto, I would observe, 1. That the advice which Jethro gave Moses, and what Moses did upon it, was not to perfect his model, as this noble writer is pleased to call it; for the advice was given and first executed, before there were any steps at all taken towards forming the Jewish polity; before God had given Moses any laws

³ Deut. xxv, 17, 18, 19.

⁴ Exodus xviii. I find some writers imagine, that Jethro's coming to Moses was not thus early. F. Simon says, that Jethro seems not to have come till the second year after the finishing of the tabernacle, as may be proved out of Deuteronomy. The learned father has not cited any passage in Deuteronomy to support his opinion; and I cannot find any, which appears to me to favour it. Aaron and the elders of Israel coming to Jethro's sacrifice, hints to me, that the law was not yet given, nor Aaron consecrated to the priesthood; for if it had been given, Jethro might perhaps have been admitted to Aaron's sacrifice; but Aaron and the Israelites would not, I think, have partook of Jethro's; and therefore Jethro's coming to Moses must have been just after the victory over the Amalekites, as soon as they came to Sinai; and to this time, I think, the account of Moses, Exodus xviii, 5, does well fix it.

⁶ Exod. xviii, 8.

⁶ Ver. 9.

⁷ Ver. 12.

⁸ Ver. 13—24.

⁹ Ver. 25.

¹ Lord Shaftesbury's Charact. vol. iii, p. 58.

at all for the constitution of the Jewish state. But, 2. What Jethro here advised Moses to, though Moses followed the advice at the time it was given, nay and afterwards made use of it again, when circumstances required; was yet never made an essential part of the Jewish constitution. If we look for the institutions, which Moses has delivered down to us as dictated by God, for the government of the people, we shall find these only: Moses was at first their sole leader and governor, and Jethro found him acting without assistants in this capacity.² When Moses was called up into mount Sinai, Aaron and Hur were to supply his place.³ After this Aaron and his sons were appointed to the priests' office;⁴ some time after, twelve persons were named, one out of every tribe, to be princes of the tribes of their fathers, heads of thousands in Israel, and assistants to Moses and Aaron in the government of the people.⁵ The Levites were selected to be over the tabernacle, and to minister unto it,⁶ and upon Moses's complaint, that his burden was too great, and that he wanted more assistants, God appointed seventy elders, and put his spirit upon them, that they might bear the burden of the people with Moses, and that he might not bear it himself alone.⁷ These all were indeed appointed to their respective offices by divine institution, and these were all the officers who were really so appointed. As to the rulers of thousands, of hundreds, of fifties, and of tens, when Jethro advised Moses to appoint them; he indeed intimated to him to consult, if God would command him to institute⁸ them: but we are not told that Moses did so; but that he *hearkened to the voice of his father-in-law, and did all that he had said, and chose able men, and made them rulers of thousands, rulers of hundreds, rulers of fifties, and rulers of tens.*⁹ So that the text evidently suggests, that Moses first instituted these officers, not by divine command, but by Jethro's direction. In like manner, when Moses afterwards revived these officers (for upon God's giving the law, and appointing priests and Levites, heads of tribes, and princes of the congregation, the people must have been new modelled; and whatever appointments Moses had before made prudentially, must of course have gone out of use, and been abolished by the newer institutions;) I say, when Moses found it expedient to revive the offices of the rulers of thousands, of hundreds, of fifties, and of tens, he in nowise hints that he had any direction from God for so doing; but entirely represents it as a scheme agreed upon by himself and the people. Moses found the people so multiplied, as to be too many¹ to be well managed in the hands of those ² Exod. xviii, 14.

⁴ Chap. xxviii.

⁶ Ver. 50; see chap. iii.

⁸ Exod. xviii, 23.

¹ Deut. i, 9, 10.

³ Chap. xxiv, 14.

⁵ Numbers i, 4—16.

⁷ Numbers xi, 16, 17.

⁹ Ver. 24, 25.

he had to assist him; this he represented to the people, and recommended to them to choose proper persons for him to make rulers over them.² The people approved of what he had recommended;³ and accordingly, with their consent, he appointed these officers.⁴ Moses spake unto the people, saying, I am not able to bear you myself alone: The LORD your God hath multiplied you—How can I bear your cumbrance, and your burthen, and your strife? Take ye wise and understanding men, and known among your tribes, and I will make them rulers over you. And ye answered me, and said, The thing which thou hast spoken is good for us to do. So I took the chief of your tribes, wise men and known, and made them heads over you, captains over thousands, and captains over hundreds, and captains over fifties, and captains over tens, and officers among your tribes. And I charged your judges at that time, saying, Hear the causes between your brethren, and judge righteously, &c. Moses has pretty well fixed for us the time of his thus reinstituting these officers. It was upon the removal of the camp from Sinai to go into the wilderness of Paran.⁵ The LORD spake unto him, saying,⁶ Ye have dwelt long enough in this mount: turn you, and take your journey, and go to the mount of the Amorites, and unto all the places nigh thereunto: and at that time Moses⁷ spake unto the people, about appointing these officers. A few days after this, the seventy elders were appointed, for they were appointed at Taberah, or Kibroth Hattaavah;⁸ and the camp had marched three days successively, before they came hither.⁹ Moses found that the appointment of the officers agreed upon by the people did not fully answer their occasions, and that he wanted not only officers under himself to execute his orders, and determine smaller matters, but assistants of more influence, who might with himself direct in matters of greater moment. But for these he does not apply to the congregation, as he did for the others, but immediately to God; and these were not instituted upon the people's approving the thing he had spoken to be good for them to do,¹ but here God expressly ordered him to gather to him seventy men of the elders of Israel, and told him, that he would come down and talk with him, and give them of his spirit to make² them sufficient for the employment to which they were to be appointed. Thus we may see a very remarkable difference in the institution of the officers upon which our noble author has remarked, if compared with those who were appointed by divine direction. I might go farther, and observe, that the several officers, whom God had appointed, continued to have their name, title, and authority through all the changes of the Jewish state. The priests, the Levites, the heads of tribes, the seventy elders had, all of them, their stated and respective offices and employments; not only under Moses, but under Joshua, in the time of the judges, under the kings, in all times, and under all revolutions. But as to the captains of thousands, hundreds, of fifties, and of tens, as their institution was not of divine authority, so their office was not thus fixed nor lasting. Moses did not bind his successors to the use of them. God had not prescribed them to him, neither did he prescribe them to them; for he only gave the Israelites a general rule, to make themselves judges and officers in all their gates throughout their tribes, to judge the people with just judgment.³ Accordingly, though indeed we find officers of these names in every age, yet we shall not find that the Israelites kept them up in the manner, and to the purpose, for which Moses appointed them; but rather that they varied both their number, and their office, as the circumstances of the state required, or the persons who had the appointing these officers thought fit to employ them. Here therefore is the failure of our noble author's reflection; who designed to prove, that some part of the Jewish polity was a contrivance of Jethro, and consequently a mere human institution; but his instance is a point, which was indeed a human institution, but not an essential and established part of the Jewish polity. There are indeed some learned writers, who have thought these officers of divine appointment;⁴ but whoever will carefully examine, will find no good foundation for their opinion; and may thereby effectually silence a cavil, which our modern deists, from the hint I have considered, think to raise against the Jewish polity. Jethro made but a short stay with Moses; for before they departed from Rephidim, *he went his way into his own land.*⁵

² Ver. 12, 13.³ Ver. 14.⁴ Ibid.⁵ Compare Deut. i, 6, 7, with Numbers x, 11, 12, &c.⁶ Deut. i, 6, 7.⁷ Deut. i, 9.⁸ Numb. xi.⁹ Chap. x, 33.¹ Deut. i, 14.² Numb. xi, 16, 17.

The Israelites, on the fifteenth day of the third month after their leaving Egypt, marched from Rephidim into the wilderness of Sinai, and pitched their camp at the foot of mount Sinai;⁶

³ Deut. xvi. 18.

⁴ Vid. Sigon. de Rep. Heb. lib. vii, c. 7.

⁵ Exod. xviii. 27.

⁶ Exod. xix, 1, 2. The words of Moses seem to me to intimate, that the Israelites came to Sinai on the 15th day of this month. They came here, Moses says, in the third month of their exit from Egypt (חֹדֶשׁ הָשְׁלִישִׁי) bejom hazzeh, on the very day, i. e. of their exit, or on the 15th; for on that day of the first month they came out of Egypt. The most learned Archbishop Usher indeed took the words otherwise. He supposes that bejom hazzeh refers to the month, and intimates that the Israelites came to Sinai on the day of the month the same in number with the month, or on the third day of the third month: see his Annals. Other writers imagine that the words bejom hazzeh signify no more, than that they came to Sinai on the very day they left Rephidim, and that the intimation here intended is, that from Rephidim to Sinai was the journey of but one day. Vid. Pool's Synop. in loc. There are some, who would render the yerse to this purpose, On the third new moon after the exit, on the very day, i. e. of the moon, &c. so as to fix the coming to Sinai to be on the first day of this third month. But to this it is obvious to answer; the word חֹדֶשׁ must be here translated month, and not new moon; for, 1. The Israelites coming out where they stayed almost a year.⁷ In the first three days was transacted what is recorded in the xix, xx, xxi, xxii, xxiii chapters of Exodus.⁸ And Moses probably spent some days in writing down the laws and judgments which God had given them;⁹ after which he built an altar, offered sacrifices, and read what he had written in the book,¹ and the people entered into the most solemn engagement to perform what was written in it.² After this, Moses and Aaron, Nadab and Abihu, and seventy of the elders of Israel went up some part of the mountain,³ and they saw the God of Israel,⁴ and worshipped him.⁵ And Moses, upon God's commanding it, having given Aaron and Hur the charge of the people, went with Joshua up to the top of the mount, and was on the mount, forty days and forty nights,⁶ during which time he received the directions and commands contained in Exodus xxv, and in the following chapters to the end of the xxxist.

It may be here asked, how and in what sense did Moses, Aaron, Nadab and Abihu, and the elders, see the God of Israel? *No man hath seen God at any time.*⁷ It seems hard to imagine, how the infinite God can be clothed in shape, and bounded within the limits of a form or figure, so as to become the object of sight to a mortal eye. The wise heathens apprehended insuperable difficulties in any such supposition;⁸ and it must be confessed, that some of the versions of the Bible do not render the passage literally. The LXX translate it, *They saw the place where there stood the God of Israel;*⁹ and Onkelos, *They saw the glory of the God of Israel.*¹ And the commentators, from what Moses in another place remarks to the Israelites, that they had seen no manner of similitude, generally conclude, that he did not intend here to intimate, that he or the nobles of Israel did really and visibly see God. But I would beg leave to offer to the reader some thoughts which occur to me, whenever I read this passage.

1. I cannot but observe, that Moses does not say, that he and the nobles of Israel saw the invisible God; the expression of Egypt in the middle of the first month, the first day of the third month could be only the second, and not the third new moon after their exit. 2. The sacred writers never use such an expression, as is here before us; for on the first day of the month (bechad lachdesh) is on the first day of the month. See Gen. viii, 5, 13; Exodus xl, 2; Levit. xxiii, 24; Numbers i, 1, xxix, 1, xxxiii, 31; Deut. i, 3; Ezra iii, 6; Nehem. viii, 2; Ezek. xxvi, 1, xxxi, 1, xlv, 18, &c.; and thus Moses would most probably have here written, if the first day of the month had been here intended by him.

⁷ They came to Sinai on the fifteenth of the third month, in the first year of the exit, and they left Sinai on the twentieth day of the second month of the second year; so that they stayed here eleven months and five days.

⁸ Exodus xix, 11.

⁹ Chap. xxiv, 4.

¹ Ver. 7.

² Ver. 7, 8.

³ Ver. 9.

⁴ Ver. 10.

⁵ Ver. 11.

⁶ Ver. 12—18.

⁷ 1 John iv, 12.

⁸ Ως δὲ καὶ σωματικῶς ἀνθρώπων καὶ πρὸς οὐκ οὐ καὶ δαιμονίων κινήσις καὶ χάρις, φησὶ καὶ τὸ τοιοῦτον. Plut. in Numa, p. 62.

⁹ Ἰδὲ τὸν τόπον καὶ ὅπου ὁ Θεὸς τῆς Ἰσραὴλ. MS. A.

¹ Targum Onkelos.

is, that they saw the God of Israel.² *No man indeed hath ever seen the invisible God,*³ *nor can see him;*⁴ but the God of Israel, the divine person, who is many times styled in the Old Testament *the God of Abraham, the God of Isaac, and the God of Jacob,*⁵ frequently appeared to them, and was in after-ages made flesh,⁶ and for about three and thirty years dwelt on Earth amongst men. 2. That this person appeared to the patriarchs of old, in a real body, was evident to them by the same infallible proofs as those, by which he showed himself alive to his disciples after his passion.⁷ After he was risen from the dead, he was seen by the disciples speaking to them;⁸ and so he was in divers places, and at sundry times to Abraham,⁹ to Isaac,¹ and to Jacob.² The disciples not only beheld him, but felt, and handled him, and were as sure that he was really with them, as they were that *a spirit hath not flesh and bones, as they saw him have.*³ In like manner Jacob experienced as sensible a presence, when he wrestled with him.⁴ *Whilst the disciples believed not but wondered, he said unto them, have ye here any meat? and they gave him a piece of a broiled fish, and of a honeycomb, and he took it, and did eat before them.*⁵ Agreeably hereto, when THE LORD,⁶ with two angels accompanying him, appeared unto Abraham in the plains of Mamre, after Abraham had the calf dressed, and set it before them, whilst he stood by them under the tree, *they did eat.*⁷ Now from all these passages, I think, I see it to have been real and indisputable fact, that the person, who is here styled the God of Israel, did frequently, for a short or a longer space of time, according to his own good will and pleasure, assume and unite himself to a real body, and thereby appear visible to such persons as he thought fit to manifest himself to in this manner; and consequently that he might be thus seen by Moses and the elders on the mount. His appearance on the mount was indeed glorious,⁸ attended with a splendour in which he had not before been seen by man; and perhaps something like it afterwards was his transfiguration before the three disciples.⁹ But the text of Moses does in nowise suggest, that he and the elders saw the God of Israel in all his glory. Moses indeed did afterwards desire thus to see him;¹ but was answered, that he was not capable of it;² and accordingly at that time, while the glory of the LORD passed by him, Moses was put in a cleft of the rock, and the LORD covered him with his hand, while he passed by.³ But here, *upon the nobles of Israel he laid not his hand.*⁴ They had an unintercepted view of his appearance; and consequently he appeared to them, with a lesser degree of glory, such as men might see and live.

² Exodus xxiv, 10.³ Coloss. i, 15.⁴ 1 Tim. vi, 16.⁵ Gen. xxvi, 24, xxviii, 13; Exodus iii, 6; see vol. ii. b. ix; see Acts vii, 2, and Gen. xvii, 1.⁶ See vol. i, b. v; John i, 14.⁷ Acts i, 3.⁸ Ibid.⁹ Gen. xii, 7, xvii, 1, xviii, 1.¹ Ibid. xxvi, 24.² Ibid. xxxii, 30, xxxv. 9.³ Luke xxiv, 39.⁴ Gen. xxxii.⁵ Luke xxiv, 41, 42, 43.⁶ Gen. xviii, 1.⁷ Ver. 8.⁸ Exodus xxiv, 10.⁹ Matt. xvii; Mark ix.¹ Exodus xxxiii, 18.² Ver. 20.

As to what may be pretended of the wise and learned heathens; that they by the light of nature would have judged such an appearance, as is here spoken of, absurd and impossible; I would observe, that it is indeed true, that their earliest philosophy led them to think, that *the lights of Heaven were the gods that governed the world;*⁵ and to ascribe no human shape to these divinities, nor to set up idols of human form in their ancient image worship, but rather to consecrate sacred animals, and to dedicate their images; *the images of birds and four-footed beasts, and creeping things.*⁶ These they imagined were proper objects or directors of their worship; and have left us what they thought a philosophical reason for the use they made of them.⁷ But notwithstanding all this, in time, a newer theology succeeded among them, and in all nations, except the more eastern, which had but little knowledge of, or concern in what happened in Canaan and the countries adjacent to it, or which were instructed from it, gods of human form were introduced into every temple, and human images were erected to them. And yet, in after-times, when their philosophers came to speculate upon this subject, both this worship and theology was thought by them to have been the invention of fabulists and poets, and not to have been derived from reason and truth.⁸ They thought it mythic or popular, but in nowise agreeable to their notions of the nature of divine beings,⁹ but rather contrary to them. It is remarkable, that this their later theology was never thought of in any nation, until after the LORD had appeared unto Abraham, unto Isaac, unto Jacob, unto Moses, until after an angel had appeared unto Balaam,¹ unto Joshua,² and to divers other persons; not until after the same of these appearances had spread into, and obtained credit in divers countries. From all which I am apt to conclude, that no science or speculation, but a belief of facts well attested, led the heathens into this their newer

³ Ver. 22.

⁴ Chap. xxiv, 11.

⁵ Wisdom xiii, 2; see vol. i, b. v; vol. ii, b. viii.

⁶ Vol. ii, b. viii.

⁷ Ἀρχαίων ἐν ταῖς τιμαῖς, ἀλλὰ διὰ τούτων τοῦ θεοῦ, οὐκ ἀναρρέσαν ἐστίαν καὶ θεοὺς γινώσκοντες. Plut. de Iside et Osiride, p. 382.

⁸ Vide Plat. de Rep. lib. ii.

⁹ Tria sunt genera theologiæ, eorumque unum mythicon appellatur, alterum physicon, tertium civile. Mythicon appellatur, quo maxime utuntur poetæ, physicon, quo philosophi; primum quod dixi, in eo sunt multa contra dignitatem et naturam immortalium ficta, &c. Varro in Fragment. p. 31.

¹ Numbers xxii.

² Joshua v, 13.

theology.³ What was said of the appearances of angels unto men among the Hebrews, and to some other persons of other nations, was known to have been fact, beyond a possibility of contradiction. Hence it came to pass, that though philosophy suggested no such innovation, yet the directors of the Sacra of heathen kingdoms could not well avoid an imitation, of what, as fact, could not be denied to have happened in the world; and this by degrees led them to their new gods. Thus, if we consult the ancient heathens, instead of finding from their philosophy objections sufficient to weaken the credibility of what the Scriptures record, concerning the appearances of divine and superior beings, we may, from the alteration which they made in their sacred institutions, be induced to think, that these Scripture facts had been so well attested to the world, that even nations, not immediately concerned in them, could not but admit the truth of them, and think them of weight enough to cause them to vary from what they had before esteemed the principles both of their science and religion. But,

Moses is said to have remarked to the Israelites, that they had seen no manner of similitude. I answer, nothing can, I think, be concluded from the passage alluded to,⁴ to contradict what Moses relates, Exodus xxiv, that he and the elders saw the God of Israel. The passage cited from Deuteronomy expressly refers to the day in which God delivered, in an audible voice, the ten commandments from the mount to the people. And Moses's design in it was, to caution them, by a due regard to that day's transactions, to be exceeding careful not to fall into idolatry. He exhorts them, ver. 9, 10, never to forget the things which their eyes had seen on the day that they stood before the LORD in Horeb. He reminds them, ver. 12, that in that day the LORD spake unto them out of the midst of the fire, that they heard the voice of the words, but saw no similitude, only they heard a voice. He then again charges them to take good heed to themselves, lest they should make the similitude of any figure; by observing again to them, ver. 15, that they saw no similitude, on the day that the LORD spake unto them in Horeb, out of the midst of the fire. On this day it was, that God instructed them how he would be worshipped, and commanded them to make to themselves no manner of image;⁵ therefore to this particular day's transaction Moses might well appeal, in order to charge them in the strictest manner to be careful to observe this commandment. Accordingly, what he here offers is by his own express words limited and confined to the transactions of the day here referred to; and I do not see, how any thing can be concluded from what is here said, against what he may have suggested as happening on any other day whatsoever.

³ There are many passages in the heathen writers, which intimate that they thought it a fact, which could in nowise be denied, that the gods had appeared unto men. Thus, Sæpe visæ formæ deorum quemvis non hebetem aut impium deos præsentés esse confiteri coegerunt. Tullius de Nat. Deor. lib. ii, cap. 2. Again, Præterea ipsorum deorum præsentia, quales supra commemoravi, declarant, ab his et civitatibus, et singulis hominibus consuli. Id. ibid. c. 66.

⁴ Deut. iv. 15.

⁵ Exodus xx, 4, 5.

About these times Lelex, who was the first king of Laconia, flourished in that country; and seems to have been somewhat elder than Moses. He came originally from Egypt,⁵ made divers settlements in many places, in Caria,⁶ in Ionia,⁷ at Ida, near Troy,⁸ and afterwards in Greece, in Acarnania,⁹ in Ætolia,¹ in Bœotia,² and last of all in Laconia. When Lelex began his travels, he took the same rout that Cecrops and the father of Cadmus had before taken. He went up into Phœnicia, thence into the lesser Asia, and from thence he crossed over into Greece, and made settlements in many places, until at length he came into Laconia. In all parts where he made any stay, he endeavoured to form and civilize the uncultivated people; and probably, when he removed, he left some of his followers to complete his designs; and upon every procession to a new country he took with him such new associates as had a mind to accompany him from the places where he had last resided. By these means the company he commanded would in a few years be a mixed multitude gathered out of different nations; and his followers having been of this sort, seemed to Strabo to be the reason why the Greeks called him Lelex, and them Leleges.³ It was found in writing in the times of the Maccabees, that the Lacedæmonians and the Jews were brethren; and that the Lacedæmonians were descended of the stock of Abraham.⁴ I imagine, that this Lelex was an Israelite, and that as divers eminent persons of the Egyptians, upon the conquest which the pastors made of their country, fled with as many as would follow them into foreign lands;⁵ some of the Hebrews, when they were pressed with slavery, might do the same thing, and this Lelex might be one of them; and when he had obtained a settlement in Laconia, both what we find in Pausanias of his coming out of Egypt,⁶ and this hint of his relation to the Hebrews might be recorded of him. Some of the Greek writers mistake the time of his coming into Greece; who report that it was about thirteen generations after Phoroneus, king of Argos.⁷ But we must not suppose it so late; for from Menelaus who warred

⁵ Ἀργυροῦν καὶ Μολαγρὸς Ἀργεῖα ἀποδημιῶντι καὶ Ἀργυρίῃσι βασιλευσιν. Pausan. in Atticis, c. 39.

⁶ Vid. Strab. Geog. lib. vii, p. 321; lib. xiii, p. 611; Hom. Il. ε. ver. 86, 87.

⁷ Strab. lib. xiv, p. 640.

⁸ Id. lib. vii, p. 321.

⁹ Id. ibid.

¹ Id. ibid.

² Id. ibid. et in lib. ix, p. 401.

³ Vid. Strab. lib. vii, p. 322.

⁴ 1 Macc. xii, 21.

⁵ See vol. ii, b. viii.

⁶ Pausan. in Attic, c. 39.

⁷ Id. ibid.

at Troy up to Lelex, we find ten successive kings of this country exclusive of Menelaus;² and in Castor's list we have but fourteen successions from Phoroneus down to Agamemnon the leader of the Greeks, contemporary with Menelaus;³ so that Lelex cannot have been at most above three or four reigns later than Phoroneus. We find a hint in Strabo, which may well fix for us the time of Lelex's entering Laconia. He records, that the Leleges were in Bœotia, when Cadmus came thither; and that Cadmus expelled them that country.¹ They were hereupon compelled to a farther travel, and therefore at this time, they and their leader marched to Laconia, and began the kingdom of Lacedæmonia. Cadmus came into Bœotia A. M. 2486.² And therefore to this year I should fix Lelex's going into Laconia; who according to this computation came thither in the reign of Triopas, or Crotopus, the fourth or fifth king of³ Argos from Phoroneus. Agreeably to this computation, we may well suppose ten kings of Lacedæmonia from Lelex to Menelaus; but if we place Lelex lower there can be no room for such a succession. I might add, that it farther appears, that Lelex lived about these times, from what Pausanias records of Polycaon his younger son, that he married Messene the daughter of Triopas;⁴ so that Lelex and Triopas were nearly contemporaries. I suppose Lelex somewhat elder than Moses; his coming into Laconia after so many travels, must have been towards the end of his own life; but the year 2486 in which he entered that country, falls about the middle of Moses's days; in Moses's fifty-third year, twenty-seven years before he led the Israelites out of Egypt. We are nowhere told how long Lelex governed his new settlement; his eldest son Myles succeeded him,⁵ and at Myles's death, Eurotas son of Myles became king.⁶ Eurotas at his death left no male heirs,⁷ and Polycaon the younger son of Lelex was settled in another country.⁸ Hence it happened at the demise of Eurotas, that the crown of Laconia went into another family; and Lacedæmon, son of Jupiter and Taygete was promoted to it.⁹ Pausanias has recorded the names of the Lacedæmonian kings;¹ and from Lelex to Menelaus who warred at Troy, they are as follows; Lelex, Myles, Eurotas, Lacedæmon, Amyclas, Argalus, Cynortas, Oebalus, Hippocoon, Tyndareus, and Menelaus. Castor and Pollux were the sons of Tyndareus,² and engaged in the Ar-

¹ Pausan. in Laconic.

² Strab. Geog. lib. xi, p. 401.

³ Triopas was noted by the ancient writers to live about the times of Cecrops. See vol. ii, b. viii.

⁴ Pausan. in Laconic. c. 1; et in Messænic. c. 1.

⁵ Id. in Laconic. ubi sup.

⁶ Id. ibid.

⁷ Id. in Laconic.

⁸ Apollod. Biblioth. lib. iii, c. 9.

⁹ Euseb. in Chronico.

¹ See vol. ii, b. viii.

² Id. in Messænic. ubi sup.

³ Id. ibid.

⁴ Id. in Messænic. ubi sup.

⁵ Id. ibid.

⁶ Id. ibid.

⁷ Id. ibid.

⁸ Id. ibid.

⁹ Id. ibid.

¹ Id. ibid.

² Id. ibid.

³ Id. ibid.

⁴ Id. ibid.

⁵ Id. ibid.

⁶ Id. ibid.

⁷ Id. ibid.

⁸ Id. ibid.

⁹ Id. ibid.

¹ Id. ibid.

² Id. ibid.

³ Id. ibid.

⁴ Id. ibid.

⁵ Id. ibid.

⁶ Id. ibid.

⁷ Id. ibid.

⁸ Id. ibid.

⁹ Id. ibid.

¹ Id. ibid.

² Id. ibid.

³ Id. ibid.

⁴ Id. ibid.

⁵ Id. ibid.

⁶ Id. ibid.

⁷ Id. ibid.

⁸ Id. ibid.

⁹ Id. ibid.

¹ Id. ibid.

² Id. ibid.

³ Id. ibid.

⁴ Id. ibid.

⁵ Id. ibid.

⁶ Id. ibid.

⁷ Id. ibid.

⁸ Id. ibid.

⁹ Id. ibid.

¹ Id. ibid.

² Id. ibid.

³ Id. ibid.

⁴ Id. ibid.

⁵ Id. ibid.

⁶ Id. ibid.

⁷ Id. ibid.

⁸ Id. ibid.

⁹ Id. ibid.

¹ Id. ibid.

² Id. ibid.

³ Id. ibid.

⁴ Id. ibid.

⁵ Id. ibid.

⁶ Id. ibid.

⁷ Id. ibid.

⁸ Id. ibid.

⁹ Id. ibid.

¹ Id. ibid.

² Id. ibid.

³ Id. ibid.

⁴ Id. ibid.

⁵ Id. ibid.

⁶ Id. ibid.

⁷ Id. ibid.

⁸ Id. ibid.

⁹ Id. ibid.

¹ Id. ibid.

² Id. ibid.

³ Id. ibid.

⁴ Id. ibid.

⁵ Id. ibid.

⁶ Id. ibid.

⁷ Id. ibid.

⁸ Id. ibid.

⁹ Id. ibid.

¹ Id. ibid.

² Id. ibid.

³ Id. ibid.

⁴ Id. ibid.

⁵ Id. ibid.

⁶ Id. ibid.

⁷ Id. ibid.

⁸ Id. ibid.

⁹ Id. ibid.

¹ Id. ibid.

² Id. ibid.

³ Id. ibid.

⁴ Id. ibid.

⁵ Id. ibid.

⁶ Id. ibid.

⁷ Id. ibid.

⁸ Id. ibid.

⁹ Id. ibid.

¹ Id. ibid.

² Id. ibid.

³ Id. ibid.

⁴ Id. ibid.

⁵ Id. ibid.

⁶ Id. ibid.

⁷ Id. ibid.

⁸ Id. ibid.

⁹ Id. ibid.

¹ Id. ibid.

² Id. ibid.

³ Id. ibid.

⁴ Id. ibid.

⁵ Id. ibid.

⁶ Id. ibid.

⁷ Id. ibid.

⁸ Id. ibid.

⁹ Id. ibid.

¹ Id. ibid.

² Id. ibid.

³ Id. ibid.

⁴ Id. ibid.

⁵ Id. ibid.

⁶ Id. ibid.

⁷ Id. ibid.

⁸ Id. ibid.

⁹ Id. ibid.

¹ Id. ibid.

² Id. ibid.

³ Id. ibid.

⁴ Id. ibid.

⁵ Id. ibid.

⁶ Id. ibid.

⁷ Id. ibid.

⁸ Id. ibid.

⁹ Id. ibid.

¹ Id. ibid.

² Id. ibid.

³ Id. ibid.

⁴ Id. ibid.

⁵ Id. ibid.

⁶ Id. ibid.

⁷ Id. ibid.

⁸ Id. ibid.

⁹ Id. ibid.

¹ Id. ibid.

² Id. ibid.

³ Id. ibid.

⁴ Id. ibid.

⁵ Id. ibid.

⁶ Id. ibid.

⁷ Id. ibid.

⁸ Id. ibid.

⁹ Id. ibid.

¹ Id. ibid.

² Id. ibid.

³ Id. ibid.

⁴ Id. ibid.

⁵ Id. ibid.

⁶ Id. ibid.

⁷ Id. ibid.

⁸ Id. ibid.

⁹ Id. ibid.

¹ Id. ibid.

² Id. ibid.

³ Id. ibid.

⁴ Id. ibid.

⁵ Id. ibid.

⁶ Id. ibid.

⁷ Id. ibid.

⁸ Id. ibid.

⁹ Id. ibid.

¹ Id. ibid.

² Id. ibid.

³ Id. ibid.

⁴ Id. ibid.

⁵ Id. ibid.

⁶ Id. ibid.

⁷ Id. ibid.

⁸ Id. ibid.

⁹ Id. ibid.

¹ Id. ibid.

² Id. ibid.

³ Id. ibid.

⁴ Id. ibid.

⁵ Id. ibid.

⁶ Id. ibid.

⁷ Id. ibid.

⁸ Id. ibid.

⁹ Id. ibid.

¹ Id. ibid.

² Id. ibid.

³ Id. ibid.

⁴ Id. ibid.

⁵ Id. ibid.

⁶ Id. ibid.

⁷ Id. ibid.

⁸ Id. ibid.

⁹ Id. ibid.

¹ Id. ibid.

² Id. ibid.

³ Id. ibid.

⁴ Id. ibid.

⁵ Id. ibid.

⁶ Id. ibid.

⁷ Id. ibid.

⁸ Id. ibid.

⁹ Id. ibid.

¹ Id. ibid.

² Id. ibid.

³ Id. ibid.

⁴ Id. ibid.

⁵ Id. ibid.

⁶ Id. ibid.

⁷ Id. ibid.

⁸ Id. ibid.

⁹ Id. ibid.

¹ Id. ibid.

² Id. ibid.

³ Id. ibid.

⁴ Id. ibid.

⁵ Id. ibid.

⁶ Id. ibid.

⁷ Id. ibid.

⁸ Id. ibid.

⁹ Id. ibid.

gonautic expedition;³ but they were never kings of Lacedæmonia, but died before their father;⁴ and upon their death, Tyndareus, sent for Menelaus to succeed him in his kingdom.⁵

The famous Jupiter of the Greeks was also contemporary with Moses. He was son of Saturn, a king of Crete.⁶ The remains we now have of the ancient writers seem to give but a confused account of the early history of the Cretans; though it is remarkable, that the Cretans were formerly so famous for their history, as to have the wisest of men think it worth while to travel to them to peruse their records.⁷ But of what now remains about them, almost all is fable; though I cannot but think, a careful inquirer may still collect particulars, and give them more light than they are generally thought capable of receiving. Cres was king of Crete about the fifty-sixth year of Abraham,⁸ Talus was son of Cres, Vulcan of Talus, and Rhadamanthus of Vulcan.⁹ About the time of this Rhadamanthus¹ we may place the Dactyli Idæi,² who were five brothers, as many in number as the fingers of a man's hand, and for that reason called Dactyli.³ One of these Dactyli was probably named Jupiter; for there was a more ancient Jupiter than the son of Saturn,⁴ who was father of the Curetes,⁵ and brother of Ouranus;⁶ so that Ouranus might be another of the Dactyli. Saturn was son of Ouranus,⁷ and Jupiter was son of Saturn.⁸ From Abraham to Moses are seven descents; Abraham, Isaac, Jacob, Levi, Cohath, Amram, Moses; and there are about as many from Cres to Jupiter, namely, Cres, Talus, Vulcan, Rhadamanthus, Ouranus, Saturn, Jupiter. If Ouranus and the rest of the Dactyli were of the same descent with Rhadamanthus, we have but six; but, if they were in the descent next after him, we have exactly seven, as in the family of Abraham. Diodorus Siculus mentions no kings of Crete between Cres and the Dactyli; but it is observable, that he does not say that the Dactyli flourished in or next after the times of Cres. Diodorus reckoned up the worthies who lived between Cres and Saturn, whom the ages which succeeded ³ Apollon. Argon. et. Val. Flacc.

⁴ Apollod. lib. iii. c. 10.

⁵ Id. ibid.

⁶ Diodor. Sic. lib. v. c. 68; Apollod. Biblioth. lib. i.

⁷ Ἐπεὶ τὸ κατὰ Σάτυρον ὁ Ἀθήναιος παραλαβὼν μὴ ὡς Κρήτην ἀλλὰ τὴν καθὼς ἱστορεῖται. Diogen. Laert. in vit. Thalet.

⁸ Euseb. in Chron.

⁹ Cinzethon. in Paus. Arcad. c. 53.

¹ We are not to suppose that the Rhadamanthus here spoken of was the same person with one of that name, who was brother of Minos; nor the Vulcan here mentioned to be the same with Vulcan son of Jupiter. Persons of later ages frequently had the names which their ancestor had borne ages before them.

² Diodor. Sic. l. v. c. 64.

³ Diodor. Sic. lib. v. c. 64; Strabo Geog. lib. x. p. 487.

⁴ Diodor. lib. iii. c. 61.

⁵ Id. ibid.

⁶ Id. ibid.

⁷ Id. lib. v. c. 66; Apollod. Biblioth. lib. i.

⁸ Diodorus, lib. v. c. 69, 70, 71; Apollod. ubi sup.

had mentioned with honour; and it is easy to imagine, that there might be two or three descents between the times of Cres and the Dactyli, in which nothing memorable was done, in the way of either great actions or useful inventions, to bear their fame down to posterity, and so the names of those who lived in these generations might either not come to Diodorus, or he not think it worth while to mention them. If Cres himself had not excelled those who lived before him, in teaching his countrymen many things conducive to their public welfare,⁹ Diodorus had probably taken no notice of him; and had his successors been as eminent as he was, their names perhaps would have been recorded by him. But after the death of Cres,¹ no advance being made either in arts or government, until the Dactyli, the names between Cres and their times were omitted by Diodorus.

Ouranus lived in the eastern parts of Crete; for his son Saturn afterwards removed westward.² Ouranus married Titæ,³ who, according to the custom of these times, which was, to give the names of the elements and lights of heaven (they being deities now worshipped) to eminent persons, took the names of Terra or Tellus, as her husband was called Cælum or Ouranus. The children born of these two parents were first the Centimani; namely, Briareus, Gyes, and Cæus.⁴ The fabulous writers say, that each of these men had a hundred hands and fifty heads.⁵ They were of larger size, of greater strength,⁶ and perhaps of more cunning and contrivance than common men; and fable has given them the hands and heads of multitudes, for being superior to single men in their wisdom and valour. Ouranus sent them to inhabit the land of Tartarus; for here we find them in power and command in the days of Jupiter.⁷ What or where the country was, which was thus named, may be difficult to determine. Pluto was afterwards king of it,⁸ and I imagine it was no part of Crete; for when Pluto took away Proserpine from her mother Ceres, Ceres sought her, κατα πασαν την γην, i. e. all over Crete, but could not find her;⁹ afterwards she heard that she was with Pluto; so that Pluto's dominions were not in Crete, but in some foreign country. We are told by Apollodorus, that the Cyclops were sent into this land of Tartarus;¹ and Homer

⁹ Τον μὲν Βασίλεα Κρήτη καλυμμένη πλῆσι καὶ μόλις κατὰ τὴν νῆσον αὐρὰν τὰ δυνάμειν τοῦ κοῦρου τὸν ἀνθρώπου εἶναι ἀφαιρῆσαι. Diodor. Sic. lib. v, c. 64.

¹ Perhaps Cres having none to second him, the useful designs he attempted might drop at his death; and though he had the descendants we have mentioned, yet none of them might be kings, nor any government set up in Crete in their names.

² Diodor. c. 66.

³ Id. ibid.

⁴ Apollod. Biblioth. lib. i, c. 1.

⁵ Id. ibid.

⁶ Μοῖρα δὲ αὐτοφύλακτοι καὶ δυνάμει καθυσταμένοι. Id. ibid.

⁷ Apollod. Biblioth. lib. i, c. 2.

⁸ Id. ibid.

⁹ Διμήτρα δὲ μὲντα λαμπαδὸν νεκρὸς τε καὶ ἡμέρας κατὰ πᾶσαν τὴν γῆν ζητῶσα τῆμεν. Apollodor. Biblioth. lib. i, c. 5.

¹ Id. ibid. c. 1.

appears to think that they lived in the island of Sicily.² Strabo supposed that in this point he had given us not fiction, but true history;³ and we find Thucydides, though he had nothing to offer about the rise or exit of this set of men, whence they came hither, or whither they removed, yet not doubting but that they were of the most ancient inhabitants of this island.⁴ Agreeably hereto, Tartarus the father of Typhon appears from Apollodorus to have lived in Sicily in the age I am treating of;⁵ and in these days probably this island was called after his name. This land of Tartarus was said to be as far distant from the Earth, as the Earth is from Heaven.⁶ This might be the ancient Cretan account of it, and by the Earth they might mean their own island, and intended only to assert that Tartarus was at an immeasurable distance from their shore; and unquestionably from Crete to Sicily was a considerable voyage in those ages. As Pluto, from his having been the person who invented the rites and ceremonies⁷ used at funerals, came in after-ages to be called the god of the dead; so the country where he had been king was reputed to be their region, and all the gloomy fictions imagined to belong to the state of the departed were related to have their place in this land of Tartarus. But it is obvious that these fables were not invented, until ages after the times of the Centimani; and not until long after Sicily ceased to be called by this its ancient name. 2. The Cyclops were also sons of Ouranus and Tellus;⁸ whose names were Harpes, Steropes, and Brontes. They were said to have but one eye apiece, and that situate in the middle of their foreheads.⁹ These men were the archers of their times, and usually shut one eye, to take their aim in shooting;¹ which occasioned the fable of their having only one eye. Ouranus sent them to Tartarus unto their brethren.² 3. Ouranus and Tellus were the parents of the Titans also, whose names were Oceanus, Cæus,

² Odyss. ix.

⁴ Thucyd. Hist. lib. vi.

⁶ Τῶς δὲ υἱὸς τοσούτων ἀπὸ γῆς ἔχον ἀνστήματα, ὥσθ' ἀπ' ὑπὲρ γῆς. Apollod. lib. i, c. 1, sec. 1.

⁷ Τὸν δ' Ἀδύ, λέγεται, τὰ πρὶν τὰς ταφάς, καὶ τὰς σφύρας, καὶ τιμὰς τῶν τελευτῶντων καλεῖσθαι—διὸ καὶ τῶν τελευτῶντων οὗτος ὡς παρακαλεῖται κρηστῶν. Diomedes Sic. lib. v, p. 233.

⁸ Apollod. lib. i, c. 1.

⁹ Id. ibid.

¹ I have forgotten from whom I had this conjecture: I think it is Eustathius's. But I would observe, that the ingenious annotator upon the English Homer, whose real worth, as well as learning, makes it a pleasure to me to say, I have a friendship for him, gives a better account of this fable of the Cyclops; ascribing it to their wearing a head piece or martial vizor, that had but one sight through it. "The vulgar," says he, form their judgments from appearances; and a mariner, who passed these coasts at a distance, observing the resemblance of a broad eye in the forehead of one of these Cyclops, might relate it accordingly, and impose it as a truth upon the ignorant. It is notorious, that things equally monstrous have found belief in all ages." See Dr. Broome's Notes upon Homer's Odyssey, b. ix, ver. 119.

² Apollodorus ubi sup.

Hyperion, Crius, Japetus, and Saturn,³ and of the Titanides, who were Tethys, Rhea, Themis, Mnemosyne, Phœbe, Dione, and Thia.⁴ Tellus the wife of Ouranus had also other children, namely, Phorcus, Thaumas, Nereus, Eurybæa, and Ceto, by a person named Pontus, who perhaps after the death of Ouranus was her second husband;⁵ and Ouranus had several children by a concubine named Ops; who were Porphyrio, Halcyoneus, Ephialtes, Clytius, Enceladus, Polybotes, Gratian, and Thoon. Tellus made a voyage into Sicily, and stayed there some time, until she had a son named Typhon, by Tartarus, a person of the highest eminence in Sicily, in these ages.⁶ Ops was no Cretan, but a foreigner; who came into Crete out of a more northern nation.⁷ She is often taken to be the same person as Tellus, but it is evident she was not so; probably she was the Cybele of the ancients.

At the death of Ouranus, his son Saturn had his kingdom; who is said to have castrated and deposed his father.⁸ But we have no reason to imagine that he did so, or that what is told us of the birth of the furies from Ouranus⁹ was real fact. Varro judiciously thought these relations to be parts of what he calls the Mythic Theology;¹ which afforded many narrations of imaginary actions never really done, but founded upon the ancient philosophy and religion, historically put together.² Saturn married his sister Rhea, and had by her three sons and three daughters, Jupiter, Neptune, Pluto, Vesta, Ceres, and Juno.³ It is said of Saturn, that he ate up his children as soon as they were born,⁴ that Jupiter only escaped, by a contrivance of his mother Rhea, who bundled up a stone in his clothes, and sent it to Saturn, which he, not doubting but it was his new-born son, took and ate up instead of him. Jupiter, they tell us, was put out to nurse by his mother to the Curetes. In time, they bring Saturn's children upon the stage again, and represent Jupiter as compelling his father, by some drink, to discharge his stomach of ³ Id. ibid.; Diodor. lib. v, c. 66.

⁴ Apollodor. Biblioth. lib. i, c. 1. Diodorus mentions only five, and calls them Rhea, Themis, Mnemosyne, Phœbe, and Thetis, lib. v, c. 66.

⁵ Apollodor. lib. i, c. 2, sec. 5.

⁶ Id. c. 6.

⁷ Ὀψις, μὴν τὸν ἐκ ὑπερβορίας παραγωγόμενον πατέρα.

Id. c. 4 sec. 4.

⁸ Apollodor. c. 1.

⁹ Id. ibid.

¹ Vid. Varron. Frag. p. 31.

² See what I have offered upon this subject, vol. ii, book viii. Saturnus—falcem habet ob agriculturam. Quod Cælum patrem Saturnus castrasse in fabulis dicitur, hoc significat, penes Saturnum, non penes Cælum, semen esse divinum; hoc propterea quantum intelligi datur, quia nihil in Cælo de semini-bus nascitur. Varro in Frag. p. 42.

³ Diodor. Apollodor. ubi sup.

⁴ This fable is explained by Cicero (de Nat. Deor. lib. ii.) as being only a metaphorical account of Time's destroying its own produce. His words are "Κρονος, qui est idem χρόνος, i. e. spatium temporis, appellatus est Saturnus, quod saturetur annis. Ex æ enim natos comessare fingitur solitus, quia consumit ætas temporum spatia, annisque præteritis insaturabiliter expletur."

EDIT.

them, and of the stone with them.⁴ Varro has given a philosophic solution of this fable also;⁵ but I would observe, that Saturn was the first in these parts, who introduced a regularity of diet amongst his people,⁶ and he might perhaps think it a matter of moment to begin from the first with his own children. We find the nursing and feeding infants with proper food became a sort of science in the generation next after him; and had directors appointed to take care of it.⁷ If Saturn had formed any scheme of this sort, and upon this account took his children as soon as born from their mother; if as soon as they were fit for it, he sent them abroad for education into some foreign land (and the figure they all afterwards made in life, renders it highly probable, that they had better instruction than Crete was at this time able to give them;) this might be a sufficient foundation for the fable handed down to us concerning Saturn. Rhea sent Jupiter to the Curetes; and a bundle of clothes, with a stone wrapped up in them to make them heavy, was carried where Saturn ordered, instead of him; and when Jupiter was grown up, and came home to his father, and Saturn thought fit to have his other children recalled from their foreign education; as he was before said to have eaten them, so now he might be represented to have vomited them up again. The fancy of the mythologists was extravagant beyond measure, and no representation could appear so monstrous or ridiculous, but they could think it ingenious to dress up in it and disguise the plainest and most common transactions of life.⁸

When Saturn died, Jupiter succeeded to his kingdom.⁹ Here again the mythologists give us fable, and suggest that Jupiter deposed his father, and divided his dominions between himself and his brethren.¹ But Diodorus informs us, that there were other accounts of him; that he came to his crown at Saturn's death as his rightful heir, without attempts of his own to obtain a succession, or endeavours of others to prevent it.² He married his sister Juno,³ and by her had children, Hebe, Ilithya, Argos, Mars, and Vulcan.⁴ He had several other

⁴ Apollodor. Biblioth. lib. i.

⁵ Saturnum dixerunt, quæ nata ex eo essent, devorare solitum, quod eo semina, unde nascerentur, redirent; et quod illi pro Jove gleba objecta est devoranda, significat manibus humanis obrui captas serendo fruges, antequam subtilitas arandi esset inventa. Varro in Frag. p. 42.

⁶ Diodorus, lib v, c. 66.

⁷ Ἀρτίμη δὲ φασὶν αὐτῇ τῇ τῶν τέκνων παιδείᾳ διακίνας, καὶ τροφῇ τῆς ἀρμόζουσας τῇ φύσει τῶν βρεφῶν. Diodor. c. 72.

⁸ See vol. ii, b. viii. Ἐν τῷ παύλει κίβητι πολλὰ μὲν παλαιὰ συμβεβηκέναι ἀκρίβως παρακινῶν καὶ τὰς πολλὰς, αἱ τοὺς ἀλλοθῶν ἐπιποδομῶντες ἐφευρέματα. Pausan.

⁹ Diodor. Sic. lib. v, c. 71.

¹ Apollod. lib. i, c. 2.

² Τῆς μὲν φασὶν αὐτὸν μετὰ τῇ εἰς ἀνδρῶν τῇ Κροτῇ μεταστῆναι καὶ διὰ δαδῆσθαι τὴν βασιλείαν, καὶ οὕτω κατεχόμενον τοῦ πατρὸς, νομῆναι δὲ καὶ διαιεῖν ἐξουσίᾳ πάντας τὰς τιμὰς.—Diodor. lib. v. cap. 70.

³ Diodor. ibid.; Apollod. Bibl. lib. i, c. 3; Hesiod. Ὀργον.

⁴ Id. ibid.

wives, 1. Metis, by whom he had Pallas.⁵ 2. Themis, who bore him Irene, Eunomia, and Dica, who were called the Horæ, and Clotho, Lachesis, and Atropos, who were called the Fates.⁶ 3. Euronome was the mother of Aglaia, Euphrosyne, and Thalia.⁷ 4. Of Styx, or rather Ceres, was born Proserpine.⁸ Of Mnemosyne was born the Muses, who have commonly been said to be nine in number; Varro thought they were originally only three.⁹ 6. Latona bore him Diana and Apollo.¹ 7. Venus was born to him of Dione.² 8. Mercury of Maia.³ 9. Bacchus of Semele;⁴ and he had several other children, both sons and daughters, by divers other women. But let us endeavour first to fix with a little more certainty the times in which Jupiter lived, and after that we may take a farther view of the transactions of his life.

Jupiter lived about eight or nine generations before the Trojan war; which may be very clearly computed by going through the genealogies of those who are recorded to be his descendants. Thus Æthlius, king of Elea in Greece, was son of Jupiter and Protogenia, the daughter of Deucalion.⁵ His son Endymion succeeded him.⁶ Epeus son of Endymion succeeded him.⁷ Ætolus brother to Epeus was his successor,⁸ and after Ætolus reigned Eleus his nephew.⁹ At Eleus's death, Augeas son of Eleus had the kingdom.¹ Agasthenes son of Augeas succeeded his father;² and Polyxenes son of Agasthenes, grandson of Augeas, commanded at Troy.³ Thus ⁵ Hesiod. ibid. Apollodorus supposes that Thetis the daughter of Nereus had borne him Pallas. Bibl. lib. i. c. 3, sec. 6.

⁶ Hesiod. Apollod.

⁷ Ibid.

⁸ Diodor. lib. v. c. 2; Hesiod. Θεογον.; Apollod. lib. i. c. 3, et c. 5.

⁹ Apol. lib. i. c. 3. Varro dicit, civitatem nescio quam (neque enim recorder nomen) locasse apud tres artifices terna simulachra Musarum, quæ in templo Apollinis, Deo poneret, ut quisquis artificum pulchriora formasset, ab illo potissimum electa emeret. Itaque contigisse, ut opera sua quoque illi artifices æque pulchra explicarent, et placuisse civitati omnes novem, atque omnes emptas esse, ut Apollinis templo dicarentur, quibus postea dicit Hesiodum poetam imposuisse vocabula. Non ergo ait, Jupiter novem Musas genuit, sed tres fabri ternas fecerunt. Tres autem non propterea civitas illa locaverat, quia in somnis eas viderat, aut tot se cujusquam illorum oculis demonstraverant sed quia facile erat animadvertere omnem sonum, qui materies cantilenarum est, triformem esse naturam; aut enim editur voce, sicut est eorum, qui faucibus sine instrumento canunt, aut flatu sicut tubarum et tibarum, aut pulsu sicut in cytharis, et tympanis, et quibusdam aliis, que percutiendo sonora fiunt. Varro in Fragment. p. 207; Vide Augustin. de Doctrin. Christian. lib. ii, c. 17.

¹ Apollodor. lib. i. c. 4. Διμντρος δὲ Ἀγρίμην θυγατέρα ἔσται, καὶ ἔσται, ὡς Ἀργυρίτιον τοῦ λυγροῦ, Ἀργυρὸς δὲ δαξὶν Εὐφρονας τὴν Ἑλλάναν. Pausan. in Arcad. c. 37.

² Apollod. c. 3.

³ Id. lib. iii, c. 10, sec. 2.

⁴ Vid. quæ sup.; Diodo. Sic. lib. v, p. 230; Strab. Geog. lib. x, p. 473.

⁵ Pausan. lib. v, c. 1; Apollod. Biblioth. lib. i, c. 7. It ought to be here remarked, that Æthlius was by some of the ancients thought to be the son of Ætolus. See Pausan. lib. v, c. 8.

⁶ Apollod. ibid. c. 7, sec. 5; Pausan. ubi sup.

⁷ Pausan. ibid.

⁸ Apollod. sec. 6; Pausan. ubi sup.

⁹ Pausan. ibid.

¹ Pausan. ibid.

² Pausan. ibid. lib. v, c. 3.

³ Pausan. ibid. Hom. Il. β, ver. 623.

if we count from Jupiter to the Trojan war, we find nine successions, or computing Epeus and Ætolus, who were brothers, to be in the same line of descent, eight generations. In the family of Theas the son of Andramon, who commanded the Ætolians in the Trojan war,⁴ there are ten descents; for Theas was six from Ætolus,⁵ and Ætolus as above was four from Jupiter. In like manner we find ten descents from Jupiter to Diomedes, four to Ætolus as before. Pleuron was son of Ætolus,⁶ Agenor of Pleuron,⁷ Eneus of Agenor,⁸ Tydeus of Eneus,⁹ and Diomedes of Tydeus.¹ If we go into another branch of Jupiter's family, we shall find the accounts much the same. Arcas was the son of Jupiter, born of Callisto the daughter of Lycaon.² Arcas succeeded Nyctimus the eldest son of Lycaon in the kingdom of Arcadia.³ Azanas son of Arcas succeeded him.⁴ Clitor son of Azanas succeeded his father.⁵ Epitus a nephew of Azanas succeeded Clitor,⁶ and Aleus another nephew succeeded Epitus;⁷ at Aleus's death his son Lyncurgus had the crown,⁸ and at his death he left it to Echemus.⁹ Agapenor grandson of Lyncurgus succeeded Echemus,¹ and led the Arcadians to Troy. Thus from Nyctimus, who may be supposed to be coetaneous with Jupiter, to Agapenor are nine successions; and, counting Clitor, Epitus, and Aleus, who were brothers' children, to be in the same line of descent, at least seven generations. In Laconia we find Lacedæmon king of that country was son of Jupiter and Taygete daughter of Atlas.² Amyclas the next king was his son;³ Argalus succeeded his father Amyclas;⁴ and Cynortas Argalus;⁵ and Cynortas left his crown to Ebalus.⁶ When Ebalus died, Hippocoön got possession of the throne, and for a time defeated Tyndareus the son of Ebalus;⁷ but after some years Tyndareus ejected him,⁸ and recovered the kingdom. Tyndareus had two sons, Castor and Pollux,⁹ but they both died before him.¹ He married his daughter Helen to Menelaus the son of Atreus,² and at his death Menelaus succeeded him in his kingdom.³ Thus from Lacedæmon the son of Jupiter to Helen and Menelaus, for whom the Greeks warred at Troy, are eight reigns and seven descents; or eight descents from Jupiter. Again, Dardanus king of Troy was son of Jupiter

⁴ Pausan. ubi sup. Hom. II. β ver. 638.

⁵ Apollod. lib. i, c. 7, sec. 6.

⁶ Id. ibid.

⁹ Id. ibid.

⁷ Hyg. Fab. 155; Apollod. Biblioth. lib. iii, c. 8, sec. 2;

⁸ Pausan. ibid. c. 4.

⁴ Id. ibid.

⁵ Id. in Arcad. c. 4.

⁶ Ibid.

¹ Id. c. 5; Hom. II. β ver. 609.

² Hygin. Fab. 155; Apollod. Bibl. lib. iii. c. 10, sec. 3; Pausan. in Laconic.

c. i.

³ Pausan. ibid.

⁴ Id. ibid.

⁵ Id. ibid.

⁶ Id. ibid.

⁷ Id. ibid.

⁸ Id. ibid.

⁹ Apollod. Biblioth. lib. iii, c. 9, sec. 7.

² Id. ibid. c. 9, sec. 8.

¹ Id. c. 10.

³ Id. ibid. c. 10.

and Electra, daughter of Atlas,⁴ Erichthonius of Dardanus,⁵ Tros of Erichthonius,⁶ Ilus of Tros,⁷ Laomedon of Ilus,⁸ Priamus of Laomedon.⁹ Priamus was an old man when the Greeks warred against him; his son Hector was then in his full strength, and about the age of the Greek commanders, and from Jupiter to Hector are eight descents. We might examine the accounts we have of other families, and in all, of whom we have sufficient remains, we should find Jupiter about eight or nine generations before the Trojan war. Successions in families vary enough to cause this difference of a descent or two; but we have no genealogies that will allow us to place him later than the time of Moses; for Moses lived from A. M. 2433 to A. M. 2550.¹ Take the middle of his life A. M. 2493, from thence to the war at Troy are about three hundred years, supposing Troy to have been taken about A. M. 2796²; and if we count eight or nine descents in this space of time, we go between thirty and forty years to a descent, and the generations we have examined being for the most part by the elder sons, this may pretty well agree with the length of such generations in these times.

As what I have offered does abundantly hint, that Jupiter lived about the age of Moses, so the particulars of his life do farther confirm it, and may perhaps enable us to settle more exactly the time when he flourished. 1. For Jupiter visited Lycaon king of Arcadia,³ and had a son named Arcas, born of Callisto, Lycaon's daughter.⁴ Now Lycaon was contemporary, and of about the same years with the elder Cecrops.⁵ Cecrops reigned in Attica from A. M. 2493 to A. M. 2473.⁶ Lycaon was advanced towards old age when Jupiter visited him; for his children were all grown up, and of age to build cities and govern nations.⁷ Jupiter therefore visited him about the end of the life of Cecrops; and not earlier than the fortieth year of Moses's age. But we may fix this matter with still greater certainty. Lycaon died by the hand of Jupiter:⁸ at his death Nyctimus his eldest son had his crown.⁹ Nyctimus was made king of Arcadia just upon the time of Deucalion's flood;¹ and the ancients supposed that flood had happened A. M. 2476;² so that about this year Jupiter was in ⁴ Id. ibid. lib. iii, c. 11; Diodor. Sic. Hist. lib. v, c. 48; Hom. Il. v, ver. 215.

⁵ Diodor. lib. iv, c. 75; Hom. Il. v, ver. 219.

⁶ Diodor. ubi sup.; Hom. Il. v, ver. 230.

⁷ Diodor.; Hom. ibid. ⁸ Id. ibid.

¹ See vol. ii, book ix; Deut. xxxiv, 7.

² Hygin. Fab. 176; Apol. Bib. lib. iii, c. 8.

³ Id. ibid.; Pausan. in Arcadic. c. 3, 4.

⁴ Δαίμων δὲ ἐργάζετο Κρόνον κλέμειν τῷ Σεπταλυσσῇ; Ἀθηναῖον καὶ Λυκαόνι ἐπεί τὴν αὐτὴν. Pausan. in Arcad. c. 2.

⁵ See vol. ii, b. viii.

⁷ Vid. Pausan. in Arcad. c. 3.

⁸ Apol. ubi sup.

⁹ Pausan. ubi sup.; Apollod. ibid.

¹ Νυκτίμῳ δὲ Σεπταλὺν παραλαβόντις ὁ ἐπὶ Δευκαλίωνος κατακλυσμὸς ὄργανα. Apollod. ubi sup.

² Marmor. Arundell. Ep. iv.

Arcadia, namely three years after the death of Cecrops, and in the forty-third year of Moses. Jupiter was undoubtedly of years of wisdom, authority, and experience of the world, when he transacted the affairs of Lycaon's kingdom; and to this agrees, 2. What we farther find from the marble, that Mars the son of Jupiter was tried at Athens for the death of Halir-rothius the son of Neptune, A. M. 2473;³ so that before Jupiter's expedition to Arcadia, his sons were grown up and engaged in the world. 3. Epaphus was son of Jupiter, born of Io.⁴ Here indeed some of the genealogists make a mistake; for they suppose Io to be the daughter of Inachus; which would argue that Jupiter had lived three hundred years earlier than the times we are treating of, for Inachus reigned at Argos about A. M. 2154.⁵ But Apollodorus has observed and corrected this error; who remarks, that Io the mother of Epaphus was not daughter of Inachus, but of Jasus.⁶ Jasus, the father of Io, was son to Triopas king of Argos;⁷ so that Io was Triopas's grand-daughter. Triopas was the sixth king of Argos from Inachus;⁸ for Apis ought not to be inserted amongst the Argive kings.⁹ Now if we count the number of years from the first year of Inachus to the last year of Triopas, we shall find them to amount to three hundred and fifteen.¹ Compute then three hundred and fifteen years from A. M. 2154, the first year of Inachus, and we come down to A. M. 2469, in which year Triopas died. If Triopas lived to see his grand-daughter matched to Jupiter, as certainly he well might; then Io might marry him about seven or eight years before Jupiter's expedition into Arcadia; or if she was not grown up until some years after her grandfather's death, yet Jupiter's acquaintance with her proves very well his living in these times. 4. Minos is said to have been the son of Jupiter, born of Europa daughter of Agenor.² This I am sensible is a false account of Minos, and therefore, though it might easily be made to coincide with the times of Jupiter, as Europa is generally said to have been the sister of Cadmus, yet, as it would not be a true account of Minos's ancestors, it would be trifling to offer any thing about it. The Minos so much talked of among the Greeks was contemporary with Dædalus;³ and Dædalus was the son of Eupalamus,⁴ who had a daughter that was married to the second Cecrops;⁵ and his son Dædalus with Minos flourished about the time of Ægeus,⁶ who reigned

³ Id. Ep. iii.

⁴ Hygin. Fab. 155; Apollod. lib. ii, c. i, sec. 3.

⁵ See vol. ii, b. vi.

⁷ Pausan. in Corinthiac. c. 16.

⁹ See vol. ii, b. viii.

² Apollod. Biblioth. lib. iii, c. 1; Hygin. Fab. 155.

³ Apollod. Biblioth. lib. iii, c. 14, sec. 5; Diod. Sic. lib. iv, c. 77.

⁴ Apoll. ibid.

⁶ Apoll. ibid.

⁶ Apollodorus. Bib. lib. ii, c. 1.

⁸ Castar. in Euseb. Chron.

¹ Vid. Castor. in. Chronic. Euseb.

⁵ Id. ibid. lib. iii, c. 14, sec. 5.

at Athens from A. M. 2697 to A. M. 2745;⁷ so that this Minos lived about one hundred and fifty years after Moses's death. The placing this Minos about these times, agrees perfectly well with the accounts we have of his descendants down to the Trojan war; for he was in the third generation before that expedition; for the sons of Minos were Deucalion and Molus, and their sons Idomeneus and Meriones warred at Troy.⁸ Sir John Marsham very judiciously observes from the hints of the ancient writers, that there were two Minos's; that the former was the grandfather of the latter; that the length of time and the inaccuracy of writers had caused them to be both taken for one man; and that their genealogy rightly stated would stand thus. Tectamus son of Dorus, Asterius son of Tectamus, Minos of Asterius, Lycastus of Minos, the second Minos of Lycastus, Deucalion of Minos, Idomeneus of Deucalion.⁹ This is the true account of this family, and according to this account the first Minos stands five generations before the Trojan war; in the same line of descent before Idomeneus who warred at Troy, as Tros king of Troy does before Hector. And this agrees with what is related of this Minos, that he stole Ganymedes from Tros his father: for not Jupiter, but this Minos was anciently recorded to have committed that rape.¹ Farther; this time of Minos agrees with what the marble records, that he reigned at Apollonia, A. M. 2573.² Hellen, who was father of Dorus,³ and therefore grandfather of Tectamus, the progenitor of the family, was about Jupiter's age; for Amphictyon, who was brother of Hellen,⁴ succeeded Cranaus, and reigned at Athens in the year 2484,⁵ i. e. about eight years after Jupiter's being in Arcadia. Now count down from Hellen to Idomeneus, who warred at Troy, and we have Hellen, Dorus, Tectamus, Asterius, Minos, Lycastus, Minos the second, Deucalion, and Idomeneus; that is, nine generations from Hellen, who was contemporary with Jupiter, to the Trojan war. We find a generation more in the families of Thoas and of Diomedes above-mentioned, and a generation less in the family of Agasthenes. In the Arcadian roll of kings we have but seven descents from Nyetimus to Agapenor; but agreeable to this, in another line of Hellen's descendants, we have exactly seven down from Hellen to Glaucus, who exchanged armour with Diomedes in the fields of Troy;⁶ namely, Hellen, Æolus, Sisyphus, Glaucus, Belle-

⁷ Cecrops began his reign in Attica A. M. 2423; see vol. ii, b. viii. Count the years of the several reigns of the Attic kings in Chronic. Euseb. down to Ægeus, and Ægeus's reign will fall in the years I have allotted to it.

⁸ Diodorus Sic. lib. v, c. 79: Homer. Il. i, ver. 245; Il. 6, ver. 650.

⁹ Marsham. Can. Chronic. p. 243.

¹ Εχμῶντος γὰρ ὡς τοῖς Κροτωνίαις, καὶ τοῖς Διὰ φωνὴν ἀπαρτῶσι τοῦ Γανυμήδεος, ἀλλὰ Μίνωα. Athenæus Deipnosophist. lib. xiii, p. 601.

² Marmor. Arundell. Epoch. 11.

³ Id. ibid.

⁴ Homer. Il. 6, ver. 235.

⁵ Apollodor. Biblioth. lib. i. c. 7.

⁶ See vol. ii, b. viii.

rophon, Hippolochus, and Glaucus,⁷ who commanded the Lycians.⁸ Thus, allowing the difference arising from descents happening by the elder or the younger children, the true account of Minos's genealogy synchronizes with the descents in other families, and confirms the times of Jupiter agreeably to them. 5. Lacedæmon was son of Jupiter and Taygete daughter of Atlas;⁹ according to the marble Lacedæmon reigned at Laconia about A. M. 2489.¹ The marble joins Eurotas and Lacedæmon together;² but Eurotas was really Lacedæmon's predecessor. Whether the composer of the Marble Chronicle apprehended his Epoch something too early for the reign of Lacedæmon, and by joining Eurotas with him intended to hint, that the year he fixed on fell in Lacedæmon's, or at most in Eurotas's reign; or whether he supposed Eurotas, at the time he mentions, took Lacedæmon into partnership of his kingdom, I cannot say: but take it either way, and the time of Lacedæmon's birth must prove that Jupiter lived in these times. If Lacedæmon was taken partner with Eurotas in his kingdom A. M. 2489, he might be a young man when thus admitted to reign with him, perhaps not thirty, and so might be born about A. M. 2460, and this year falls sixteen years before Jupiter's expedition to Arcadia. If the epoch rather belongs to Eurotas than to Lacedæmon's reign, still Lacedæmon must have been born about the time above-mentioned; though he waited some years, and was of riper age, when Eurotas left him his kingdom.³ Bacchus was son of Jupiter and Semele, daughter of Cadmus.⁴ Now Cadmus came to Thebes, A. M. 2486.⁵ Cadmus did not marry Harmonia the mother of Semele until after he was settled there.⁶ Apollodorus suggests that eight years had passed before he married.⁷ Semele born of these parents could not be grown up for Jupiter, until above twenty years after. Suppose her twenty-one when Jupiter fell in love with her, and we shall fix the time of this amour to about thirty years after Cadmus came to Thebes, to A. M. 2516. Jupiter was now an old man, for his son Mars was grown up, and tried, as has been said, before the court of Areopagus, forty-three years before this time. Jupiter therefore must now have been above ninety, perhaps about ninety-five; an age, we may think, too

⁷ Id. II. ead. ver. 150—205.

⁸ II. 5, ver. 876.

⁹ Apollodor. Biblioth. lib. iii, c. 10; Hygin. Fab. 155; Pausan. in Laconic. c. 1.

¹ Marm. Arundell. Ep. viii.

² Αφ' ἑυροτάς καὶ λακεδαίμον λακωνίας βασιλευσέντι ἐν τῇ ΧΗΗ' Δ' [Γ] β. βασιλευσέντος Ἀθωνος Ἀμυρσίου. Marmor. ibid.

³ —Eurotas, ότι δε, καὶ οὗτος αὐτῷ πατρὶν κρηστῶν, Σισύριον καταλιπὼν λακεδαίμονα. Pausan. in Lacon. c. 1.

⁴ Hygin. Fab. 155; Apollodor. Biblioth. lib. iii, c. 4, sec. 2; Diodor. Sic. lib. iii, p. 186, lib. iv, p. 147.

⁵ See vol. ii, b. viii.

⁶ Diodor. Sic. lib. iv, c. 2.

⁷ Apollodor. Biblioth. lib. iii, c. 4, sec. 2.

advanced for so gay an amour; but we must recollect the length of men's lives in these ages, and consider, that when Moses, who was Jupiter's contemporary, died at one hundred and twenty years of age, he had not lived until either his eye was dim, or his natural force abated.⁸ Thus we find reason to suppose that Jupiter had been about ninety-five years old A. M. 2516, i. e. in the third year after the Israelites' exit out of Egypt; and, consequently, that he was born about A. M. 2421; that he was about fifty-two when his son Mars was tried at Athens; about fifty-five when he made his expedition into Arcadia; about forty-eight when he courted the mother of Epaphus, and about thirty-eight when he addressed Taygete, of whom was born Lacedæmon. Now these particulars are all so probable in themselves, so consistent with one another, and supported by concurrent hints from such different writers, that instead of supposing a want of proof of the times of Jupiter, we have rather reason to be surprised, that so many such reasonable and concurring intimations can be picked up, to fix with any appearance of probability the epoch of a man, whose whole life and actions have been for ages disguised, by an almost infinite heap of fable blended with them; not to mention the defects of the ancient profane history, and the thousands of years between us and him.

I know nothing which can be objected to the placing Jupiter in this age, but some accounts we have in the mythological writers of persons said to be descended from him, who lived in ages later. Thus Jupiter is said to be the father of Hercules, born of Alcmena wife of Amphitryon;⁹ of Castor and Pollux, born of Leda wife of Tyndareus;¹ of Perseus, born of Danae daughter of Acrisius;² of Æacus the father of Telamon and Peleus;³ of Arcesius the ancestor of Ulysses,⁴ and of many others. Now, if he really was the father of any of these persons, he must have lived about three generations only before the Trojan war. Perseus was indeed about five descents before that expedition; but the other heroes I have named were grandfathers or contemporaries with the grandfathers or fathers of the warriors at Troy. But let us observe, that the mythologists recorded many of their heroes as being descended of the gods, though other persons were their real parents. Thus Autolycus was said to be the son of Mercury, when in truth Dædalion was his father;⁵ and this happened either, 1. When a hero had borne the name of one, who had lived ages before him. In length of time, the father of the former came to be reputed the father of the latter; both being taken for but one and the same man. This was the case of ⁸ Deut. xxxiv, 7.

¹ Id. ibid.

² Apollod. lib. iii, c. 11, sec. 6; Ovid. Metam.

³ Αυτολυκος ———— Ἑρμῆος πατρὸς αὐτοῦ, Δαδάλωντος δὲ αὐτὸν τῷ ἀνδρὶ λογῶφ. Pausan. in Arcad. c. 4.

⁹ Hyg. Fab. et al.

⁴ Id. ibid.

⁵ Ovid. ibid.

Hercules: there were two of that name; one indeed a son of Jupiter,⁶ who lived ages before the son of Alcmena.⁷ But the latter Hercules having copied after the illustrious actions of the former, in length of time both were taken for one and the same person; and the history and parentage of both ascribed to him,⁸ and a fable was easily invented for the wife of Amphitryon being with child by Jupiter.⁹ Or, 2. When Jupiter, Neptune, Mercury, and the other persons ranked with them came to be deified, princes and rulers thought it not only an honour, but good policy, and conducive to the management of their affairs, to derive their pedigree from some of them. Alexander the Great would have done it in his day,¹ and reasons of state were his motives for it.² Arrian thought he had as good a title to it as the more ancient heroes;³ and if the matters were rightly considered, not to be blamed for attempting it.⁴ It raised them high in the common estimation; and they were reputed to have the greater influence, powers, and protection, the greater the god was from whom they could derive their descent.⁵ Thus Pausanias thought he might assert, that the son of Phoroneus would never have been esteemed equal to the son of Niobe, upon a supposition that Jupiter was Niobe's son's father;⁶ and this was Homer's reason for Asteropæus not being able to cope with Achilles. Asteropæus was said to be only the descendant of a river god, but Achilles's pedigree was deduced from Jupiter.⁷ It is easy to suppose, that when these opinions were in repute, kings and governors would be fond of ennobling themselves by the divinity of their ancestors; and they might find it no hard ⁶ Diodor. lib. v, c. 76.

⁷ Ἡρακλῆς αἰ δὲς γαστρίῳ παμπόλλους ὄντοι πρόγονοι τε γαστρίῳτος ἔξ Ἀλεμνῆος. Id. ibid.

⁸ Τοι δὲ ἔξ Ἀλεμνῆος Ἡρακλῆς πατρὸς πατρὶν ὄψα, καὶ ζῆλατι γαστρίῳ τις τε παλαιὸν προσημῶν, διὰ τὰς αὐτὰς αἰτίας τύχῃ τε τῆς ἀθανάσιος, καὶ χρόνῳ συγχωρησέν, διὰ τὴν οὐκ ἐκείνῃ δοξῇ τοῦ αὐτοῦ ἡναι, καὶ τὰς τε πρότερον πράξεις αὐτοῦ μεταπείσῃ, ἀντιθέτω τῶν πολλῶν τ' ἀληθῆς. Diodor. lib. v, c. 76.

⁹ Vid. Apollodor. Biblioth. lib. ii, c. 4, sec. 8.

¹ Arrian. de Expedit. Alexand. lib. iii, c. 3; Plutarch in Alexand; Quint. Curt. lib. v.

² Illud pene dignum risu fuit, quod Hermolaus postulat à me, ut avereretur Jovem, cujus oraculo agnoscor.—Obtulit nomen filii mihi: recipere ipsis rebus quas agimus haud alienum fuit: utinam Indi quoque Deum esse me credant: fama enim bella constant, et sæpe etiam, quod falso creditum est, veri vicem obtinuit. Curtius, lib. viii, sec. 8.

³ Arrian. lib. vii, p. 504.

⁴ Οτι δὲ αἱ δυνάμεις τῶν γαστρίῳ αὐτῶν φέρων, αὐτὸ τὸ αὐτῶν δυνάμεις αὐτῶν πλημμελῆμα, αἰ μὴ καὶ σοφισμῶς αὐτῶν τυχόν αὐτῶν ὑπὸ τῶν τε σέμειν αὐτῶν. Arrian ibid.

⁵ χαλεπὸν τοι κριθῆναι Κρονίδης
Παῖσιν ἐκείμηναι, Ποταμῶν, πρὸς ἀγῶνας.
Τὸ κριθῆναι μὲν Ζῆος Ποταμῶν ἀλμυρῶνται,
Κριθῆναι δ' αὐτῶν Διὸς γὰρ Ποταμῶν ῥοταῖται.

Hom. Il. 9, ver. 184.

⁶ Ἐγὼ δὲ αἰ αὐτῶν, αἰ καὶ ἐμῶν οὐκ αὐτῶν Νηὶς παῖδι καὶ αὐτῶν, αἰς τῶν αὐτῶν δυνάμεις. Pausan. in Corinthiac. c. 34.

⁷ Homer ubi sup.

matter to succeed in their claims, when their statesmen and officers in the highest employments might think pretences of this sort, how ill-grounded soever, yet capable of promoting the public good, by the effect they might have upon both prince and people.⁸ Their vates or their oracles could secure them their title;⁹ or history and genealogies being but little known in these times, it was easy to insert a god at the head of a family. There might be no necessity of going far back to do this with security; and some families were so fortunate, as to be divine this way by both parents; Ulysses's descendants shone with this double lustre.¹ Or, 3. The gods were introduced into families to preserve their honour, to prevent the infamy of their ancestors coming down to posterity. Thus Tyro the daughter of Salmoneus had two children before she married, namely Pelias and Neleus the father of Nestor.² She loved to walk upon the banks of Enipeus;³ but we are not told who the gallant was, whom she so often met there. When she came to be delivered, she took care to be in private,⁴ and got rid of the children in the best manner she could;⁵ and was after reputably married.⁶ Thus she behaved in every step like a person sensible of having exposed herself to infamy, but desirous to avoid it. Posterity derived honour to her descendants from the accident. Neptune was said to have been in love with her, and in the shape of the river Enipeus to have been the father of her two children.⁷ Thus again Danae the daughter of Acrisius played the harlot with Proetus,⁸ and her father, enraged at the dishonour done his family, would admit of no excuse for her misbehaviour, but exposed at sea both her and the infant.⁹ In after-ages a fable was sufficient to clear her character; Jupiter was said to have been the father of her child, and to have wrought a miracle to gain access to her.¹ The Greeks were not historians in the early times; and when their poets and mythologists began to

⁸ Utile esse civitatibus, ut be viri fortes, etiamsi falsum sit, ex diis genitos esse credant: ut eo modo animus humanus, velut divinæ stirpis fiduciam gerens, res magnas aggrediendas præsumat audacius, agat vehementius, et ob hoc impleat ipsas securitate felicius. Varro in Fragment, p. 45. Ἀγαθὸν δὲ καὶ τῷ ἔθνει ὁ λόγος ἀληθεῖα χροῖσθαι, ὥς ὅταν αἱ πόλεις μὴ θεοὺς, ἀλλὰ τίς ἀρχὴν θεῖον, καὶ ἐπὶ κακῇ αὐτοῖς καὶ πονηρῇ ἀναψύξῃ. Plato de Legib. lib. iv, p. 830, Edit. Ficin.

⁹ Οὐδὲ ζῶντι Ἡρακλῆς θύει τιμὰς ὁμοῖοι, καὶ τελευτήσαντι ἀποσθῆναι πρὸς τὴν θεὰν τὴν Δαίμονος ἐπιθεσσομένης ὥς βούη τιμὰν Ἡρακλῆα. Arrian. de Expedit. Alex. lib. iv.

¹ Nam mihi Laertes pater est, Arceusius illi,
Jupiter huic
Est quoque per matrem Cyllenius addita nobis
Altera nobilitas: Deus est in utroque parente.

OVID. METAM.

² Apollodor. Biblioth. lib. i, c. 9.

³ Ibid.

⁴ Γενήσασα κρυφὰ δίδυμους. Ibid.

⁵ Πανθὰς ἀντίθετον Ibid.

⁶ Id. ibid.

⁷ Apollodor. Biblioth. lib. i, c. 9.

⁸ Id. lib. ii, c. 4.

⁹ Id. ibid.

¹ Ibid.

dip into the registries of families, it would not have been borne to have had the vices of the ancestors of the great brought into open view; especially when writers of genius could readily, from the theology then in vogue and the fable of the age, find a reputable and secure cover for them. Now one or other of these reasons may evidently be assigned for the instances to be met with of any of the reputed gods of the heathens being engaged in gallantries with the ladies of later ages than about the times of Moses, and in particular for the several pretences of Jupiter's having descendants later than can be consistent with the time of life above supposed to belong to him.

There is, I think, one instance, which should not be entirely passed over without taking notice of it; which would place Jupiter not later, but a great deal earlier than his true age. Jupiter is said to have been the father of Argus by Niobe daughter of Phoroneus.² This Argus succeeded Phoroneus, and was king of Argos,³ and began to reign there one hundred and ten years after the first year of Inachus,⁴ i. e. A. M. 2264,⁵ which are one hundred and sixty-nine years before the birth of Moses; so that supposing Jupiter to be the father of this Argus, would be to place him above a century and half earlier than the times we have contended for. I might observe, that the most exact writers took this account of Argus's descent to be rather common opinion than real fact.⁶ But there were two Argus's, one a king of Argos, who reigned there ages before Jupiter was born; the other was surnamed Panoptes, and lived in Jupiter's time, and Juno is said to have committed Io to his custody,⁷ but neither of them were descended from Jupiter. The former Argus was the son of Arestor; and hence Ovid was probably led into a mistake, thinking that Panoptes Argus; whom he calls Arestorides,⁸ was the son of this parent. Arestor married Inachus's daughter,⁹ and by her had Argus, who, upon Phoroneus leaving no son,¹ succeeded to his kingdom. The latter Argus was son of Agenor, the son,² or perhaps brother of Jasus.³ Jasus, as had been said, was father of Io, one of Jupiter's concubines; so that this Argus and Jupiter were indeed contemporaries; though Argus was not descended from him. We must expect to meet some seeming contrarieties in the genealogies of these times.⁴ But whoever will search may find such a concurrence

² Hygin. Fab. 155.

³ Apollodor. Biblioth. lib. ii, c. 1, sec. 2.

⁴ Vid. Castor. in Euseb. Chronic.

⁵ For the first year of Inachus's reign was A. M. 2154. See vol. ii, book vi.

⁶ Vid. Pausan. in Corinthiac. c. 22, c. 34.

⁷ Apollod. ubi sup.

⁸ Ovid. Metam. lib. i, ver. 624. Arestoridæ servandam tradidit Argo.

⁹ Pausan. in Corinth. c. 16.

¹ Id. c. 34.

² Apollodor. Biblioth. lib. ii, c. 1.

³ Pausan. in Corinth. c. 16.

⁴ Οἱ μὲν δὲ ἑλλήνων λόγοι διαφέρουσι τὰ πάλαι, καὶ οὐκ ἔστιν ἡμεῖς ἐπὶ τοῖς γένεσιν αὐτοῖς. Pausan. in Arcadic. c. 83.

in the accounts of so many different families, for the placing Jupiter where we have supposed him, and the solution is so easy of most, if not of all, that can be offered to contradict it; that if this of Argus or any other single instance could not be clearly refuted, yet it would not weigh against the number that agrees to it.

When Jupiter succeeded his father in his kingdom, he found his people in some measure disposed for civil life. Saturn had reduced them to some regularity, both of diet and manners.⁵ Rites of religious worship were instituted, and rules thought of to promote the peace of society.⁶ Care had been taken to form their language and their sentiments;⁷ by which means a sense of duty to their gods, and a good understanding, and spirit of justice and integrity were promoted amongst them towards one another.⁸ All this Saturn had done, not by rigour of power and compulsion, not by laws established with penal sanctions,⁹ without magistrates to enforce his dictates,¹ or to execute vengeance upon or restrain offenders. He had trained them to a simplicity of manners; and they were led by the influence and authority of his direction only to pursue and practise what he dictated for the public good.² And the great peace and quiet, ease and content in which they lived, sensible of no wants, but what they had a supply for, induced posterity to call their times the golden age.³ When Jupiter became king, he brought in a new scene of life and action. He taught his people to build houses;⁴ to gather corn, which until then had grown wild among the other fruits of the earth,⁵

⁵ Τὴν καθ' αὐτοὺς ἀνθρώπων ἐξ ἀγρῶν διαίτης ὡς ἑὸν ἔμμετον μετασχεῖν. Diodorus Sic. lib. v. c. 66.

⁶ Μαρτυρίας καὶ θεοῦ καὶ θεοῦ καὶ θεοῦ τὴν περὶ τὸν θεὸν νομοθεσίαν, καὶ τὰ περὶ τὴν νόμῳ καὶ νόμῳ καταδύξαι. Id. ibid.

⁷ Λογισμὸς ὡρῆς, καὶ τὰς τῶν νομοθετῶν θεοῦ. Id. c. 67.

⁸ Εὐσεβήσαντες ἅπαντες τὰς διανοήσεις, καὶ τὴν ἀποστολὴν τοῦ νόμου. Id. c. 66.

⁹ Sponte sua sine lege fides rectumque colebat,
Pœna metusque aberant; nec vincla minantia ferro
Ære ligabantur

OVID. METAM.

¹ nec supplex turba timebat
iudicis ora sui, sed erant sine iudice tuti.

Id. ibid.

² Διὰ τὴν πρῶτον τὴν νομοθεσίαν, ἀλλὰ μὴ μόνον οὐκ ὑπομνήσας συντάξας, παρὰ τὰς ὑπὸ τῆς ἀρχαίας τοῦ νομοθετῆς μακαρίων ἑὸν ἔμμετον, παρὰ τὴν ἀρχαίαν δίττον ἀπολαύσας. Diodor. Sic. lib. v. c. 66.

³ Ovid. Metam.; Hesiod. Erg. καὶ Ημφ. Diodor. ubi sup.

⁴ Τὸν οὐκ ἔχοντα καὶ ἀποκατεῖναι οὐρανόν. Diodor.

Tum primum subiere domos, domus antra fuerunt,
Et densi frutices, et junctæ cortice virgæ.

Id. ibid.

⁵ Diodor. lib. v. c. 66. In Saturn's days,

Contenti cibus nullo cogente creatis,
Arbuteus fetus montanaque fraga legabant,
Cornaque, et in duris hærentia mœra rubetis,
Et quæ deciderant patula Jovis arbore glandes . . .

OVID.

and to preserve and use it for food, and afterwards to sow and reap it in its season.⁶ He introduced a sense of property, appointed magistrates to dispense justice, and directed his subjects to bring their differences and disputes before them, and to submit to their determinations.⁷ Under his encouragement, the arts of working divers sorts of metals were attempted;⁸ arms were invented for a soldiery, and men were trained and disciplined for war.⁹ Shooting with the bow was much practised;¹ improvements were made in navigation;² and endeavours used for taming and managing of horses.³ Rules were agreed upon for nursing and educating children;⁴ music and physic were considerably advanced;⁵ and decent rites appointed for the funerals of the dead.⁶ Thus by a variety of useful designs he was adding strength and beauty, ornament and politeness to his kingdom; for the increase of which he in the next place attempted a correspondence with foreign states; to which end he assigned to one of his sons the office of embassies, and made him his herald to proclaim peace or war, and to conduct his treaties and alliances with the neighbouring kingdoms.⁷ By these arts, Jupiter endeavoured to cultivate his people; though we must not imagine that any of them were in his time carried up to perfection, like what they were brought to in after-ages; nor that so many and such divers designs could be set on foot by him at once. The persons recorded as his assistants, and who presided in their respective provinces over the designs committed to their management, were Neptune and Pluto his brothers, Juno his wife, Vesta and Ceres his sisters, Vulcan, Mars, Apollo, Mercury, Venus, Diana, and Minerva his children,⁸ and after-

⁶ Καὶ τὴν κατήχασιν αὐτῆ, (σπυ,) καὶ φυλακὴν ἐπιποιεῖν καὶ σωφρονεῖν κατεφύλαξε.
Diodor. ubi sup.

Semina tam primum longis Cerealia sulcis

Obruta sunt

⁷ Πρωτον μιν γὰρ ἀνέστησαν καταδικάζει σφιν τῶν ἀδικημάτων τὸ δίκαιον ἀλλήλους δίδουσι τὰς ἀφάρτους, καὶ τὸ βίη τι πρᾶτ' αὐτοῖς ἀπὸ τῆς αἰτίας καὶ δικαστῶν τὰς ἀμειψόμενους; δίκαιον.—Diod. lib. v, c. 71.

² Ἀφροδίτη πρώτη γίνεται τῆς σφῆς τοῦ σφαιροφρασμοῦ ἀπασκῆ καὶ τῆς σφῆς τοῦ χαλκῶν καὶ χρυσοῦ καὶ ἀργυροῦ, καὶ τῶν ἄλλων οὐκ ἐν τῇ τε πυρὸς φρασμῶν ἐπὶ δέχεται. Diodor. lib. v, c. 74.

⁹ Πάντων κατασκευαστὴν παροψάμην, καὶ ἐρυσσάμην καθοπλίσαν, καὶ τὴν ἐν ταῖς μάχαις ἐκείναις ἀνέστην ἀποτακτοῦ. Id. ibid.

¹ Επειτα δε και τα τοξια γινονται δαδαζα και συλλαβα τα σφη της τοξιας. Id. ibid.
C. 69.

² Πρωτον χρῆσασθαι ταῖς καὶ αὖθις λαλῶσαι ἡγασαί. Id.

⁹ Προσέτιτοι δι' αὐτὸ καὶ τὰς τῆς ἀγίας δαμασκῆς πύργων. Ibid.

⁴ Εύρω την ταπεινότητα καὶ τὴν θρηνητικὴν. σ. 73.

⁵ Της λαοφάνης οὐρανόθεν ἀναστρέφουσα, καὶ τῆς κατ' αὐτὴν λαοφάνης ὅτι ἐκ τῆς λαοφάνης οὐρανόθεν ἀναστρέφουσα. Ibid. c. 74.

⁶ Λειτουργία ἐκ τῆς τῆρας καὶ τῆς σφοδρᾶς καὶ τιμῆς τῶν τούτων μεταβολῆς, τῇ πρὸ τοῦ χρόνου, μνημῆμα καὶ στήλημα πρὸς αὐτῇ. Ibid.

⁷ Το καὶ ἀφροσπύζει τὰς ἐν τοῖς ποταμοῖς γινόμενας ἀνθρωπίνους καὶ διάλλους καὶ σαρδίας. Diodor. Sic. lib. v, c. 75. ⁸ Id. c. 69, 70, &c.

wards Bacchus became the author of inventions, which caused his name to be added to them.⁹ Jupiter must have been of years of maturity, before he could be ripe for forming such a kingdom as he projected; and consequently his children must be grown up for the employment he designed them. We must suppose that he did not assign them their provinces, and consequently that the arts, of which they were the directors, were not remarkably advanced, until they were of age to cultivate and conduct them; and if we examine, we shall find, that a due time for all these particulars may be very well pointed out in the term of Jupiter's life, as we have above settled it. Pluto, one of Jupiter's brothers, was appointed not only to direct what rites and ceremonies should be used at funerals, but also to declare what honours should be paid to persons deceased,¹ in order to convey their names, according to their deserts, down to posterity. And as Jupiter took care himself to settle the measure of his own fame,² and of the illustrious³ persons engaged with him in the execution of his designs, as well as to determine what sort of honours should be decreed to those who came after them;⁴ it might well happen, that Jupiter and his associates should come down to after-ages in a degree of honour higher than what any who lived after them could attain to, or than what would be given to any of his ancestors or other contemporaries; he having thus settled both his own and their fame in such manner and measure, as he and the person under his direction thought fit to record it. From hence it might happen, that when the ancient Greek heroes came to be reputed gods, twelve only attained the highest honours. They had their one common altar at Athens,⁵ and it was usual to swear by them.⁶ The Romans called them the Dî consentes,⁷ which word is supposed to mean the same as consentientes, and to intimate that these gods consulted and agreed together about what was to be done, and so, as has been hinted, the twelve Cretan worthies did about their public institutions. The Cretan worthies above-mentioned were six men and six women; and thus the Dî consentes were generally distinguished, as Varro sug-

⁹ Διότισιν δὲ μυθολογούμεναι αὐτοὶ γίνεσθαι τὰς ἀμύμονας καὶ τὰς περὶ ταύτην ἡγήσας, οἱ δὲ οὐνοποιῖαι, καὶ τὰς πολλὰς τῶν αἰ τῆς σαρραίας καὶ τῶν ἀποδυναμίζων, καὶ τὰς χήρας, καὶ τὰς τρώας παρέχουσιν αὐτοὺς ἐπὶ πολλῷ χρόνῳ. Id. c. 75.

¹ Διότῃ τιμὰς τῶν τεθνήσκοντων καταδίδωκεν. Diod. lib. v, c. 69.

² Vid. Diodor. c. 69.

³ Eund. ibid.

⁴ Τὸν αὖ Δία. λέγεται τοὺς ἀρετοὺς τῶν τοῦ Διὸς καὶ ἡρώων, οἱ δὲ ἀνδρῶν τὰς ἀξίας ἀπονομαι τιμὰς, &c. Diod. c. 71.

⁵ Περὶ τῶν ἑσπερίων τῶν δαδῶκα Διὸς. Plut. in Nicia, p. 531.

⁶ Μὰ τῆς δαδῶκα Διὸς. Aristoph.

⁷ Et quoniam (ut aiunt) Dei facientes adjuvant, prius invocabo eos: nec ut Homerus et Ennius, Musas, sed xii Deos consentes. Varro de Re Rustica. lib. i, c. 1.

gesta.² Ennius has put the names of the twelve Di consentes into the following distich,

Juno, Vesta, Minerva, Ceres, Diana, Venus, Mars, Mercurius, Jovis, Neptunus, Vulcanus, Apollo.

And these are the very names of the twelve illustrious persons, by whose joint endeavours the ancient Cretan³ polity was formed. They were enrolled with, and subordinate to Jupiter their president, in the roll of fame, settled for him and them in the age when they lived; and hence it came to pass, that when he, in after-ages, came to have divine honours paid to him, they also, next to him, were revered above other deities.

We must not suppose that Jupiter found a ready and universal concurrence of all the Cretans to submit to his institutions. Undoubtedly he met with many oppositions, though in time he surmounted all; which, I think, we may well suppose, from the character of his times handed down to us. He was at the head of only the silver age.¹ The commotions, which were in his days, give the poets a pretence to paint, in the best of colours, the great peace of his father's reign, when wars and fightings² were not heard of; and to say of Jupiter's times, that the former days were better, though they did not judge wisely concerning this matter.³ After-ages felt still greater troubles; so that Jupiter's times were happier than what followed,⁴ though they were not thought to be without alloy. The ancient writers hint, that many of the descendants of his ancestors lived under his government, or were in alliance with him. The Curetes, who were descended from his grandfather's brother,⁵ lived with their families in his kingdom. Their dwellings were in groves and shady valleys; they were shepherds and managers of cattle.⁶ He had part of his education among them,⁷ and we may suppose them well affected to him, and ready to support him with all their

¹ — Eos urbanos, quorum imagines ad forum auratæ stant, sex mares et feminæ totidem.—Id. ibid.

² For Juno is the person, whom Diodorus calls Εὐρυνομία ἡ λατρεῖται τῇ θυῇ τὰς ταπεινὰς σπιμυκάνας. Diodor. c. 73; Juno Lucina, fer opem; Ter. in Andria, Act iii, Scen. 1.

³ Sub Jove mundus erat, subiitque argentea proles.

OVID. METAM.

⁴ In Saturn's reign,

Non tuba directi, non æris cornua flexi,
Non galeæ, non ensis erot, sine militis usu
Mollia securæ peragebant otia gentes.

OVID. MET.

⁵ Eccles. vii, 10.

⁶ Though Jupiter's age was thought to be auro deterior, yet it was fulvo pretiosior ære. Ovid. ubi sup.

⁷ Diodor. lib. iii, c. 61.

⁸ Id. lib. v, c. 65.

⁹ Id. c. 70; Apollod. Bibl. lib. i, c. 1, sec. 3.

influence and strength in executing the designs, for which they in some measure had perhaps formed him.⁸ The Centimani lived, as I have observed, in Tartarus.⁹ They were in alliance with Jupiter; for he sent his captives in war to them, and they sent him out¹ of their dominions such persons as he might want or could be of service to him. The Cyclops were his artificers, and made him armour and instruments of war for his soldiery.² The only considerable families that opposed him, were the Titans, who were brothers of his father Saturn,³ and their dependants, and the children of Ops, who were the giants of their age and country.⁴ With the Titans, we are told, he had a ten years' war;⁵ but that at length he took them prisoners, and sent them to Tartarus.⁶ Diodorus Siculus gives an excellent character of these men;⁷ and Homer feigns that they had become the gods of the country⁸ into which they were sent as captives. Pausanias indeed remarks, that Homer was the first who said this of them;⁹ but probably he might be led to it by some opinion of their having been useful persons in the place where they lived, agreeable to what Diodorus afterwards thought of them. When the Titans were no longer able to head the opposition, Jupiter soon composed matters with their children. He married several of their daughters; and their sons removed out of Crete, and planted kingdoms in other lands. With the giants Jupiter had several engagements. These men would not be tied down to any social laws; they took for their subsistence what the earth afforded, wherever they could find it, and the improvements made in Jupiter's dominions invited them to frequent incursions, to plunder the inhabitants. They would come under no direction of Jupiter's appointments for the preservation of property, but took away from those who lived near their dwellings whatever they had a mind for;¹ so that there could be no public safety until a stop could be put to this licentious-

⁸ The pastoral life was in high esteem in the early times; and it was not thought foreign to the education of a prince, for him to be in some measure acquainted with the arts of it. Xenophon says, Παρὰ τὸν ἀγρὸν ἦν αἱ νομαὶ ἀγαθὴ καὶ βασιλικὴ ἀγαθὴ. τοῖσι γὰρ νομαὶ χρηαί, οἷσι, ὠφελίματα τὰ κτήνη ποιῶντα χρῆσθαι αὐτοῖς, τοῖσι βασιλικὰ ὠφελίματα πόλεις καὶ ἀνθρώποις ποικίλα χρῆσθαι αὐτοῖς. Xenoph. de Institut. Cyri, lib. viii.

⁹ Vid. quæ sup.

¹ Apoll. lib. i, c. 2.

² Ibid.

³ Diodor. lib. v, c. 66; Apoll. lib. i.

⁴ Apoll. lib. i, c. 6.

⁵ Apoll. lib. i, c. 2.

⁶ Ibid.

⁷ ὅτι καὶ οὐκ ὀλίγη εὐρεθὴν γινώσκει τοῖς ἀνθρώποις. καὶ διὰ τὴν αἰσθητικὴν εὐφροσύνην τυχὴν τιμῆς καὶ μετρίως ἀπαιτῶν. Diodor. lib. v, c. 66.

⁸ Θυὶς δ' ὀνομαστὴν ἀπαιτῶν

Τῆς προτάρταρος, ὡς Τίτῆς καλεῖται.

Il. ξ, ver. 279.

⁹ Τίτῆας δὲ ἀπαιτῶν αἰς ποικίλῃ ἐργασίᾳ Ὀμήρος, θυὶς αἰσθητικὴν εὐφροσύνην τὴν προτάρταρος. Pausan. in Arcad. c. 37.

¹ Σωμάτων ὑποχρεῖται καὶ νομαὶς πεποιθὸς καταδύσθαι μὴ πλοῦσι, ἀπαιτῶν δὲ τὴν δόξαν τῆς τιμῆς νομαὶς. Diod. lib. v, c. 71.

ness, which in a little time was effected by the death of these men, who were all slain by Jupiter and his associates.²

When Jupiter had settled his affairs in Crete, he and his worthies obtained for themselves great fame in foreign lands. Diodorus says, they travelled over almost the whole world;³ but their visiting the cities and states of Greece was enough to cause this report of them. There were several kingdoms growing up in these countries at this time; but the political arts were here only in their infancy; and so great a master of them as Jupiter, from what has been said of him, must appear to have been, may very well be supposed to be capable of instructing others in many points conducive to their public welfare. He and his agents were at all times ready to assist, with their persons or advice, any kingdom which thought fit to apply to them; and they always acquitted themselves so honourably to the several states which had made them application, and were so signally useful and beneficial to them, that a great sense of the good they had done went down to posterity; and in after-ages, when they were deified, each city took for its tutelar divinity some one of these Cretans, him or her, to whom their ancestors had been obliged in this manner. This is what Apollodorus suggests, who says, the gods chose their cities, in which each was to have their particular honours;⁴ thus Minerva became the deity of the Athenians,⁵ Juno of Samos,⁶ and others the gods of other cities. I would observe, that the time which Apollodorus fixes for this choice of their favourite cities, suits exactly with the age in which we place Jupiter. He says, it was in the days of Cecrops,⁷ probably a little before his death, about A. M. 2472.⁸ Neptune and Minerva went at this time to Attica; but they differed when they came there in their advice to the Athenians. Neptune thought their situation ought to direct them to sea affairs; Minerva was for having them lay the foundation of their prosperity upon other arts. We are told that Neptune and Minerva were so warm in this contest, that Jupiter came over to decide it;⁹ and that Minerva's advice was at length agreed to be taken, and thus Athens came to be reputed her city.¹ Mars at this time was probably amongst other attendants upon Jupiter; as Halirrothius the son of Neptune might come with his father. Agraulos, one of the daughters of Cecrops, was given to Mars to be his wife; but Halirrothius attempted to force her, upon which Mars killed him;² and for this crime Mars was tried in the court of Areopagus, A. M.

² Apollod. Biblioth. lib. i. c. 6.

³ Εἰσέθεν τῇ οὐρανῇ σχεδὸν ἀπῆσαν. Diod. lib. v, c. 71.

⁴ Εἰδὼς τοὺς θεοὺς πολλὰς καὶ λαλῶσθαι, ὅτι αὐτὸς ἐμῶν ἔχον τιμὰς ἰδίας ἀκέραι. Apollod. lib. iii, c. 13.

⁵ Id. ibid.; Plutarch. Sympos. lib. ix, Qu. 6.

⁶ Plutarch. ibid.

⁷ Cecrops died A. M. 2473; see vol. ii, b. viii.

⁸ Apoll. ubi sup.

⁹ Apoll. ubi sup.

¹ Apollod. ubi sup.

² Apollod. ibid.

2473.³ Thus as to time, the several hints we have of the lives and actions of these men do perfectly well agree with what is above fixed for their epoch.

About the year of the world 2476, Jupiter, as has been before hinted, made an expedition into Arcadia where Lycaon was king, a prince of some fame, and surrounded with a numerous offspring,⁴ but of most savage manners, and shed human blood at his sacrifices.⁵ He received Jupiter with an appearance of hospitality; but at the entertainment, the body of a child was served up to the table.⁶ Jupiter, moved at the sight of such a preparation, with the help of his attendants attacked Lycaon,⁷ who is said to have been turned into a wolf;⁸ and some learned writers have imagined, that a frantic madness seized him, and that he died of a distemper which might countenance this fiction.⁹ I rather think, that he fell by the hand of Jupiter;¹ and that the fable of his being turned into a wolf was invented ages after his death. By a hint we have in Pausanias, it seems as if the Arcadians did not leave off their barbarous custom of eating human flesh, at the death of Lycaon; for he tells us of a man, some years after Lycaon, who was turned into a wolf for ten years, upon his partaking of a banquet of human flesh; and adds, that if in that ten years he had not entirely abstained from such food, he must have continued a wolf all his life after.² Plato treats the representation of this person being turned into a wolf as a fable, and moralizes it to express his having been a tyrant, such a one being indeed as a wolf to his people.³ In length of time, the Arcadians extinguished from among their people the savage appetite above mentioned; and perhaps the method by which they reformed them was by an annual commemoration of the benefits they had received from the hands of Jupiter. In after-ages they erected an altar to him by the name of Lycæus, and instituted the Lupercalia to his honour; and when they performed the services appointed at this solemnity, perhaps the barbarities of Lycaon, and of some other person, who was afterwards for ten years not unlike him, might be recited to the people in such a manner as to occasion the fable, which was told afterwards respecting both. Pausanias, as well as Apollodorus, supposed that Jupiter had really been a deity at the time of these transactions.⁴ Pausanias supposes that Lycaon himself had at this time been a worshipper of Jupiter.

³ Id. ibid.; Marm. Arundell. Ep. 3; see vol. ii. b. viii.

⁴ Pausan. in Arcadicis; Apollod. Biblioth. lib. iii, c. 8.

⁵ Id. ibid.

⁶ Pausan. in Arcad.; Apoll. ibid.

⁷ Apoll. ubi sup.

⁸ Pausan. ubi sup.

⁹ The learned writers, who were of this opinion, are cited by the late Lord Bishop of Durham, in his most excellent Vindication of his Defence of Christianity, p. 25.

¹ Vid. Apollod.

² Pausan. in Arcadicis, c. 2.

³ Plato de Repub. lib. viii, p. 724.

⁴ Pausan. in Arcadic.; Apollod. Biblioth. lib. iii, c. 2.

that he had dedicated the altar, and instituted the Lupercalia.⁶ But the Marble suggests a more probable time for the rise both of the games and altar; namely, in the reign of Pandion the son of the second Cecrops, who was king of Athens above two hundred years after the time of Lycaon.⁶ Pausanias and Apollodorus had neither of them formed a true judgment of the progress of the heathen idolatries; nor were they apprised, that the Greeks did not worship hero-gods in these ages; but that the elements and lights of heaven were at this time the objects of their devotion.⁷ Jupiter himself paid his worship to these gods; and offered his sacrifices to the sun, to the heaven, and to the earth;⁸ so that it must be impossible, that whilst Jupiter was alive, and known to be but a mortal man, and was himself a worshipper of divinities of a superior nature, any king or people whatever could think him a god, and erect altars and offer sacrifices to him. We cannot at this distance of time form any certain judgment of the then state of the Arcadians: but from the stay which Jupiter made in this country, from the apparent good understanding between him and Lycaon's children, and from the honour which the Arcadians paid to his memory in after-ages, we may justly suppose, that Lycaon's cruelties had made both his children and subjects weary of him; that they were all ripe for a revolt, and that Jupiter found it no hard matter to deliver his subjects out of his hand, and settle their affairs to their universal satisfaction. Apollodorus indeed reports that all the sons of Lycaon, except Nyctimus, had been killed by Jupiter;⁹ but from Pausanias this appears not to have been fact; for after Lycaon's death they separated into divers parts of the country, and built each his city, except Oenotrus, who went away with a colony into Italy.¹ Nyctimus succeeded Lycaon in his kingdom;² and Jupiter stayed some time with him, and probably assisted him in settling his affairs, and during his stay courted Callistho sister of Nyctimus,³ of whom was born Arcas, who, at the death of Nyctimus, was made king of Arcadia.⁴

Jupiter and his whole family were at Thebes in Bœotia at the wedding of Cadmus.⁵ Jupiter then gave Harmonia to Cadmus, to be his wife; for Harmonia was not the daughter of Mars and Venus, as many of the ancient writers suggest,⁶ but the daughter of Jupiter and sister of Dardanus.⁷ Cadmus mar-

⁶ Ibid.

⁶ Marmor. Arundell. Ep. 18.

⁷ Φαισθίαι μὲν αἱ πρῶτοι τῶν ἀνθρώπων ἄνθρωποι τῇ Ἑλλάδι τούτους μόνους θεοὺς ἠγνοῦναι, ὡς αὐτῶν τινὶ πολλὰ τῶν βαρβάρων, ἢ λῆν, καὶ σελήνῃ, καὶ γῇ, καὶ ἀστρά, καὶ ὕδατι. Plat. in Cratylō.

⁸ Πρὸ δὲ τῆς μάχης πρὸς τοὺς γιγαντας τῶν αἰ Κρήτῃ, λέγεται τοῦ Διὸς θυγατρὶ ἢ λῆν καὶ ὕδατι καὶ γῇ. Diodor. lib. v, c. 71.

⁹ Apollod. ubi sup.

¹ Pausan. in Arcad.

² Ibid.

³ Ibid.

⁴ Pausan. et Apollod.

⁵ Apollod. lib. iii, c. 4.

⁶ Id. ibid. sec. 2; Pausan. in Bœot. c. 5; Hygin. Fab. 148.

⁷ Vid. Diod. Sic. lib. v, c. 48.

ried about eight years after he came to Thebes;⁸ so that his wedding was celebrated about A. M. 2494; in which year therefore Jupiter and his Cretan worthies made him this visit. About one or two and twenty years after, when Semele, who was born of this marriage, was grown up, Jupiter came to Thebes again, and grew enamoured with Semele. The mythologists say of Semele, that she wished to find Jupiter's embraces such as Juno had experienced them.⁹ Semele was very young when Jupiter addressed her; but Jupiter was above ninety years old.¹ Semele might not be fond of the disparity of his years; but would have liked him better, if he had been no older than when he married Juno. However, she was with child by him, and probably died of hard labour at the birth of Bacchus; and her being thus lost, and the child preserved, added to some such story as I have suggested, about the difference between her age and Jupiter's, was ground enough for the mythologists to invent all they offer about the death of Semele, and the birth of the Grecian Bacchus.²

We are not told how long Jupiter lived, nor who succeeded him in his Cretan dominions; and I am apt to think, that when he died, no one person became king of the whole island. The brazen age came next after the silver times of Jupiter;³ an age of great wars and commotions in the then known world.⁴ Colonies about this time marched from many countries to find settlements; and Crete seems to have been invaded by some of them,⁵ and not united again under one head until the days of Minos.⁶ And the unsettled state the island might come into by this new scene, might occasion a failure of its history as to the death of Jupiter, and the illustrious persons who had acted with him; though the records of their great exploits, settled before their deaths, might come down to all posterity. After-ages took Jupiter for a god, nay for the supreme God of both Heaven and Earth;⁷ and when these notions of him took place, whatever memoirs there might have been found of his having once been a mere man, would of course be disregarded, and in time lost. The Cretans pretended, that they had in their country the tomb of Jupiter;⁸ but Callimachus thought that the divinity of Jupiter

⁸ Vid. Apollod. lib. iii, c. 4.

⁹ Vid. Diodor. Sic. lib. iii, c. 64.

..... Qualem Saturnia, dixit,
Te solet amplecti, Veneris cum fœdus initis,
Da mihi te talem

OVID. METAM.

¹ Vid. quæ sup.

³ Hesiod. Erg. et Hæsp. lib. i.

⁵ Diodor. Sic. lib. v, c. 80.

⁷ Vid. Hesiod. Homer. et al.

⁸ Cretensem, Saturni filium, cujus in illa insula sepulchrum ostenditur. Cic. de Nat. Deor. lib. iii, c. 21.

² Diodor. ubi sup.; Ovid. Metam.

⁴ Ibid.

⁶ Ibid.

was a sufficient confutation of all they had to offer about it: he says,

Κρητες αει φεισθαι· καὶ γὰρ τάφον, ὡ ἀνὰ, σεῖο
Κρητες ἐτεκμηναντο· σὺ δ' ἢ θανεις, ἐσσε γὰρ αἰετ'.⁹

Whether the Cretans had really such a monument as was pretended, or whether what the Scholiast writes was the fact, we cannot say. The Scholiast upon Callimachus remarks, that the inscription of the monument was originally ΜΙΝΩΟΣ ΤΟΥ ΔΙΟΣ ΤΑΦΟΣ, i. e. the tomb of Minos son of Jupiter; that length of time had worn out the word ΜΙΝΩΟΣ, so that the remaining part was only ΤΟΥ ΔΙΟΣ ΤΑΦΟΣ, or what we in English should render, the tomb of Jupiter, and that the unobserving reader, not taking notice of the word, which time had defaced, took it for Jupiter's sepulchre, when it was only that of Minos, who had the honour of being thought to be descended from him.¹

If we consider Jupiter's politics, we must allow him to have been a man of as great natural wisdom and sagacity as perhaps any age ever produced. His father Saturn had taken some steps towards civilizing the people; in whose days, the forming a language and introducing a method of reasoning was made a science;² and undoubtedly a rational foundation might be thus laid for government and society. Good maxims³ might be agreed upon for a right way of thinking; or, in other words, good principles instilled, and an uninformed populace led insensibly to sentiments conducive to peace and good order. But all the happiness which might this way be promoted, would not, without farther methods to establish and support it, have been either of large extent or long continuance. When Saturn opened to his people the prospects of the golden age, the scene was new, a scene of plenty without trouble; and I apprehend there could be no great difficulty in leading men to like it. He reduced them from a savage to a human diet.⁴

Sylvestres homines
Cædibus et fædo victu deterruit⁵

He persuaded them not to eat and devour one another; but to live in peace and security, and enjoy the plenty, which ⁹ Callimach. Hymn. i, in Jovem. v. 8.

¹ Vid. Marsham. Can. Chron. p. 243.

² Φασὶ Μινωισσὴν λογιζομένον ἄνθρωπον, καὶ τὰς τῶν σωματικῶν θεῶν πατρὸς τῶν ὀντων ταῦται. Diodor. Sic. lib. v, c. 67.

³ Αἱ γὰρ ἀρεταὶ προτάσεις ἀρχαί. Aristot. Analyt. post. lib. i, c. 32.

⁴ Ἀνθρώπων ἐξ ἀγρῶν διαίτης ὡς σὺν κτηνῶν μετακτείναι. Diod. c. 66.

⁵ Horat. lib. de Arte Poetic.

from the living^d creatures, and the natural fruits of the earth, their island would afford in abundance for them all. But this happiness must have had an end. As their numbers increased, their flocks and herds, not duly managed, would have failed; the natural produce of the isle, not improved by tillage, would have been eaten up, and the land in time would not have been sufficient to bear them. This was what Jupiter had to provide against, and in order to it he settled property, introduced arts, brought his people to be willing to quit the ease and inactivity of Saturn's halcyon days, and to engage in a variety of cares and labours, each in his own province, that improvements might be made, a plenty produced of all the conveniences of life, and a due course settled, for their circulating in a proper method to all sorts and ranks of men. Now this was a scene of life, which though reason would clearly point to, yet argument alone would not have been able to maintain against opposers. We find, that when the limitations of property were introduced into society, the αἰεθελαι and ἀγροται,⁷ men, who would not be tied down to them, appeared in every country. These men would have argued, that themselves had natural rights to the common life, and all Saturn's art of reasoning and persuading might not have prevailed upon them to depart from it. But Jupiter had a genius for business as well as for speculation; and knew how both to project what was proper to be agreed upon, and to give his schemes full effect among the people; and in order hereto, 1. He married the lady, who had the province of forming the reasonings of the Cretans,⁸ which undoubtedly was a wise step; for hereby he secured himself, that nothing should proceed from her art to oppose or contradict him; rather he became able to dispose all her influence and art to promote the purposes which he intended. 2. In the next place, he gathered a soldiery, and disciplined them for war.⁹ He provided himself power, to give weight to his directions, to protect all that would come into them, and to discourage and suppress those that might oppose him. 3. But he did not exercise this power so as to render himself odious; but rather gained the affections of his people by his use of it. He appointed magistrates, and com-

^d The poets imagine, that men ate no flesh in their golden age: thus Ovid,—

At vetus illa ætas, cui fecimus aurea nomen,
Fœtibus arboreis, et quas humus educat herbis
Fortunata fuit, nec polluit ora crurore.

METAM.

But I imagine, that this was not true of the days of Saturn. The heathen writers found memoirs of men's having anciently lived on a vegetable diet; and for want of true history they affirmed of many subsequent ages, what perhaps was fact only until the days of Noah.

⁷ Diodor. Sic. lib. v.

⁸ Diodor. lib. v, c. 68; Apollodor. Biblioth. lib. i, c. 3; Hesiod. Scymn.

⁹ Diodor. c. 74.

municated a share of his authority, and this in a manner so popular, that though he was the first who appears in this country to have had any true power to govern, yet he obtained the character of an opposer of tyranny, and was thought not to advance the prerogative of kings, but to be a promoter of the liberties of the people.¹ 4. Jupiter appointed his wife Juno and his children to teach the several arts and sciences which were necessary for the improvement of his people; and Diodorus Siculus has recounted to us the several provinces which belonged to each of them.² 5. His brother Neptune³ had the care of his navy. 6. Pluto had the province of determining what ceremonies should be used at funerals, and what honours should be decreed to dead persons, who had deserved well of the public.⁴ Thus all were excited to endeavour to promote the public welfare, and by rewards of the greatest influence over the most active spirits,⁵ and the most likely to raise an emulation, to support the government,⁶ rather than be the means of enabling any to weaken and undermine it. 7. He diligently watched over and severely punished every attempt which might be made by any private man, to disengage his people from a strict adherence to the public institutions; and therefore made an example of the unhappy Prometheus, who ventured to teach men the arts of which he was master, without having obtained a public appointment for his teaching them.

I am sensible, that the mythologists have so disguised the story of Prometheus, by their manner of telling it, that it may be thought impossible to ascertain what was in fact either his crime or his punishment. But let us examine and then judge of what they say about it. Hyginus relates, that before Prometheus, men were wont to ask for fire from Heaven, and did not know how to keep it from going out, when they had it; that Prometheus brought it down to the Earth on a ferula,⁷ and taught men to preserve it in ashes; that Mercury here-

¹ Ἐπειδὴ δὲ αὐτὸν καὶ τῇ ἐκείνου οὐχὶ ἀπασαν—ἐξουσίαν καὶ τῇ δημοκρατίᾳ ὑπογίγνων. Diodorus, lib. v, c. 71. Κεῖν δὲ γινώσκοντες οὐδὲ τῶν πατρῶν τῶν ζώοντων, καὶ περὶ ἑαυτῶν αὐτῶν πᾶσαν ἐπιστὴν καὶ φιλοσοφίαν, &c. Diodor. lib. iii, c. 61.

² Diodor. lib. v.

³ Ibid. c. 69.

⁴ Τὸν δὲ Ἀδης, λέγεται τιμᾶς τῶν τεθνηῶτων καταδεῖξαι. Ibid. Τὸν οὖν Διὶ λέγουσι μὴ μόνον ἀλλὰ καὶ ἀνθρώπων ἀφαιρῆσαι τὴν ἀσπίδα καὶ ποταμὸν, ἀλλὰ καὶ τὰς ἀρετὰς τῶν ἀνδρῶν τὰς ἀξίας ἀποποιεῖν τιμᾶς. Id. c. 71.

⁵ Οἱ μὲν γὰρ πολλοὶ ἀνδραγαθίας φαινομένην ἐξουσίαν τῶν ἀνδραγαθῶν—οἱ δὲ χαλεπὴν καὶ κρατερὴν τιμᾶν. Aristot. de Morib. lib. i, c. 3.

⁶ Vid. Polyb. Hist. lib. vi, c. 4.

⁷ The commentators upon the Greek poets seem to have thought the ferula, or ferula, a sort of tinder-box, ὡς γὰρ πυρὸς οὐλὴν φυλακτικὸς οὐ περιεῖ, πᾶσι ἔχον μαλακότητα καὶ τρεφόν το πῦρ, καὶ μὴ ἀποσβένναι διευκρινῶν. Procl. ad Hesiod. Erg. καὶ Hygin. and perhaps Hyginus was of this opinion. He says that Prometheus, after he had got the fire, latus volare non currere videretur, ferulam jactans ne spiritus interclusus vaporis extingueret in angustia lumen. Poetia. Astronom. c. xv.

upon, at the command of Jupiter, nailed him down to Caucasus; and set an eagle to eat his heart, which grew by night as the eagle eat it by day; that after thirty years⁸ Hercules killed the eagle, and set Prometheus at liberty. Thus Hyginus relates the fable of Prometheus;⁹ he has enlarged it, in some circumstances; in his astronomy.¹ According to this account, the teaching men how to kindle fire seems to have been what Prometheus was famous for; and this opinion may seem to be countenanced by a hint of Diodorus Siculus;² by the account we have in Pausanias of an altar erected in the academy at Athens;³ and by what Plato said of Prometheus.⁴ But I cannot think this was the fact; for, 1. The ancient Greek mythologists, and those who copied from them, tell the story quite another way;⁵ saying that he made men and animated them with fire. 2. The supposed fact upon which Hyginus's fable depends, was not true, for it was not Prometheus, but Phoroneus who first taught the Greeks to kindle fire.⁶ 3. The altar at Athens mentioned by Pausanias was either of no note, very modern, or, more probably, what was said of it in Pausanias's time relating to Prometheus, was not true; for Lucian is express, that Prometheus never had temple or altar any where dedicated to him.⁷ 4. What Plato says of Prometheus's giving men fire, was not meant in the literal sense; but in allusion to the Greek fable of his having made men.⁸ 5. If his teaching men how to kindle fire had been the fact committed by him, how could this have deserved punishment? Lucian's ridicule of this notion is sufficient to induce any one to think, that the ancients could never have imagined a man condemned for an invention of such use and service to mankind. Now for these reasons I think, that this account of Hyginus was not the true ancient Mythos about Prometheus; but rather an opinion of some later fabulists, who thought they could this way find an easier solution of what was said about him. The soul of man was thought by philosophers, more ancient than the stoics, to consist of fire. It was an ancient opinion, that the Hebrew word, aish, for man, was derived from aesh, which in that language signifies fire;⁹ and very probably the philosophy of the times, in which what is said of Prometheus was first recorded, let those, who framed ⁸ In another place he says thirty thousand years. Astronom. c. xv.

⁹ Hyg. Fab. 144.

¹ Poetic. Astronom. c. xv.

² Πρὸς ἀλθιαν δ' ὡρτήν γνομένην τῶν πυρῶν, εἰς αὐτὰν τὸ πυρ. Diodor. Sic. l. v, c. 67.

³ Ἐν Ἀκαδημίᾳ δὲ οὗτος Προμηθεὺς ἱερός, καὶ θεοὶ ἀπ' αὐτοῦ πρὸς τὴν πόλιν ἐχούσι καίτοις λαμπράδας. τὸ δὲ ἀγαθόν, οὐκ οὐδὲν φησὶν εὐλαβεῖσθαι τὴν δαδὴν οὗ καίτοις οὗτος. Pausan. in Attic. c. 30.

⁴ Πῦρ μὲν παρὰ Προμηθεὺς. Plato. in Politic. p. 539.

⁵ Apollodor. lib. i. c. 7; Fulgentii Mythol. lib. ii, c. 9; Tatian. Orat. ad Græc.; Clem. Alex. Strom. lib. v.

⁶ Pausan. in Corinthiac.

⁷ Vid. Lucian. in Prometheo.

⁸ Euseb. Præp. Evangeli. lib. xi, c. 6.

⁹ Vid. Platon. Protag. p. 224.

the Mythos concerning him, to say he gave fire to his men; but not in that low and vulgar sense in which some writers of later ages imagined.¹ But let us see what the Greek writers say of him. They tell us, that having made men of water and earth, he gave them fire without Jupiter's knowledge; that Jupiter for this fact ordered Vulcan to nail him down upon mount Caucasus; where an eagle for many years preyed upon his liver, until at length Hercules delivered him.² This is their account of him: let us now examine, what they could design to intimate by it. Lucian indeed tells us, that the Athenians called the potters, who made earthen vessels and hardened them with fire, Prometheus's,³ but then he owns that they were the wits who talked thus:⁴ and this is indeed making a jest of, but not explaining the ancient fables. The philosophers treated these matters in a more serious way.⁵ We have in Eusebius what one of them would have said upon the subject.⁶ Prometheus, he says, was fabulously reported to have made men; because, being a wise man, here formed by his instructions men, who were in a state of the grossest ignorance; and Plato tells us, what the fire was, which he stole and added to them; namely, the arts which Vulcan and Minerva taught the people.⁷ Science is the fire, the life of man, though none but God did ever form man of the dust of the earth, and breathed into him the breath of life, so as to cause man to become a living soul;⁸ yet, what is said of Prometheus, taking it in the sense we have now offered, is not inelegant; though fables and similitudes are not to be too strictly taken; nor can instructing men be absolutely said to be making and giving them life. And now we may see how Prometheus offended Jupiter, and why Jupiter put a stop to him. Jupiter had appointed proper persons to instruct his Cretans, and agreeably to what was the sense of Joshua, who attended upon Moses,⁹ he thought it politically unsafe to permit any to be their teachers, but those who derived their authority from him; and therefore Prometheus, who had no such authority, was treated by him as a corrupter and seducer of the people. It is not so easy to say, what the punishment was, which Jupiter inflicted on him. What is told of the

¹ Nec vero Atlas sustinere cælum, nec Prometheus affixus Causaso—tradetur, nisi cælestium divina cognitio nomen eorum ad errorem fabulæ traduxisset. Cic. Tusc. Disput. lib. v, c. 3.

² Apollodor. Biblioth. lib. i, c. 7.

³ Lucian. in Prometheus.

⁴ They were the jesters upon Prometheus's materials, the σπουδαίοντες αὐτῶν πλάσας, καὶ τῶν αὐτῶν σπῆναι. Ibid.

⁵ Vid. Platon. in Protag. Cic. ubi sup.

⁶ Προμηθεὺς ὁ πλάττων ἀνθρώπων ἐμβλαστό· σοφὸς γὰρ ὡς αὖτε πλάττει αὐτοὺς ἀπὸ τῆς ἀγλαῆς διάπλατος μεταπλατῆς. Euseb. in Can. Chronic. ann. 332.

⁷ Ἀνθρώπος σοφὸς ἐστὶν τῶν πελάταιν καὶ μηχανῶν—ὡς δὲ τὸ τῆς Ἀθηνᾶς καὶ Ἥρας ὄνομα τὸ κοῖνόν αὐτοῖς ἐφιλοτεχνήτων, [Προμηθεὺς] λαβὼν ἐσφραγίσας, καὶ κλεψίας τῆς ἀπὸ αὐτῶν τέχνης τῶν τε Ἑρμῆς, καὶ τῆς ἄλλης τῆς τῆς Ἀθηνᾶς, δίδωσιν ἀνθρώποις. Plat. in Protag. p. 224.

⁸ Gen. ii, 7.

⁹ Numbers xi, 28.

eagle preying upon his heart or liver is indeed a mere fable; and we have hints, that lead to the rise of it. Herodotus remarks, that the Greeks had the names of almost all their gods out of Egypt,¹ and Diodorus observes, that there had been men in Egypt of all the several names, by which the illustrious Greeks were afterwards distinguished. Sol, Saturn, Rhea, Jupiter, Juno, Vulcanus, Vesta, and Mercurius were names, which had been given to famous Egyptians;² and thus the Egyptians had their Prometheus,³ who was one of their kings.⁴ In his time the river Nile was called the Eagle,⁵ and great inundations happening in his reign from the overflowing of this river, the concern he had for his country threw him into the deepest melancholy.⁶ But Hercules, an Egyptian so called (for there were three of this name, and the first and most ancient was an Egyptian,⁷) embanked the river, retrieved the country, and hereby⁸ relieved the king from the grief and concern which preyed upon him. Now from what was mentioned in the Egyptian records of this fact, the Greek fabulists took occasion to say, that an eagle preyed upon the heart or liver of Prometheus, until Hercules delivered him.⁹ And thus this part of the Mythos was not originally intended of the Greek Prometheus; nor does it at all belong to him. However, he was bound down to mount Caucasus. I imagine Jupiter banished him to some uncultivated mountain called by that name,¹ where he was obliged to confine himself to live, until after some years Jupiter recalled him again.²

¹ Herod. lib. ii, c. 50.

² Diod. Sic. lib. i, c. 11. We must not understand either Herodotus to mean, that the Greeks took the Egyptians' words for the names of their gods, or Diodorus, that the Egyptians had called their heroes by the Greek names; the fact was this, the Greeks formed names for their gods and heroes of the same import in their language, as the Egyptian names were in the Egyptian; as homo, the Latin word for man, expresses in Latin what Adam, the Hebrew word, does in Hebrew, both being of a like analogy to the word, which in each language signifies the ground; and this is what Herodotus and Diodorus intended about the Greek and Egyptian names; viz. that, as Diodorus expresses it, μεταμνησκόμενοι αὐτῶν ὀνομασίμῃς ὑπαρχόντων, they were analogous to one another.

³ Diodor. ibid.

⁴ Diodor. ibid.

⁵ ὅσα τῆς οὐραίας, καὶ τῆς ἑαυτὸς τε καὶ τοῦ ἑαυτοῦ ροῦματος, τοῦ μὲν ποταμοῦ Ἀστὸς ὀνομασθέντι. Diodor. lib. i, c. 19.

⁶ Τὸν δὲ Προμηθεῖα, ὅσα τῆς λυπῆς καὶ λύπης, ἀλλὰ τῆς τοῦ ἑαυτοῦ αἰσχύνης. Id. ibid.

⁷ Id. lib. iii, c. 73.

⁸ Diodor. lib. i, c. 19.

⁹ ὅσα καὶ τῶν παρ' Ἑλλήσι ποταμῶν τινῶς ὡς μύθοι ἀρχαῖα τοῦ ἀρχαίου, ὡς Ἡρακλῆος τοῦ Ἀστὸς ἀναιρέτος τοῦ τοῦ Προμηθεῖος παρὰ ὀρθοῦ. Diodor. c. 19.

¹ The mountain Caucasus is generally placed by geographers between the Euxine and Caspian seas. Apollodorus calls it a mountain of Scythia; but we cannot conceive that Jupiter should dispatch Prometheus to such a distance from Crete. I rather think some mountain of Crete was called by this name. As in after-ages very distant nations received the names of their deities from this island; so they might likewise the names of mountains, cities, and rivers. We find, the fable of Prometheus has travelled all over the world. In Alexander's time, mount Caucasus, the scene of his war, was said to be in India. See Strabo, lib. xv, p. 688, as before it had been placed in Asia. The fable of one age perhaps removed it from Crete into Pontus: a still later, with as much truth, might carry it thence into India.

² Apollodorus, lib. ii, c. 4, sec. 11.

The hints we have in the ancient writers are too short to enable us to pretend to give a large account of the respective lives of the several persons, who engaged with Jupiter in the scenes of action, which made him and them conspicuous to the age in which they lived, and created them that fame, which has come down to all posterity. Fable has told us many particulars of them all; but much of this may be set aside, by considering what can and what cannot belong to the age when they lived. I imagine they did not all settle in Crete during their whole lives. Apollo was a great traveller, and visited divers parts of Greece, endeavouring to form all he conversed with to an orderly and social life.³ Whether he began his travels before or at the death of Jupiter, I cannot determine. He came to Athens,⁴ went thence to Panopæus, a city of Phocis,⁵ where he killed Tityus, a man of huge stature and strength,⁶ who opposed and domineered over that neighbourhood.⁷ From hence he went to Delphos, where Themis then lived;⁸ who was the oracle of that place,⁹ being probably a very wise woman, capable of instructing the common people in many useful arts of life. Python governed here with violence and cruelty,¹ and would not have had Apollo admitted amongst his people; but Apollo prevailed against him and killed him.² Python was also surnamed Draco,³ and hence the fabulous writers might take occasion to invent what they say about Apollo's killing the huge serpent called Python.⁴ Apollo seems to have lived the rest of his life chiefly at Delphos; to have formed and instructed the people here; and to have been so much respected and admired by them, that posterity afterwards fixed him a temple in this place, and supposed him the god who gave the oracles here, which were so much sought to in after-ages.

We read of Pluto, that he left Crete and went to Tartarus, and carried away Proserpine the daughter of Ceres with him.⁵ Ceres herself, after her travels in search of her daughter,⁶ settled in Attica;⁷ where she became so famous for the method she taught in nursing Deiphon the son of Celeus, king of Eleusis, as to be said by a particular regimen to have made him immortal.⁸ By agreement with Pluto, her daughter Proserpine was to live with her two-thirds of the year, and the other third part in Tartarus; which occasioned the fable that Proserpine lived a third part of the year with Pluto, and the ³ Καθ' οὗ χρόνον τὸν Ἀπόλλωνος τὸν γὰρ ἑστῆκεν ἡμεῖς τὸς ἀνθρώπους αὐτοῦ τὴν ἀντιμετώπιον παρὰ τὸν ἑαυτοῦ. Strabo. Georg. lib. ix, p. 422.

⁴ Id. ibid.

⁵ Id. ibid.

⁶ Apoll. lib. i, c. 4.

⁷ Τίττον ἔχοντα τὸν τοῦτον, ὅμοιος ἀνδρῶν καὶ παρὰ τὸν ἑαυτοῦ. Strabo ubi sup.

⁸ Apollodorus ubi sup.; Strabo. ibid.

⁹ Apollodorus.

¹ Apollodorus.

² Id. ibid.

³ Strabo ubi sup.

⁴ Ovid. Metam.; Strabo, p. 423.

⁵ Apollod. lib. i, c. 5.

⁶ Id. ibid.

⁷ Antopin. lib. Metam. c. 2.

⁸ Apollod. ubi sup.

rest of her time with the gods above.⁹ The Arundel marble may seem to fix the time of Ceres's being in Attica something late, namely to A. M. 2596,¹ which is about eighty years after the ninety-fifth year of Jupiter.² But Ceres was sister to Jupiter,³ and therefore can hardly be supposed to have come into Attica so many years after Jupiter must have been dead. But I would observe, that the Marble Epoch records, that Ceres taught Triptolemus the son of Celeus to sow corn, and sent him to teach other nations. It is not likely, that Triptolemus began his travels before he was two or three and thirty; and his father Celeus might be born forty years before him. Now Ceres nursed Celeus when an infant.⁴ Let us count back from Triptolemus's travels to teach the sowing of corn, to the infancy of Celeus, when Ceres came into Attica, seventy-three years, and we shall fix her coming into that country A. M. 2523, i. e. near the time of Jupiter's death, seven years after his ninety-fifth year; about which time she may indeed be thought to have settled in Attica. Perhaps nothing more was intended in the Marble Epoch than to fix the time of Triptolemus's travels; and it seems to have fixed them agreeably enough to what might be the true time of his life; and Ceres might be said to teach him his art, merely because at the composing the Marble Epochs, Ceres was esteemed the goddess, who presided over this part of husbandry. Neptune was the great master of the seas, with Jupiter and his family; and we may suppose he managed and conducted all the voyages made by any of them. Plato tells us, that he settled and planted his children in the island Atlantis,⁵ which seems from Strabo to have been either an island near Eubœa,⁶ or in the Ionian Sea near to Elis,⁷ a city of Peloponnesus. In these and the adjacent seas Neptune had exercised his skill in sailing; and in some isle of these seas we may well suppose him to have lived, when he gave over a seaman's life. Mars and Minerva were frequently at Athens, if they did not constantly live there.⁸ Vulcan is supposed to have gone to Lemnos;⁹ Ops, who was called Rhea, removed from Crete to Phrygia, and dwelt on mount Cybelum, and became famous there.¹ The Arundel marble fixes the time of her appearing there to A. M. 2499,² which falls towards the latter end of Jupiter's life, and very well agrees to the times wherein we have supposed him to live. Ops was afterwards called Cybele from the mountain where she lived. She brought arts and sciences from Crete into these parts; and hence it came to pass, that in after-ages divine honours

⁹ Apollod. ubi sup.

² Apollod. lib. i, c. 1, sec. 3; Diodor.

⁴ Apollod. lib. i, c. 5.

⁶ Strab. Geog. lib. i, p. 60, 61.

⁸ Apollod. lib. iii, c. 4, 13.

¹ Diodor. lib. iii; Strabo, lib. x.

¹ Ep. xii.

Sic. lib. v, c. 68.

⁵ Plato in Critia. p. 1103.

⁷ Lib. vii, p. 346.

⁹ Id. ibid. lib. i, c. 3, sec. 5.

² Epoch. x.

² Vid. quæ sup.

were paid to her in this country, though in Crete no rites were ever instituted for her worship.³ Cybele's travelling from Crete into Phrygia might occasion some places as well as persons in Phrygia to have names given them, the same which had before been the names of persons and places in Crete. Thus we read of a mount Ida,⁴ and of the Idæ Dactyli in both countries. Juno, Vesta, Venus, Diana, and Mercurius were occasionally in divers parts of Greece, and celebrated in all for those arts in which they excelled. And thus, although I do not find it to have ever been fact, that Crete obtained an universal empire over all the states of Greece, though Aristotle thought it well situated and qualified for the acquiring such dominion;⁵ yet it appears, that its ancient inhabitants were most signally instrumental in introducing the first rudiments of polity into many of these nations, instructing both their kings and people to know how to be useful and beneficial to one another.

³ Οἱσι δὲ πολλὴ ὁ Σκεψίς ἐν τῇ Κρήτῃ τὰς τῆς Ρέας τιμὰς μὴ νομιζέσθαι μὴδὲ ἐπιχρημαζέσθαι. Strabo. lib. x, p. 472.

⁴ Ἰδὴ γὰρ τὸ ὄρος τὸ τῶν Τρῶων, καὶ τὸ Κρητικόν. Ibid.

⁵ Δόξαν δ' ἡ νῆσος [ἡ Κρήτις] καὶ πρὸς τὴν ἀρχὴν τῆν Ἑλληνικὴν περικύβηται καὶ κησθῆαι καλὰς. Aristot. de Rep. lib. ii, c. 10.

THE

SACRED AND PROFANE

HISTORY OF THE WORLD CONNECTED.

BOOK XI.

WHEN the Israelites saw, that Moses did not come down to them out of the Mount, they were greatly surprised; and gathered about Aaron, and required him to make them a god to be carried before them.¹ Aaron asked them for their earrings, which they forthwith brought him, and he melted them down, and a golden calf was made of them, and the people made acclamations, *This is thy God, O Israel, who brought thee up out of the land of Egypt.*² Aaron, when he saw the image received with such applause, built an altar before it, and proclaimed a feast unto the Lord;³ accordingly they met next day, and offered sacrifices to their idol, and celebrated their feast, and rose up to the games with which they were to end it.⁴ Moses at this time coming down from the mount,⁵ and entering into the camp, seeing the calf, and the people dancing before it, was exceedingly moved; and throwing down the two tables of the law, which he had in his hands,⁶ he took the idol and melted it; then reduced the lump of gold to powder, and mixed the powder with water, and made the children of Israel to drink it.⁷ After this he expostulated

¹ Exodus xxxii, 1.

² The Hebrew expression, ver. 4. rendered by our translators, These be thy gods, O Israel, which brought thee up out of the land of Egypt, may at first seem to hint that the Israelites had made gods, in the plural number; but the word elohim is known to be often taken as a noun singular, and the image here alluded to was but one, namely, the calf, and it was dedicated to only one God, the Lord; so that the words ought to have been translated in the singular number.

³ Exodus xxxii, 5.

⁴ Ver. 6.

⁵ Ver. 15..

⁶ Ver. 19.

⁷ Ver. 20.

with Aaron, what could induce him to lead the people into so great a sin.⁸ Aaron made the best excuse he could; represented the perverse disposition of the people, that they would not believe they should ever see him more, and that he could not avoid yielding to their importunity.⁹

The Rabbins think they can entirely excuse Aaron;¹ saying, that he was forced to a compliance; that the people had massacred Hur for opposing their demands, and would have killed Aaron, if he had not yielded to them. What authority they had for these assertions, I cannot say; I think we nowhere read of Hur as alive after the time of this affair; yet, if what they offer be true, I cannot see, that Aaron was innocent. No obstinacy of the people could have forced him without his own fault;² and he should have been willing to die, rather than have consented to, and been partaker of their sins. It may perhaps be supposed, that Aaron's compliance was attended with some circumstances which mitigated the fault, from Moses not replying to the apology he made,³ and from what is said of the people in relation to making the calf; that they made the calf which Aaron made;⁴ as if the making it was imputed rather to them than to him. Aaron indeed endeavours to clear himself of having had a hand in the actual making of the idol. I cast it, says he, i. e. the gold, which they gave me, into the fire, and there came out this calf.⁵ The expression is somewhat obscure, and the Rabbins tell us, that Aaron only cast the gold into the fire; that the calf came out by magic art; the melted gold being formed into the shape of an idol, not by Aaron, but by some invisible agent. This was one of their fancies; but Aaron could intend no such intimation. He designed only to plead that he was not actually the maker of the image; but that other persons, and not he, were the founders of it. He represents, that they required him to make them a god; that hereupon he asked them for materials; that they brought him their gold; then, says he, I cast it into the fire, I delivered it out of my hands to the use for which it was designed, into the furnace in which it was to be melted, and there came out this calf;⁶ i. e. I was no farther concerned in what was done; the next thing I saw was the calf. What was done farther was done by others, not by me; the workmen made the calf and brought it to me. And to this account, I think, what is re-

⁸ Ver. 21.

¹ Vid. Poole's Synops. in loc.

²

Justum et tenacem propositi virum
Non civium ardor prava jubentium,
Non vultus instantis tyranni
Mente quatit solida, &c.

HOM. CAR. lib. iii, ode 3.

³ Exod. xxxii, 21—24.

⁵ Ver. 24.

⁹ Ver. 22—24.

⁴ Ver. 35.

⁶ Ver. 24.

lated in the 4th verse of this chapter, should be agreeable. We render the verse, and he received them, at their hand, and fashioned it with a graving tool, after he had made it a molten calf; and they said, these be thy gods, &c. The present Hebrew text does indeed require a translation to this purpose. But if the fact was as this verse seems to represent it, surely Aaron was the person chiefly concerned in the workmanship of the image; and there could be no room for him to pretend to plead, that not himself but other persons were the makers of it. Upon this account I suspect, that the present Hebrew text in this verse has suffered a little, through the mistake or want of care of very ancient transcribers; that Moses most probably wrote the verbs, which we translate, and he fashioned it, and he made it, not in the singular, but in the plural number, like the verb (vejaomeru,) and they said, which follows them. The variation of the words thus miswritten is not so considerable, but that it might easily be made, without any great inattention in writing; especially, when the first verb in the period, and he took them, being singular, might lead to it. Now if we may take the liberty to make this correction, the verse would run thus: And he received it, i. e. the gold, at their hands, and they formed it in a mould, and they made a molten calf, and they said, this is thy god, O Israel. And thus this verse would agree with what is suggested in other places, that Aaron indeed received the gold which was brought him; but that the forming it in the mould, and making it into a calf, and proclaiming it a god, was not done by Aaron, but by others, by the workmen or artificers, and the people. But notwithstanding all this, whatever may hence be offered in mitigation of Aaron's fault, yet certainly all will be too little to prove him innocent; and agreeably hereto we find a great share of the guilt was imputed to him. The Lord was very angry with him to have destroyed him, but that Moses prayed for him.

Moses was commanded to punish the people for the wickedness they had committed. And upon finding them unarmed, and upon no guard, incapable of making opposition, he stood in the gate of the camp, and said, Who is on the LORD's side? Let him come unto me. And all the sons of Levi gathered themselves together unto him; and he said unto them, thus saith the LORD GOD; Put every man his sword by his side, and go in and out from gate to gate

⁷ I would take the word urn to signify here not a graving tool, as we render it. That is indeed its general acceptation; but it is used in a very different sense, 2 Kings chap. v, ver. 23. It there signifies a bag, or little chest, and by an easy metaphor from this use of it, it may denote a mould made to shut up like a chest, to contain and form the metal to be poured into it.

* The words of the text would be,

וַיִּקַּח מִיָּדָם וַיִּצְרֹם אֶת בָּרֶס וַיַּחֲדֹשׁ עֵגֶל מִסֵּכָה וַיֹּאמְרוּ אֵלֶּה אֱלֹהֶיךָ יִשְׂרָאֵל.

* Deut. ix, 20.

throughout the camp, and slay every man his brother, and every man his companion, and every man his neighbour. And the children of Levi did according to the word of Moses: and there fell of the people that day about three thousand men.¹

Our English version does not entirely come up to the Hebrew expression in the 25th verse; which we render, When Moses saw that the people were naked (for Aaron had made them naked to their shame, amongst their enemies.) The metaphor is indeed easy, to say they were naked, as being unarmed, and the Hebrew verb Paran is capable of being thus used; but this is not its whole signification, and it hints more than this in the place before us. The first and natural signification of the verb Paran is, *to free, or to set at liberty.*² It is thus used by Moses;³ the king of Egypt said unto them, Wherefore do ye, Moses and Aaron (taprinu æth hanam mimmanashau,⁴) let the people, or set them free from their works? From this sense the word was easily applied to express the freedom or liberty which people had on holy-days; or came to signify in general, to keep holy-day; and we find it thus used in Judges v, 2, for a true translation of that verse would be *Praise the Lord in or at keeping the feasts, or holy-days, of Israel.*⁵ To these the people willingly offered themselves; ⁶ they came, *behithnaddeb nam,*⁷ every one as his spirit made him willing,⁸ i. e. every one without compulsion, just as his inclination led him, and they behaved at them with the same freedom. For we must not suppose that the public games of any nation were at first under the regulations which time introduced; but rather, were a sort of voluntary meetings, where authority of magistrates, and subjection of inferiors were laid aside; and every one headed a party, or acted his part, or took his place to see the diversion, as it happened, or his fancy led him. And in a high scene of such diversion Moses found his people, ci paran hua;⁹ for they were keeping high holy-day, and at full liberty. The expression is remarkable; it is not ci paran, which had been enough to express, that they were at liberty, or keeping holy-day, but ci paran hua.¹ In the Hebrew tongue the use of this pronoun hua has sometimes a peculiarity, which I think has not been taken notice of. It generally signifies no more than THIS or THAT, or HE or THE emphatically; but it is

¹ Exodus xxxii, 26, 27, 28.

² Vid. Avenar. et al. Lexicograph. in verbo פָּרַן.

³ Exod. v, 4.

⁴ תַּפְרִינוּ אֶת־הָנָם מִמַּנְשָׁאֵנוּ. Heb. Text.

⁵ The Hebrew words are, בָּרַךְ מִרְעוּת בְּיִשְׂרָאֵל

Israel in serias feriando in.

⁶ Judges v, 2.

⁷ Text Heb. בְּחִתְּנָדֵב עָם.

⁸ This is the signification of the verb נָדַב. It is thus used Exodus xxxv, 21, 29, where the people came voluntarily to make their offering; every one giving, without any exaction, just what his inclination led him to.

⁹ כִּי־פָרַן הוּא. Heb. Text, Exod. xxxii, 25.

¹ Ibid.

sometimes used to denote a person's doing a thing of his own head, as we say in English, or without regard to the direction of any other. Thus in the case of Balaam, when God had allowed him to go with the messengers of Balak, if they came in the morning to call him;² because he was more hasty than he ought to have been, and went to them, instead of staying until they should come to him,³ it was said of him, not ci halak, that he went, but ci holek hua;⁴ i. e. that he went of his own head, or without being called. And thus in the plural number hem is used in Psalm xcvi. We translate the place, It is a people that do err in their hearts;⁵ but the Hebrew words express more. In his heart had been belibbo,⁶ or bilbabo;⁷ in their hearts had been bilbabam,⁸ or belibbam.⁹ But the words here used are lebab hem, which suggest, that people erred in heart, from acting of their own heads; from pursuing their own ways, or following their own imaginations; for this was the perpetual crime of the Israelites, and this was what the Psalmist here intended, as appears by the close of the verse, for they have not known my ways. And thus the word hua is here used in the passage before us; the people paran hua, were at loose hand, under no command or control. Distinctions and authority were laid aside, and every one at the games was his own man, and consequently the camp must have been in no condition of being called to order and a posture of defence, if a sudden exigence had required it.

From what I have said about the use of the word paran, it is easy to see, what the verse I am treating of expresses, namely, 1. That the people were upon no guard; in no posture of defence; under no direction or command of their proper officers; but were scattered up and down the plain at their games, as their fancy led them. And the LXX took this to be the meaning of the place, and accordingly translate it, Ἰδὼν Μωϋσῆς τὸν λαόν, ὅτι διεσπείραται,¹ i. e. Moses seeing the people to be scattered or dispersed. They were in no formed body to be able to make head against an enemy; and, 2. They were free of their armour, or unarmed, naked in this sense, not clothed to defend themselves against any violence which might be offered to them.² This was the condition in

² Numbers xxii, 20.

³ Ver. 22.

⁴ Psalm xiv, 1.

⁵ Psalm xxviii, 3.

⁶ Exodus xxxii, 25.

⁷ The word Paran, as I have observed, primarily signifies, to free or set at liberty, and from hence, by an easy metaphor, it denotes to free ourselves from, or put off any dress which we had upon us. Thus Paran Roeh, to free the head, is the expression for the high priest's putting off the attire he wore upon his head, Levit. xxi, 1; and likewise for women's putting off their head dresses, Numb. v, 18. And this use of the word intimates to us whence St. Paul took an expression in his epistle to the Corinthians. The woman, says he, ought to have power on her head, he means, ought to be covered; for to have the head

⁸ Ver. 21.

⁹ Psalm xcvi, 10.

¹ Psalm xv, 2.

² Psalm lxxiv, 8.

which Moses found them exposed to their shame,³ or in a shameful manner amongst their enemies. And certainly Aaron's conduct was very inconsiderate in this particular, for their enemies were not far distant. The Amalekites had not long before attacked them.⁴ And what might have been the fate of the whole people, if any considerable attempt had been now made, when they were so unguarded, that a small body of men, such as Moses here appointed from among the Levites, might go in and out from gate to gate of the camp, and without difficulty kill as many of them as they would.

Some learned writers have wandered far from what Moses intended here to hint, by taking the expression of the people's being naked in too strict a sense, as if the people were literally so, when Moses came to them. Monceius imagines, that Aaron had stripped them of their clothes; but the reasons he gives for doing it are very whimsical. He supposes that the persons who had been guilty of the idolatry had a tumor upon their groin, occasioned by their drinking of the water, into which Moses had strewed the powder of the idol;⁵ and that Aaron had stripped them, either, 1, to prevent an increase of their infection; or, 2, to discover to Moses, who were guilty, and who were innocent: or, 3, to cause the innocent to separate from the guilty, that they might escape their punishment. But the whole of this fancy is without foundation. It is like a whim of some of the fathers, who imagined, that the beards of those who drank of the water above-mentioned, turned yellow. Bochart mentions a version made in the thirteenth century, wherein the 27th verse of this chapter of Exodus is thus rendered: Slay ye every one his brother, his friend, his neighbour, even all those who have golden beards. And the gloss upon the text adds, that those who worshipped the calf had their beards turned into a gold colour; for the powder stuck to the hair miraculously. And Saurin tells us, that he had a Bible, printed at Antwerp in the year 1531, with this gloss in it.⁷ But the reader may be furnished with many fancies of this sort, if it be worth while to search for them.⁸ There are indeed other writers who contend, that the Israelites were found by Moses really naked; and endeavour to defend their opinion with a better appearance both of argument and learning. They suppose that the Israelites were dancing naked before their idol, and that the Egyptians had very ancient rites in their religious institutions, in imitation free, under no restraint, authority, power, is the Hebrew expression for being uncovered, and therefore not to have the head free, ἀφαιρηται ὁ κεφαλὴν ἐκ τοῦ καλύμματος. 1 Cor. xi, 10, to have power on the head, may denote the contrary, or to be covered. The apostle seems to have put a Hebrew idiom into Greek words, which, unless we consider what a like expression in Hebrew would suggest to us, do not at first sight express very clearly what he intended by them.

³ Exod. xxxii, 25.

⁴ Chap. xvii.

⁵ Chap. xxxii, 27.

⁶ Vid. Pol. Synops. Critic. in loc.

⁷ Dissert. 53.

⁸ Vid. Targ. Jonath. & Microsolymit.

of which the Israelites might celebrate their feast with this lewd diversion. They remark, that the Egyptians had dedicated a golden calf^o to one of their deities; from whence possibly the Israelites might take their pattern, and that both Plutarch¹ and Diodorus² hint very indecent practices in the Egyptian Sacra, and that there is a passage in Herodotus,³ which suggests that they solemnized games, such as might lead the Israelites into the naked dance here alluded to. This is the utmost that can be offered for supposing that Aaron really stripped the people. But to all this it is easy to answer: for, 1. The passage in Herodotus does indeed seem to hint some obscenity, of which the historian thought it not decent to give a full narration;⁴ but we must suppose a great deal more than is hinted by him, to make it come up to the purpose for which it is cited.⁵ But, 2. If what we find in Herodotus could be supposed to describe such a dance as the Israelites are by these learned writers said to have practised, yet it must be remarked, that what the historian alludes to, as well as the obscene Sacra in the Isiaca and Osiria of the Egyptians, were all of later date than the time of Moses. They were said to be the institutions of Isis,⁶ and were not introduced until after the Egyptians worshipped hero-gods; which did not happen until many years after the death of Moses.⁷ And therefore, 3. Though the heathen nations, when they had deserted the knowledge of God, which by revelation God himself had shewed unto them, did in time become vain enough in their imaginations to admit shocking turpitudes into their religious institutions, yet they sunk into these things by degrees; and we have no reason to think that the Egyptians were thus early so far gone as to afford a precedent, in any of their sacred games, for such a dance as these writers imagine; nor can I see, if they had, how Aaron can be conceived to have been so lost to all sense of decency, as to have copied after such a pattern.

^o Βου δαχμύον—ἐν τῷ αὐτῷ τῶν αὐτῶν δαχμύον. Plut. in lib. de Isid. et Osirid. p. 366. We may be allowed to translate cow here by our English word calf, if it be considered, that Herodotus called the Egyptian Apis so. Εχμ δὲ ο μωχος ὡς ο Απὸς καλομῶν. Herod. lib. iii, c. 28.

¹ In lib. de Isid. et Osirid. p. 358.

² Diodor. Sic. lib. i, p. 13.

³ Τυφόντος μὲν γὰρ δὲ μετὰ τὴν θύγατρίαν παύσαι καὶ παύσαι, μὴ μὲν κατὰ πολλὰ ἀνθρώπων. τὸν δὲ [ὅς τὸν αὐτὸν] τυφόντος, καὶ μὴ οὐκ ἐστὶν ἄλλος. Herodot. lib. ii, c. 61.

⁴ Suspicietur aliquis rem turpem et obscenam, quam aures honestæ, vix etiam in rebus profanis nominandam audire sustineant: quum Typhon in partem Osiridis eadaver in partes xiv, divisum disjecisset, lais perquirenda singula reperit præter pudendam, quæ in fluvium projecta mox a Phagro et Oxyryncho piscibus devorata fuerat: illius igitur loco ad ejus similitudinem factum τὸν ὅλον consecravit, cui etiam nunc diem festum Ægyptii celebrant. Hæc Plutarchus. Hoc etiam phallo perculti solitos in sacris illis execrandis Ægyptios probabile est. Vid Gronov. Not. in Herodot. lib. ii. p. 111.

⁵ Quod opinantur aliqui, Ægyptios in his sacris saltasse nudos et nudas, ut pudenda phallo percuterentur, hoc videtur gratis dictum.

⁶ Plutarch in lib. de Isid. et Osirid.

⁷ Vol. ii, b. viii.

In order to punish the Israelites for their idolatry, we are told that all the sons of Levi gathered themselves together unto Moses,² and we must think, from the strict orders given them,³ that they must have killed every one a man; yet the number of all who fell that day, were only about three thousand.¹ The Levites, men and children, were above two and twenty thousand.² The children indeed could not serve in the employment; but more than eight thousand of them were from thirty years old to fifty;³ and if only every one of these had killed a man, there must have fallen near three times the number above-mentioned. The vulgar Latin translation has the number three and twenty thousand; but this is a variation from the Hebrew text, for which there is no colour from any copy or other version. Some learned men have indeed supposed, that St. Paul suggested the same thing, but they misrepresent the design of the place to which they refer.⁴ St. Paul intended, in the verse they cite, to give the number, not of those who were slain for this idolatry, but who died of the plague for their fornication⁵ in the matter of Peor and of Cozbi.⁶ There is, I confess, a difficulty in supposing, that only three thousand should fall, if so many hands, as the whole tribe of Levi afforded, had taken up arms against them. But the real fact appears to be this: not the whole tribe of Levi, but only all the sons of Levi, who were among those unto whom Moses called, came together to this service. That the whole tribe were not engaged in it, is evident from the charge which Moses gave them. They were to slay every man his brother,⁷ and every man his son,⁸ if any so nearly related came within their reach; but this could not have been supposed, if all the Levites had taken up the sword; for then all their brethren and children would have been with them, and there could have been none at the games so nearly related as a son or a brother, to have been slain by them. But farther, Moses stood in the gate of the camp,⁹ and called to the persons whom he employed; and the persons he called were not within the camp; for he directed them to enter the camp, to go in and out from gate to gate of it.¹ Had he called to those who were at the games, he needed not to have gone to the gate of the camp; but rather have called upon the spot where they were playing. I therefore think, that there were numbers out of every tribe, who had retired from the camp, whilst this idolatry was acting in it. Unto these Moses called from the gate, and from among these all the Levites, to about such a number as might, in executing what he directed, kill about three thousand men, gathered themselves together unto him.

¹ Exodus xxxii, 26.

² Numbers iii.

³ Numb. xxv.

⁴ Ver. 29.

⁵ Ver. 27.

⁶ Chap. iv, 48.

⁷ Ver. 18.

⁸ Ver. 26.

⁹ Ver. 28.

¹ 1 Corinth. x, 8.

² Exod. xxxii, 27.

³ Ver. 27.

Moses had enjoined them to take up the sword² for God's service; and, if they desired to acquit themselves so as to be accepted by him, to be careful not to make the work they were engaged in a scene of their own private passions and partialities, but to execute the vengeance strictly and indiscriminately upon all that should happen in their way, how near and dear soever they might be to them. On the next day Moses remonstrated to the people the greatness of their sin; but promised to endeavour to intercede for them.³ God was pleased so far to admit his intercessions, as to order him to prepare the people to march for Canaan,⁴ telling him, that he would send an angel before them to put them in possession of the land,⁵ but that himself would not go up any farther in the midst of them.⁶ When Moses acquainted the people herewith, they were greatly dejected.⁷ God hereupon appointed them a solemn humiliation to avert his displeasure;⁸ and Moses erected a tent without the camp, and called it the tabernacle of the congregation.⁹ Upon this the cloudy pillar descended, in the sight of all the people, and here the Lord talked with Moses,¹ and at length promised him, that his presence should go with them, and give them rest.²

It must at first sight seem a very monstrous thing to us, that the Israelites, in the midst of what God was doing for them, whilst his presence among them was so visible, whilst the sight of his glory was like a devouring fire on the top of the mount: I say, whilst God was thus marvellously and evidently near to them, it may be thought very strange and unaccountable, that they should so presently fall away from what had been commanded,³ and fall into what must appear to us a most gross and senseless folly: to set up a calf to make it a god; to pay worship to it. It is generally said, that the Israelites dedicated the calf in imitation of what the Egyptians practised in their religion. This was Philo's opinion,⁴ which St. Stephen confirms;⁵ and therefore what some have supposed, that Aaron formed the calf to represent a cherubim,⁶ is not only a mere groundless fancy, but contradicts what the sacred writer hints; namely, that their turning their

² The commentators seem to suspect a difficulty in this place, supposing the verb why to be here used not in its common acceptation; but I am at a loss to find out what could lead them to any such imagination. The Hebrew text verbally translated would run thus: For Moses said, fill your hands, i. e. with the sword, or take up your sword, to day for the Lord, for each man is to be against his son and his brother, that he [God] may give you a blessing; the meaning of the verse must be obvious to every reader.

³ Exodus xxxii, 30.

⁴ Chap. xxxiii, 2.

⁵ Ver. 4.

⁶ Ver. 7.

⁷ Ver. 14.

⁸ Phil. Jud. de vit. Mosi, lib. iii, p. 677.

⁹ Spencer. de Leg. Heb. lib. i, c. 1, sec. 1; Witsii Ægyptiac. lib. ii, c. 2.

¹ Ver. 34.

² Ver. 3.

³ Ver. 5.

⁴ Ver. 9, 10, 11.

⁵ Chap. xx, 4.

⁶ Acts vii, 39, 40.

hearts back to Egypt, their inclining to have such Sacra as were there used, was what led them to set up this object for their worship.⁷ It has been argued by some, that the Israelites intended here to fall entirely into the Egyptian religion, and that the deity to whom they made the calf, was some god of the Egyptians;⁸ but I think it plain that this was not the fact. The Israelites evidently designed to worship, in the calf, the God who had brought them out of the land of Egypt;⁹ and their feast was accordingly proclaimed, not to any Egyptian deity, but to THE LORD; to JEHOVAH;¹ to their own God; so that their idolatry consisted, not in really worshipping a false deity, but in making an image to the true and living God. Now this being the fact, and this fact being expressly condemned as idolatry by the Apostle,² the Papists are from hence unanswerably charged with idolatry for their image worship, and they can in nowise justify themselves; for what they offer, if it might be admitted, would vindicate the Israelites as well as them. It will be still said, what, if the Egyptian religion was indeed full of these senseless superstitions, is it not strange that the Israelites should be so fond of continually imitating the rites and usages of that nation? I answer; this must indeed seem strange and unaccountable, if we can imagine, that they were for copying after these patterns merely because they were Egyptian; but the fact appears in another light; if we consider that the wisdom of Egypt was in these days of the highest repute of any in the world; and that the Egyptian institutions were not at this time suspected to be absurd, unreasonable, or superstitious;³ but on the contrary, reason and philosophy were thought uncontestably to support the practice of them.⁴ I cannot imagine that the Israelites had been such servile imitators of Egypt, as some learned writers are apt to represent them. We see in fact they had rejected their gods; being convinced, that the God, who had brought them out of the land of Egypt was the only God to be worshipped by them;⁵ and had they been as sensible that the calf they had made was a real absurdity, they would, I dare say, not have been at all induced to make it by any knowledge or imitation of the Sacra of the Egyptians. But according to the rudiments of the world in these ages, reason was thought very clearly to dictate, that images were necessary to a lively and significant service of the deity;⁶

⁷ Acts vii, ubi sup.

⁸ Exod. xxxii. 4.

⁹ 1 Corinth. x. 7.

¹ Οὐδὲ γὰρ αὐτοὶ, καὶ μυθεύει, καὶ ὑποδουλοῦμαι (αὐτῶν καὶ τομίζουσι) ἡμετέροις κρημαῖς. Plutarch. in lib. Isid. et Osirid. p. 353.

² Καλὸς οἱ νόμοι καὶ πρὸς τὰς θύσας ὁρᾷται, δὴ οὐ μάλιστ' ἀπὸ τούτων λόγον καὶ φιλοσοφίας μετατρέχειν ἀναλαμβάνει, οὐκ οὐδ' ἀποκρίνεται τῶν λεγομένων καὶ δραμάτων αὐτῶν. Id. ibid. p. 378.

³ Exodus xxxii, 4, 5.

⁴ Plutarch, ubi sup. Antiquos simulachra Deorum confinxisse, quæ cum opulis animadvertissent, hi, qui adissent divina mysteria, possent animam mundi ac partes ejus, id est, Deos veros videre. Varro in Fragment. p. 40.

and such a sort of image as the Israelites now used, was accounted to be by nature designed for this very purpose,⁷ and the wise and the learned thought they worshipped φωσφους, and esteemed it a part of natural religion to dedicate these Sacra. Thus, I think, I might justly say of the Israelites, that in all they did in this matter, *there had no temptation taken them but what is common to man.*⁸ It is indeed true, that God had made a covenant with this people,⁹ the import and design of which was to engage them to *obey his voice,*¹ and to *walk in the ways which he should command them,*² that they might not walk in the counsels of their own hearts,³ but should trust in the Lord with their whole heart, and not lean to their own understanding.⁴ This was to have been their wisdom, this their understanding in the sight of all nations;⁵ if they would have bowed their hearts to adhere to it. But when or where has mankind been truly ready to pay unto God this obedience of faith? Our first parents would not be restrained by a divine command, from what they thought in reason was to be desired to make them wise.⁶ And thus the Israelites would have images, when they thought reason and natural science to be for them; though God had said expressly, make no image.⁷ In the same spirit and way of thinking, the learned Greeks in their day would not admit the doctrine of the cross, though attested to come from God by *the demonstration of the spirit and of power,*⁸ because it seemed foolishness to them.⁹ And I need not remark how difficult it is at this day, to persuade men to have their faith stand, *not in the wisdom of man, but in the power of God.*¹ *Vain man would be wise, though man be born as the wild ass's colt.*² A restless inclination to pursue what seem to be the dictates of human wisdom, rather than strictly to adhere to what God commands, has ever been the πειρασμος ανδρανθρωπος;³ I might say the human foible, the seducement, which has been too apt to prevail against us. Our modern reasoners think they argue right, when they contend, that "if we find any thing in a revelation, which appears contrary to our reason, no external evidence whatsoever will be sufficient to prove its divine original; but that upon observing any thing in it so opposite to our natural light and understanding, we ought to give up such a revelation as absurd, and therefore false, whatever extrinsic proofs may be offered in support of it." But was not this the part which the ⁷ Τιμωρας δια τωτων το θεον ως παρυστον ανωστην και ουκ ηρησεν. Plut. ubi sup.

⁸ 1 Corinth. x, 13.

¹ Exod. xix, 5; Jerem. vii, 22, 23.

² Jerem. vii, 24.

³ Deut. iv, 6.

⁴ Exod. xx, 4.

⁵ Ver. 23.

⁶ Job xi, 12.

⁹ Exod. xxiv, 5—8; Deut. v, 3.

² Jerem. ibid.

⁴ Prov. iii, 5.

⁶ Gen. iii, 6.

⁸ 1 Corinth. i, 24.

¹ Chap. ii, 5.

² 1 Corinth. x, 13.

Israelites here acted? To have no images to direct their worship was, according to the then theory of human knowledge, contrary to what they called science and reason. As soon therefore as Moses was gone from them, they regarded not the commandment which had been given them. The external proof, which they had of its divine authority, weighed but little with them, in comparison of what they imagined reason dictated very clearly in this matter.

Some learned writers endeavour to argue, that if the Israelites had not fallen into idolatry, by setting up the calf, God would not have given them the ritual or ceremonial part of the law.⁴ They say, that at first God *spake not unto them, nor commanded them concerning burnt-offerings or sacrifices;*⁵ *but gave them his statutes, and showed them his judgments, which if a man do, he shall even live by them;*⁶ adding to these only his *Sabbaths, to be a sign between him and them, that they might know him to be the Lord.*⁷ They observe, that the ten commandments, and the statutes which follow to the end of the xxxiii chapter of Exodus, do well answer to these accounts of the prophets, and were indeed such a law of moral righteousness, *that the man which doth these things shall live by them,*⁸ without any further observances to recommend him unto God. But when the Israelites would not walk in God's statutes, but despised his judgments,⁹ and had their eyes after their fathers' idols;¹ that then *the ceremonial law was added because of their transgressions,*² then God *gave them also, or over and above what he had before commanded them, statutes that were not good, and judgments whereby they should not live;*³ namely, the positive and ritual precepts, which Moses was then directed to deliver to them. We may find this opinion at large in the work called the apostolical constitutions;⁴ and there is an appointment in the xxth chapter of Exodus, which perhaps may be thought to favour it. An altar of earth, or of rough un-

⁴ Antequam offenderent Dominum, idolum illud erigentes, Decalogum tantum acceperunt; post idololatriam vero et blasphemias, ceremonias legales multas dedit, ad nihil aliud utiles, quam ut eos remorentur a dæmonum cultu et sacrilega superstitione gentium. Isidor. Clâr. Schol. in Ezek.; Vid. Spencer. de Legib. Heb. lib. i, c. 4, sec. 4.

⁵ Jerem. vii, 22.

⁶ Ver. 12.

⁷ Ezek. xx, 24.

⁸ Gal. iii, 19.

⁶ Ezek. xx, 11.

⁷ Rom. x, 5.

¹ Ibid.

³ Ezek. xx, 25.

⁴ Ὡς ἂν νομοὶ ἀπλὸν ὡς βούλωνται τῆ φύσεως, καθάρων σωτηρίαν, ἅγιον, ὃ ὡς καὶ τὸ ἴδιον ὄνομα ἐκκατεθέτο, τελειόν, ἀπελλήνη. διὰ λόγον πληρὴν, ἀμώμων, ὑπερφόρων ψυχῶν—Νόμος δὲ ἐστὶν ἡ δικαιοσύνη, ἢ ἅπαρ τῆ τοῦ λαοῦ μοσχοποιεῖσθαι—ὁσος αὐτοῖς ἐπομοδεύσῃ αὐτοὺς φύσιν, ὅς ἐστι δικαίος ἐστὶ, δὲ καὶ νόμος ληγεται διὰ τὸ φύσιν δικαιοσύνης πρὸς κοινότητα. Const. Apost. lib vi, c 19, 20. Ὅταν δὲ ὡς τῆ λαοῦ ταῦτα ἀνιμώμενος ὑπάρχει, καὶ βούλῃ αὐτὴ τῆ θεοῦ ἐκκατεθεῖσθαι—τοῖς ἐργασίαις ὁ θεὸς ὡς τῶν αὐτῶν δικαιοσύνης αὐτοῦς εὐδοκίαν φορτισμὸν καὶ σπληνισμὸν ἐλάττω Ibid.—ὡς τῆ θεοῦ μίση—τὰ ἐπὶ τῶν πνευματικῶν. c. 22. καὶ ἀπὸ τοῦ τοῦ φύσεως νομῶν, ἀλλὰ πάντας τὰ διὰ τῆς σωτηρίας ἐπὶ τῶν πνευματικῶν. Ibid.

hewn stone, was commanded at the giving of the law, for all their sacrifices;⁶ but at the institution of the ritual injunctions a different altar was appointed, of much workmanship and of another nature;⁶ which may seem to hint, that the observances belonging to it were not a continuation of what was at first intended, but rather an addition of new rites, like the altar to which they belonged, and of a different composition. But I answer,

I. What is contended for, that God did not intend and command the ritual part of the law of Moses, before the Israelites set up the calf, is not true in fact. The xxv, xxvi, xxvii, xxviii, xxix, xxx, and xxxi chapters of Exodus show us undeniably, that the Tabernacle was ordered; the utensils and furniture of it directed; the order of the Levitical priesthood was appointed; the persons designed for the offices of it were named; their vestments and rites of consecration, the altars, and the daily offerings were prescribed; in a word, the foundation and frame of the whole Jewish law was laid and formed by the immediate designation of God to Moses, before the people had corrupted themselves by their idolatry. Had these chapters followed after the making of the calf; or had we any reason to imagine that the contents of them were not dictated to Moses until his second going up into the mount,⁷ after he had made intercession for the people;⁸ there would be some appearance in favour of the argument above stated. But since the several directions contained in these chapters were all evidently given to Moses, before the Lord intimated to him to get him down from the mount, for that the people had corrupted themselves;⁹ whatever men of learning may think to offer, to prove that the ritual law had not been intended until the Israelites fell into idolatry, it is indisputably plain, that the fact was otherwise; and that God was delivering to, and instructing Moses in all the parts of it, before the idolatry of the calf was contrived or intended by the people. And agreeably hereto we may observe,

II. That, after Moses had made intercession for the Israelites, and was commanded to renew the tables,¹ to erect the tabernacle,² and had a visible sign of God's approving it, by the cloud's covering it, and the glory of the Lord filling it, and God's speaking unto him out of it;³ we may, I say, observe, that in all these things nothing new or before undesigned was done. But the very law was now farther completed, which God before the sin of the calf had in part delivered to them, and it was completed exactly according to, and without any deviation from the directions, which had

⁶ Exod. xx, 24.

⁷ Chap. xxxiv, 4, 28.

⁸ Chap. xxxii, 7.

⁹ Chap. xxxv, xxxvi, xxxvii, xxxviii, xxxix.

¹ Exod. xl, 34; Levit. i, 1.

⁶ Chap. xxvii.

⁶ Chap. xxxii, 31; xxxiii.

¹ Chap. xxxiv, 1.

before the commission of that sin been given unto Moses. And the visible signs of God's presence upon the erecting the tabernacle were exactly according to what God promised him, the first time of his being with him on the mount; namely, that HE would *meet him at the door of the tabernacle of the congregation, and speak there unto him, and there meet with the children of Israel, and sanctify the tabernacle by his glory, to sanctify the tabernacle and the altar, and Aaron and his sons, and to dwell amongst the children of Israel, and to be their God.*⁴ All these things were promised, before the Israelites set up their idol, exactly according to what was afterwards performed. Therefore, if there be indeed any passages in Scripture, which represent the ritual part of the law as being given upon account of the idolatry of the people, we must find some way to new model the history of Moses, or it will not agree with them. But,

III. There are no texts of Scripture, which intimate, that the ritual law had been given because of the Israelites' idolatry. The abettors of this opinion do indeed commonly cite the words of St. Paul,⁵ or of the prophets Jeremiah⁶ and Ezekiel,⁷ to countenance their assertion; but it is easy to show, that the passages to which they refer have no such meaning as they would put upon them. For, 1. St. Paul indeed says, *the law was added because of transgressions;*⁸ but he does not here treat of the ritual part of the law in opposition to the moral, nor suggest, that any one part of the law was added for the Israelites' not having punctually observed some other part of it; but he speaks of the whole Mosaical dispensation, and argues, that it had been instituted upon account of the wickedness and corruption of the world. When God brought the Israelites out of Egypt, true religion was almost perished from the face of the Earth; for men in all nations were greatly corrupted both in faith and manners. Hereupon God was pleased to choose to himself the house of Jacob, to be a *peculiar treasure unto him above all people;*⁹ and he revealed himself to them, and gave them a law, to recal, and to preserve them from going after the heathens to learn their ways, *until the seed should come,*¹ *and to shut them up unto the faith, which should afterwards be revealed,*² *and to bring them unto CHRIST.*³ This is the argument of the apostle in the place cited, which suggests, not that God gave the Israelites first a moral law, just and holy and good, and afterwards when they would not observe this, then a ritual, weak, and unprofitable law, to punish them for their wickedness and folly; but it represents, that God gave them the law, as Moses has ⁴ Exod. xxix, 42, 43, 44, 45.

⁶ Jerem. vii, 22.

⁸ Galat. ubi sup.

¹ Gal. iii, 19.

² Ver. 24.

⁵ Gal. iii, 19.

⁷ Ezek. xx, 11—26.

⁹ Exod. xix, 5.

² Ver. 23.

related, consisting indeed of divers precepts, and various commands, but all excellently adapted to have had a great effect, if the Jews had not behaved themselves strangely, and defeated the benefits which they might have received from it. But, 2. The Prophet Jeremiah remarks, that God spake not unto the Israelites, nor commanded them, in the day that he brought them out of the land of Egypt, concerning burnt offerings or sacrifices;⁴ from whence it is argued, that these were not a part of the religion, which was at first enjoined them. But we shall best see the meaning of the prophet, by considering, what it was that God spake unto them at the time he refers to. And we find, that when *Moses went up unto God, the LORD called unto him out of the mountain, saying, Thus shalt thou say to the house of Jacob, and tell the children of Israel; Ye have seen what I did unto the Egyptians, and how I bare you on eagles' wings, and brought you unto myself. Now, therefore, if ye will obey my voice indeed, and keep my covenant, then shall ye be a peculiar treasure unto me above all people: for all the Earth is mine. And ye shall be unto me a kingdom of priests, and a holy nation: These are the words, which thou shalt speak unto the children of Israel. And Moses came, and called for the elders of the people, and laid before their faces all these words, which the LORD commanded him.*⁵ And thus it was indeed fact, as the prophet represents, that God did not speak unto them, nor command them in that day, concerning sacrifices or burnt offerings; I might add, nor concerning the not being guilty of idolatry, of murder, theft, or any other wickedness; but this thing he then commanded them, saying, Obey my voice, and ye shall be my people. For the covenant was not limited to particular, or to any set of precepts, but it was a general engagement to obey God's voice indeed, and to do and perform all the statutes, and judgments, and laws, which God should think fit to give them. When Jeremiah prophesied, the Jews were guilty of the highest abominations;⁶ and yet they came regularly to the worship at the temple, but without a reformation of their lives.⁷ Hereupon the prophet's message to them was, that if they continued in this course, they might put their burnt offerings to their sacrifices, and eat their flesh;⁸ they might even break through and not pretend to observe, the legal institutions for their burnt offerings;⁹ for that God would not accept them for an exact performance of one part of his law

⁴ Jerem. vii, 22.

⁶ Jerem. vii, 8, 9.

⁷ Ver. 10.

⁵ Exod. xix, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7.

⁸ Ver. 21.

⁹ The law of the burnt offering was, that none of it was to be eaten, but the whole burnt and consumed upon the altar, so that if the Jews had done what the prophet bids them ver. 21, they had acted contrary to the law for the burnt offering; and his directing them so to do is only hinting to them, that it was of no moment to be exact in their sacrifices, without amending their lives.

only, when what he required of them was to obey his voice, and to walk in all the ways that he had commanded them.¹ Thus the design of Jeremiah, in the words before us, appears evidently to be, not to suggest to the Jews that burnt offerings and sacrifices were originally no part of their religion; but to remonstrate to them, that sacrifice and offering was but one part, and that a regularity of their lives and manners was another; and that a due care, not of one or either, but of both these parts of their duty, was enjoined, in the general command given to them, to obey God's voice in order to be his people. There remains to be considered, 3. A passage in Ezekiel.² Ezekiel represents, that God gave the Jews, first his statutes and his judgments, which if a man do, he shall even live in them;³ and afterwards, because they had not executed these judgments, but despised his statutes, that therefore he gave them statutes that were not good, and judgments whereby they should not live.⁴ The former of these statutes and judgments are said to be the moral law; and the commands of the ritual law are supposed to be the latter.⁵ But I would observe, 1. That whatever the statutes were, which are thus said to have been not good whatever were the judgments, whereby they should not live; it appeared evidently from the prophet, that they were not given to that generation of men, who received the ritual law; and consequently the ritual law could not be any part of these statutes. The prophet remarks, that the Israelites, after receiving the law, rebelled against God in the wilderness;⁶ that God had said, he would pour out his fury upon them to destroy them;⁷ but that for his name's sake he had not executed this vengeance;⁸ yet, that he did determine not to bring THEM into the land of Canaan,⁹ though his eye had spared them from destroying and making an end of them.¹ Thus, in five verses, he sums up what had happened in God's dispensations to the Israelites, from the giving of the law unto the punishment of their misbehaviour at the return of their spies out of Canaan;² during which interval, how oft did they provoke God?³ yet many a time turned he his anger away, and did not stir up all his wrath;⁴ until at length, though his eye spared them,⁵ and he would not kill all the people as one man;⁶ which had indeed been to destroy and make an end of them in the wilderness;⁷ yet he lifted up his hand, that he would not bring them into the land which he had given them,⁸ but denounced against them, that all those who had seen his glory and his miracles, and had tempted him now ten times, and not hearkened to his voice, should surely not see the land, but fall in the wilderness; but that their little ones should be brought into it.⁹ After this, the prophet proceeds to relate what happened to their children; that God said unto them, *Walk ye not in the statutes of your fathers—but walk in my statutes, and keep my judgments, and do them.*¹ But the children rebelled against God,² and because they had not executed his judgments, but had despised his statutes, therefore he gave them statutes that were not good, and judgments whereby they should not live.³ Thus it must be undeniably plain, that the prophet could not, by the statutes not good, mean any part of the ritual law; for the whole law was given to the fathers of those, of whom the prophet now speaks; but these statutes were not given to the fathers, but to their descendants. 2. If we go on, and compare the narrative of the prophet with the history of the Israelites, we shall see farther that statutes and judgments not good are so far from being any part of Moses's law, that they were not given earlier than the times of the judges. On the first day of the eleventh month of the fortieth year after the exit from Egypt,⁴ Moses, after he had numbered the people in the plains of Moab, by Jordan near Jericho;⁵ and found that there was not left a man of those, whom he had almost forty years before numbered in the wilderness of Sinai, save Caleb and Joshua,⁶ by the command of God made a covenant with the Israelites in the land of Moab, besides the covenant which he made with them in Horeb.⁷ The fathers, who had so often provoked God, were now all dead, and here it was, that God said unto their children, *Walk ye not in the statutes of your fathers, neither observe their judgments, nor defile yourselves with their idols—but walk in my statutes, and keep my judgments and do them.*⁸ Here it was that God commanded them, *not to be, as their fathers, a stubborn and rebellious generation, but to set their hearts aright, and to have their spirits stedfast with God.*⁹ For this was the purport of what Moses gave in charge to them, that they might teach their children the same, that it might be well with them, and that they and their children might hear, and learn to fear the LORD their God, as long as they lived in the land, whither they were going over Jordan to possess it.¹ We do not find, but that from this time to the death of Moses, the Israelites were punctual in observing what he commanded; and after Moses was dead, they served the LORD all the days of Joshua, and all the days of the elders that over-lived Joshua.² But when all that generation were gathered unto their fathers, then the children of Israel did evil in the sight of the LORD, and followed other gods, of the gods of the people, that were round about them, and provoked the LORD to anger, and served Baal and Ashtaroth;³ so that here the scene opens, of which Moses had forewarned them,⁴ and to which Ezekiel alludes;⁵ and accordingly what Ezekiel mentions as the punishments of these wickednesses,⁶ began now to come upon them. The prophet remarks, that God said, he would pour out his fury upon them, and accomplish his anger against them;⁷ and agreeably hereto we find, that *the anger of the LORD was hot against Israel, and he delivered them into the hands of spoilers that spoiled them, and he sold them into the hands of their enemies round about; so that they could not any longer stand before their enemies. Whithersoever they went out, the hand of the LORD was against them for evil; as the LORD had said, and as the LORD had sworn unto them.*⁸ The prophet observes, that nevertheless God withdrew his hand;⁹ and did not proceed entirely to extirpate them; and thus the historian—Nevertheless the LORD raised up judges which delivered them.¹ Many times indeed did he deliver them, but they went on to provoke him with their behaviour; so that he determined, for their transgressing his covenant, and not hearkening unto his voice, that he would not henceforth drive out any from before them, of the nations which Joshua left when he died.² Hereby the Israelites became mingled with the heathen,³ or, as the prophet expresses it, they were scattered among the heathen, and dispersed through the countries;⁴ they had not a contiguous and united possession of the whole land, but among the Canaanites, Hittites, and Amorites, and Perizzites, and Hivites, and Jebusites.⁵ Thus what preceded the giving the statutes that were not good, brings us down to the days of the Judges; and therefore these statutes were not given earlier than these times. But, 3. Let us examine what these statutes and judgments really were, and when, and how, God gave them to the Israelites; and in order hereto let us observe, 1. That God does in nowise give these statutes and judgments the appellation by which he called the appointments he had made and designed for his people. Of these he says, *I gave them my statutes, and shewed them my judgments;*⁶ these were indeed God's laws, intended for the use and observance of his ² Joshua xxiv, 31; Judges ii, 7.

¹ Jer. vii, 23.² Ver. 24, 25.³ Spencer de Legib. Heb. lib. i, c. 1, sec. 2, c. 14, sec. 3.⁴ Ezek. xx, 13.⁵ Ver. 15.⁶ Psalm lxxviii, 40.⁷ Num. xiv, 15.⁷ Ibid.¹ Ver. 17.⁴ Ver. 38.⁷ Ezek. xx, 17.² Ezek. xi, 10.³ Ver. 11.⁵ Ver. 14.⁶ Numb. xiv.⁶ Ezek. xx, 17.⁸ Ver. 15.

⁹ Num. xiv.² Ver. 24, 25.³ Ver. 64, 65.⁴ Psalm lxxviii, 8.¹ Ezek. xx, 18, 19.² Deut. i, 3.³ Deut. xxix, 1.⁴ Deut. xxxi, 12, 13.⁵ Ver. 21.⁶ Num. xxvi.⁷ Ezek. xx, 18, 19.

⁴ Deut. xxxi, 29.

⁶ Ibid.

⁸ Ezek. xx, 22.

² Judges ii, 20, 21.

⁴ Ezek. xx, 23.

⁶ Ezek. xx, 11.

³ Ver. 10, 11, 12, 13.

⁵ Ezek. xx, 21.

⁷ Judges ii, 14, 15.

⁹ Judges ii, 16.

¹ Psalm cvi, 35.

² Judges iii, 3.

people; but of the statutes not good, and judgments whereby they should not live, he says, I gave them also statutes (not my statutes,) and judgments (not my judgments,) whereby they should not live; ⁷ so that these statutes and judgments were not God's statutes or God's judgments, though they are said to have been given by him. 2. But the 26th verse suggests, that in giving them these statutes and judgments God polluted them in their gifts, in that they caused to pass through the fire all that openeth the womb, that he might make them desolate. What the prophet here means is fully suggested by himself in another place. Thou hast slain my children, and delivered them, to cause them to pass through the fire for them. ⁸ The fact was, they had taken their sons and their daughters, and sacrificed them to be devoured; ⁹ or, as the Psalmist represents it, they shed innocent blood, even the blood of their sons and of their daughters, whom they sacrificed unto the idols of Canaan; ¹ and the institutions, which directed such performances, were the statutes not good, were the judgments, whereby they should not live; for these fully answer to the prophet's account. They polluted those, who used them, in their gifts; by observing them the land was polluted with blood, and the people defiled with their own works; ² and they intended to make them desolate, by the destruction of their offspring. And God may be said to have given them these statutes, either because he gave them up to their own hearts' lusts, to walk in their own counsels; ³ to learn these practices from their heathen neighbours: thus God is said to have hardened Pharaoh's heart; ⁴ when Pharaoh really hardened his own heart; ⁵ and in like manner to have given a lying spirit in the mouth of Ahab's prophets, ⁶ when in fact they prophesied out of their own hearts; ⁷ and followed their own spirit, when they had seen nothing; ⁸ in which sense the Chaldee paraphrast took the passage of Ezekiel: ⁹ or, more emphatically, God may be said to have given them these statutes, because for their punishment he delivered them into the hands of their enemies, and empowered those who hated them to rule over them. ¹ These their enemies might set up their abominations amongst them, and make Israel to sin, as their own wicked kings did afterwards in divers reigns. They might give them statutes such as those of Omri; ² and by their power over them, influence and oblige them to the observance of them. And,

⁷ Ezek. xx, 25.

⁸ Ezek. xvi, 21.

⁹ Ver. 20.

¹ Psalm cvi, 38.

² Ver. 38, 39.

³ Psalm lxxxi, 12.

⁴ Exod. iv, 21; vii, 3; ix, 12; x, 1, 26, 27; xi, 10, &c.

⁵ Exod. vii, 13, 22; viii, 15, 19, 28; ix, 7, 34; see vol. ii, b. ix.

⁶ 2 Chron. xviii, 22.

⁷ Ezek. xiii, 2.

⁸ Ver. 3.

⁹ Projeci eos, et tradidi eos in manum inimicorum suorum, et post concupiscentiam suam insipientem abierunt, et fecerunt decreta non recta, et leges in quibus non vivetis. Targ. Jonath. in loc.

¹ Psalm cvi, 41.

² Micah vi, 16.

God may in a strong sense be said to have given them these statutes, by his giving their enemies power to impose them upon them. I have now fully considered this passage of Ezekiel, and, perhaps, have been too large upon it; but I was willing to clear it as distinctly as I was able, because great stress has been laid upon it. Dr. Spencer imagined, that this text alone was sufficient to support his hypothesis; but I think, if what has been offered be fairly considered, no honest writer can ever cite it again for that purpose. However, that I may leave no seeming objection to any part of what I have offered, I would farther take notice:

I. Dr. Spencer imagines, that the 26th verse of the xxth chapter of Ezekiel, which we render, I polluted them in their own gifts, in that they caused to pass through the fire all that openeth the womb, that I might make them desolate, refers, not to their causing their children to pass through the fire, to the idols of Canaan, as I have above taken it; but he supposes it relates to God's rejecting the first-born of the Israelites from the priesthood, and appointing the tribe of Levi to the sacred offices in their stead.⁵ He would translate the verse to this purport: I pronounced them polluted in their gifts, i. e. unfit to offer me any oblations, in that I passed by all that openeth the womb, in order to humble them, that they might know that I am the LORD. I answer, this cannot be the meaning of the text. For the Levitical priesthood was instituted, as I have remarked, in the days of the fathers; but the prophet here speaks of something done in the days, not of the fathers, to whom the law was given, but of their children, of a generation that arose after the appointing the Levites to the sacred offices, and therefore cannot be here supposed to speak of that appointment.⁶ Farther, the expression here used, behanabir col peter racham, does not signify to pass by or reject the first-born. The verb nabar, in the conjugation here used, does sometimes signify, to set apart or choose;⁷ but cannot have, I think, the sense the learned doctor would here give it. Maas om is the Hebrew verb for to reject,⁸ and would most probably have been the word here used, if rejecting from the priesthood had been the matter intended by the prophet.⁷

II. Another objection to what I have offered above may

⁵ Spenc. de Leg. Heb. lib. i, c. 8, sect. 2.

⁶ Vid. quæ sup. Chorus est eruditorum virorum, qui de præceptis ceremonialibus hæc intelligunt, et remotione Israelitarum ab altari. Ego vero libere profiteor huic opinioni nunquam me potuisse consentire, ob rationes non leves sane et futiles, sed solidas prægnantesque ex serie orationis, æquarum insolentia, verbis aliis textui immixtis, antecedentium, consequentiumque nexu, et scripturarum ἀλλήλων petitais. Vitringa Observat. Sac. lib. ii, c. 1.

⁷ Exodus xiii, 12.

⁸ Vid. 1 Sam. viii, 7; x, 19; xvi, 1; 2 Kings xviii, 20; Jer. vi, 30; xiv, 19, et in sexcent. al loc.

⁷ Vid. Hos. iv, 6.

arise from the 21st and 23d verses of the xxth of Ezekiel. The prophet may seem in them to hint, that God's anger against the children was whilst they were in the wilderness; and that it was in the wilderness, when he lifted up his hand against them, to scatter them among the heathen; and if so, their provoking God to this anger must have been before they entered Canaan, and therefore not so late as the time wherein I have fixed it. I answer, 1, The history of the Israelites contained in Moses's Books, and those which follow, was written long before Ezekiel prophesied; and as his prophecy could not alter what had been done; so the best interpretation of what he related about them must be that which agrees with their history; and we must not invent facts, or change their history to suit it to any thing contained in his prophecy. And according to their history, the children's provoking God was as I have above stated it. And thus the Psalmist fixes it. After God had cast out the heathen before them, and divided them an inheritance by line, then it was that the children tempted and provoked the most high God, and kept not his testimonies, but turned back, and dealt unfaithfully like their fathers.⁸ 2, But the threatnings of God against the children of the Israelites, whenever they should provoke him, were indeed pronounced to them by Moses in the wilderness, before they entered Canaan.⁹ 3. Perhaps this was all that the prophet intended to express by the word, in the wilderness, in the verses above-cited. Then I said I would pour out my fury upon them, to accomplish my anger against them in the wilderness. The words, in the wilderness, do not hint the place where the anger was to be accomplished; but rather refer to anger, and suggest that the anger was, as we might almost say in English, the wilderness-anger, or the anger which God had threatened in the wilderness. 4. Or, the word, be midbar, in the wilderness, having occurred twice before, after words the same that are used in these two verses,¹ I suspect, that the transcribers, intent upon what they had a little before written, might insert the word again inadvertently in the 21st and 23d verses; when perhaps it was not there repeated in the original copy of the prophecy of Ezekiel.

Moses having made intercession for the people, after the idolatry of the golden calf; at the command of God, made two new tables of stone, like unto those which he had broken, and went up a second time with them to mount Sinai.² He continued again on the mount forty days and forty nights, without eating bread or drinking water;³ during which time he wrote, as God directed him, the ten commandments upon the two tables,⁴ and received the commands set down in the ⁸ Psalm lxxviii, 35—57.

¹ Ezek. xx, 13—15.

² Ibid. ver. 28.

³ See Deut. xxviii, &c.

⁴ Exod. xxxiv.

⁵ Ibid.

xxxivth chapter of Exodus. After the forty days he came down from the mount with the two tables in his hand; and gathered the congregation together, and instructed them in what had been appointed to him,⁵ and required them to make their offerings for erecting the tabernacle.⁶ In order to erect the tabernacle, he had been commanded to tax every Israelite above twenty years old half a shekel,⁷ or about fifteen pence of our money.⁸ The sum arising from the tax was appointed to be for the service of the tabernacle;⁹ and we find that Moses used it for the sockets of the sanctuary, and of the vail, and for hooks for the pillars, and for their chapiters.¹ The number of those, who were taxed, were, 603,550 men,² and the sum arising from assessing them half a shekel a man, amounted to one hundred talents, and one thousand seven hundred and seventy-five shekels of Jewish money;³ so that a Jewish talent consisted of three thousand shekels; for from 603,550 half shekels, or 301,775 shekels, deduct a hundred times three thousand, the number of talents, and the remainder will be one thousand seven hundred and seventy-five, which is the number of remaining shekels over and above the talents, and the whole sum raised, at fifteen pence the half shekel, amounts in English coin to £37,721 17s. 6d. This sum therefore Moses first raised by the assessment, and after he had collected it, he moved the people to a voluntary contribution,⁴ as God had directed him;⁵ which brought in a sufficient quantity of all sorts of materials that were wanted, to the full of what they could have occasion for;⁶ so that Moses gave commandment to proclaim through the camp, that the people should make no farther offerings.⁷ Bezaleel and Aholiab, being nominated by a special designation from God himself, began the tabernacle,⁸ and in some months, towards the end of the year, by their direction, and the assistance of the hands employed under them,⁹ the tabernacle and its appurtenances, the table of shew-bread, the priests' garments, the holy ointments, the golden candlestick, and all the vessels and utensils for the service of the altar, were finished.¹

The marginal reference in our English Bibles at Exodus xxx, 12, seems to hint, that this numbering the people for the raising the tax for the tabernacle was the very same with that mentioned in Numbers i, 2—5. The number of the poll appears indeed in each place to be to a man the same,² and this ⁵ Exod. xxxiv. 11—27.

⁶ Chap. xxxv, 4.

⁷ Chap. xxx, 12—16.

⁸ According to Brerewood, the shekel was a silver coin of about 2s. 6d. in our money. Dean Prideaux makes it about 3s. See his Connect. vol. i, b. iii, p. 196.

⁹ Exod. xxx, 16.

² Ver. 26.

⁴ Chap. xxxv.

⁵ Chap. xxxvi, 5.

⁶ Chap. xxxv, 30; xxxvi, 1.

¹ Chap. xxxix, 32—43.

¹ Chap. xxxviii, 25—28.

³ Ver. 25.

⁵ Ver. 2.

⁷ Ver. 6.

⁹ Chap. xxxvi, 1; xxxix, 43; xl, 2.

² Chap. xxxviii, 26; Numb. i, 46.

possibly might lead those who made the reference to mistake, and think that the people had been in truth but once numbered; but it is evident, 1. That the poll mentioned in the first chapter of Numbers was not taken until the first day of the second month of the second year after the exit from Egypt.³ 2. The tabernacle was finished a month earlier; for it was erected on the first day of the first month.⁴ The poll taken for raising the assessment was before the tabernacle was finished; for the silver, which the assessment raised, was applied to the making some parts of the tabernacle;⁵ so that the poll for the assessment must have preceded at least above a month earlier than that which is mentioned in the first chapter of Numbers. 4. I imagine it was some months earlier; for surely the numbering and assessing the people preceded the free offering of those who were willing,⁶ and was therefore before the workmen began the tabernacle. For when the persons employed in the work of the tabernacle found, that the free offerings had supplied as much of all sorts of materials as were necessary, it was proclaimed through the camp, that no one should offer any more;⁷ and therefore had these voluntary offerings been made before the assessment, the assessment would have been superfluous; but we find that it was not so, by the use made of the silver, which came in from it.⁸ I therefore think it most probable, that Moses first raised the assessment, then ordered the free will offering, and when the materials were collected he delivered them to the workmen, and appointed them to begin the tabernacle.⁹ Now if he proceeded thus, the poll mentioned in the first chapter of Numbers was near six months later than this numbering and assessing the people; for the tabernacle was probably about five months in making, and the poll in Numbers i was taken a month after finishing and erecting the tabernacle as above. But it may seem very odd, that two different polls of one and the same people, taken thus at two different times, should agree exactly to a man; one would rather imagine, that in a growing people, the number of deaths of the aged could not answer to the advance of young persons to the age they were polled at; but that in the space of one or of six or seven months, there must be a considerable variation in so great a company as the camp of the Israelites. And if we duly attend to it, we find this was the fact in the case before us. The number of men indeed in each poll is the same exactly, there being 603,550 men in each of them;¹ but then the same persons were not allowed to be taken down in both the polls. To the first poll came all the Israelites from twenty years old and

³ Numb. i, 1.

⁴ Chap. xxxviii, 27, 28.

⁵ Ver. 6.

⁶ Chap. xxxvi, 3.

⁷ Exod. xxxviii, 26: Numb. i, 46.

⁸ Exod. xl, 17.

⁹ Chap. xxxvi, 3.

¹ Chap. xxxviii, 27, 28.

upwards;² but in the second poll the Levites were not numbered.³ When the first poll was taken, I say, all the Israelites were numbered, no tribe excepted; for the Levites were not then separated from the congregation;⁴ but at the taking the second poll, the Levites were to be numbered by themselves, and in another manner.⁵ And thus at taking the first poll, the whole camp, Levites included, consisted of 603,550 men, of and above twenty years old.⁶ At the second poll the camp consisted of the like number of 603,550 men,⁷ of the age above-mentioned, without any Levites in the computation; so that as many persons were grown up to the age of twenty years in the space of time between taking the two polls, as the number of Levites of twenty years old and upwards at the first poll amounted to, supposing, what I think may be allowed, that no one person died in the camp in this interval.⁸

On the first day of the first month of the second year after the departure out of Egypt, i. e. about the middle of our March, A. M. 2514, Moses reared up the tabernacle, and placed the ark in it, and hung up the vail, and put the table of shew-bread in its place, and set the bread in order upon it, and put the candlestick in its place, and lighted the lamps, and placed the golden altar of incense in the tent before the vail; and he burnt sweet incense thereon, and set up the hanging at the door of the tabernacle, and set the laver in its place, and reared up the court round about the tabernacle and the altar, and set up the hanging of the court gate. This is what Moses is represented⁹ to have done this day:¹ and all the parts of the tabernacle being ready to be put together, and the ark and altar completely finished, fit for their respective ² Exod. xxx, 14.

³ Numb. i, 47.

⁴ The separation of the Levites was at taking the second poll. Numb. iii, 6. God having directed them not to be numbered in it. Chap. i, 48, 49.

⁵ Numb. i, 48; ii, 33.

⁶ Exod. xxxviii, 26.

⁷ Numb. i, 46.

⁸ If we consider the whole body of the Israelites as under the protection of a particular providence, and in hopes, each person for himself and children, of living to go into the promised land: if we add to this, that sickness and an early death were not frequent in these ages, but were thought judgments for particular sins; see vol. ii, b. ix; Numb. xxvii, 3, it will not be hard to imagine that five or six months might pass without a death in the camp. And if we farther reflect, that the younger part of the camp were so numerous, as in about eight or nine and thirty years to grow up into a body of 601,730 men of twenty years old and upwards, without the Levites, and without any of the persons that were now twenty, except Joshua and Caleb, to be numbered amongst them, Numb. xxvi, 51—64, it may not seem improbable that the persons at this time near twenty years old, but not completely so, should be sufficient to afford in five or six months an addition to the camp, not only equal to the number of Levites of twenty years old and upwards, who were taken from it, and who were, I conceive, in number not above eight or ten thousand (see Numbers iv, 48,) but also to a farther number of aged men, if any such must be supposed to have died in this interval.

⁹ Exodus xl, 17—33.

¹ What is mentioned ver. 31, 32, that Moses and Aaron and his sons washed their hands and feet at the laver, was not now done; but at such times as they went into the tent of the congregation, or approached the altar, and is here set down only to tell the use of the laver.

places, all this may very well be conceived to be done in the space of time allotted to it, an hour or two before night. Now when Moses had thus raised the tabernacle, God was pleased to give the people a visible and miraculous demonstration, that it was erected according to his directions; for a cloud covered the tent of the congregation, and the glory of the LORD filled the tabernacle.² And this visible evidence of the divine presence continued from this time, until the Israelites had finished their journeys through the wilderness; *for the cloud of the LORD was upon the tabernacle by day, and fire was on it by night, in the sight of all the house of Israel throughout all their journeys; and when the cloud was taken up from over the tabernacle, the children of Israel went onward in all their journeys.*³ But if the cloud were not taken up, then they journeyed not till the day that it was taken up.³ Thus God was pleased to appoint himself, as it were, a visible dwelling amongst men; for the tabernacle was built, that he might dwell amongst his people,⁴ that there might be a known and determined place, where he would at all times vouchsafe to meet them and commune with them,⁵ and give them a sensible evidence of his being nigh unto them in all things, that they might have occasion to call upon him for;⁶ and this was the first structure which was erected in the world for the purposes of religion.⁷ The Israelites had a most strict charge to *destroy utterly all the places, wherein the nations of Canaan had served their gods, whether they were upon the high mountains, or upon the hills, or under green trees.*⁸ But we do not find, that they had any building to erase; rather all they had to do was to *overthrow their altars, to break their pillars, to cut down, and to burn their groves with fire, to hew down the graven images of their gods, and to destroy the names of them out of the place where they had erected them.*⁹ In after times, when houses were built for the idolatrous worship, we find express mention of the demolishing them, by the persons who engaged in reforming the people. Thus Jahu brake down the house of Baal,¹ as did Jehoiada in like manner;² and the Israelites would unquestionably have been as expressly commanded to demolish such structures, had there been any, when they entered Canaan: the heathen nations had no thought of building houses to their gods, until after the Israelites had their tabernacle.

When the glory first covered the tabernacle, Moses could not enter into it, because the cloud abode thereon, and the

² Exod. xl, 34.

⁴ Chap. xxv, 8.

⁶ Deut. iv, 7.

⁸ Deut. xii, 2.

¹ 2 Kings i, 27.

³ Ver. 36, 37, 38; see Numb. ix, 15—23.

⁵ Chap. xxv, 22; xxix, 43—45.

⁷ See vol. ii, b. viii.

⁹ Ver. 3; vii, 5; Exod. xxiv, 13; xxiii, 24.

² 2 Kings xi, 18; 2 Chron. xxiii, 17.

glory of the LORD filled it;³ and it continued to do so most probably for some days, during which *the LORD called unto Moses, and spake unto him out of the tabernacle of the congregation,*⁴ and delivered to him, in an audible voice, the several laws recorded in the first eight chapters of Leviticus: after receiving which, Moses proceeded to anoint the tabernacle, the altar, and all its vessels, and to consecrate Aaron and his sons to the priests' offices.⁵ Aaron first officiated as high priest on the eighth day after the beginning of his consecration,⁶ and his consecration might be begun on the fifth day of the month; so that he might enter upon his ministry on the twelfth. We cannot suppose his consecration sooner, allowing a due space of time for the giving and receiving and recording the laws above-mentioned; nor can we imagine it later upon account of celebrating the passover, which was to be on the fourteenth, and which was not celebrated until after the deaths of Nadab and Abihu; for we find at the passover, that *there were certain men, who were defiled by the dead body of a man, that they could not keep the passover.*⁷ These I think must have been Mishael and Elzaphan, who had carried Nadab and Abihu, from before the sanctuary out of the camp;⁸ so that their deaths happened just before the passover, on the very first day of Aaron's ministration; for whilst he was ordering the bullock and the ram for the peace-offering,⁹ when the fire came out from before the LORD, and consumed the burnt-offering and fat upon the altar,¹ Nadab and Abihu, two of Aaron's sons, took each of them a censer, and put fire therein, and put incense thereon, and offered strange fire before the LORD, which he commanded them not, and there went out fire from before the LORD and struck them dead.³ This unhappy accident must have occasioned some interruption in the ministration; Aaron and his two other sons were undoubtedly affected with it, but Moses applied to them, and required them to suppress their grief for the calamity, and not to accompany the dead bodies out of the tabernacle, lest the displeasure of God should arise against them.³ Aaron's heart seems here to have almost sunk within him; and I imagine, he would have taken some refreshment to support his spirits against the load of sorrow which now pressed heavy upon him; and that this occasioned the command now given him, *Do not drink wine, nor strong drink, thou nor thy sons with thee, when ye go into the tabernacle of the congregation, lest ye die; it shall be a statute for ever throughout your generations.*⁴ Moses ordered the dead bodies of ³ Exodus xl, 34, 35.

⁴ Chap. viii.

⁵ Numbers ix, 6.

⁶ Chap. ix, 18.

⁷ Chap. x, 1, 2.

⁸ Ver. 8, 9.

⁴ Levit. i, 1.

⁵ Chap. ix, 1—8.

⁶ Levit. v, 4.

⁷ Ver. 24.

⁸ Levit. x, 6, 7.

Nadab and Abihu to be carried out of the tabernacle and out of the camp;⁴ and then called upon Aaron, and his sons who were left, to finish the day's service;⁵ but upon inquiry he found, that the sin-offering, which ought to have been eaten by the priests in the holy place,⁶ was burnt and consumed.⁷ He represented to the sons of Aaron their mistake in this matter;⁸ but Aaron made excuse for it, and alleged, that such judgments had been inflicted that day, as to give him reason to doubt, whether it might be proper for him to finish the atonement. Aaron said unto Moses, *Behold, this day have they offered their sin-offering, and their burnt offering before the Lord, and such things have befallen me; and if I had eaten the sin-offering to day, should it have been accepted in the sight of the Lord?*⁹ Some of the commentators represent, that Aaron thought himself, upon account of the grief and concern he was then under, not to be in a fit disposition to eat the sin-offering;³ others, that it would have been indecorous for him to have done it;² but they do not consider the charge which Moses had given him: the Hebrew text suggests what I have hinted to be Aaron's apology. Aaron said unto Moses, Behold this day have they offered their sin-offering and their burnt offering (וַתִּקְרַנָּה אֶחָד כֹּאֵלָה) vattikrenah oti caelleh, the verb vattikrenah is the plural feminine, and refers to the offerings; and what Aaron suggests is, that the ministrations already performed had called down upon him the judgments which had been inflicted; and that for this reason he feared they had profaned the services of the day, and therefore that he did not presume to go on to finish them, but had burnt the goat, instead of reserving it to be eaten, according to the orders, which he should have observed, if their officiating had been so conducted, as to give him reason to think it would have been accepted in the sight of the Lord. This, indeed, seems a reasonable excuse, and we find Moses was contented with it;⁵ and pressed him no farther to finish the remaining offices of that day's service.

It may be here asked, what so great crime were Nadab and Abihu guilty of, that they paid so dear a price as to lose their lives by an immediate vengeance? But the answer is easy; the great end and purpose of the Mosaic dispensation was, to separate unto God a chosen people, who should be careful to obey his voice indeed, and who, instead of being like other

⁴ Levit. x, 4.

⁵ Chap. vi, 26.

⁶ Ver. 17.

² They comment upon the words thus; Agnosco quidem comedendum fuisse et cum lætitia, sed qui potui lætari? Malui igitur convivium negligere, quam mæstus inire. Vid. Pool. Synops. in loc.

³ Indecorum fuisset patrem convivari carne victimæ, in qua offerenda duos filios subito amiserat. Cleric. Comment. in loc.

⁴ The verb וַתִּקְרַנָּה, in the conjugation here used, has this sense. Jer. xxxii, 23.

⁵ Levit. x, 20.

⁶ Ver. 12—15.

⁷ Chap. x, 16.

⁸ Ver. 19.

nations, following and practising, as parts of their religion, what men might invent, set up, and think proper and reasonable, should diligently and strictly keep to what God had enjoined, without turning therefrom to the right hand or to the left, or without adding to the word which was commanded them, or diminishing ought from it. But herein these young men greatly failed; God had as yet given no law for offering incense in censers; all that had been commanded about it was, that Aaron should burn it upon the altar of incense every morning and every evening.⁶ Afterwards he received farther directions;⁷ so that these men took upon them to begin and introduce a service into religion, which was not appointed; they offered what the LORD commanded them not.⁸ Now, if this had been suffered, it would have opened a door to great irregularities; and the Jewish religion would in a little time have been, not what God had directed, but have abounded in many human inventions added to it. Aaron and his sons were sanctified to minister in the priests' office,⁹ for this end, that they should remember the commandments of the LORD to do them, not that they should seek after their own heart.¹ They could not have taken upon themselves the offices of their priesthood, if they had not been called of God to them;² and as they were called of God to them, it was their indispensable duty to be faithful to him that appointed them in all his house,³ in every part of the dispensation committed to them. This, said Moses, is that which the LORD spake, saying, I will be sanctified in them that come nigh me, and before all the people I will be glorified.⁴ They then only sanctified and glorified God, when they dispensed to his people, as parts of his religion, what he had commanded; but when they varied from it, or performed or enjoined, as part of it, what he commanded not, then they assumed to themselves a power which belonged not to them; then they spake and acted of themselves, and he that in these points speaketh of himself, seeketh not God's, but his own glory.⁵

God had directed that the Israelites should keep the passover at its appointed season;⁶ and accordingly they prepared for it against the fourteenth day of the month at even, in order to observe it according to the rites thereof.⁷ But on the fourteenth day a doubt arose about the persons who had touched the dead bodies of Nadab and Abihu, whether they were fit to keep the passover;⁸ Moses inquired of God about them, and received an order, that all persons hindered by such an accident, or that were on a journey, should keep the ⁶ Exodus xxx, 7.

⁷ Chap. x, 1.

⁸ Numbers xv, 39.

⁹ Chap. iii, 2.

¹ John vii, 18.

² Ver. 6.

⁷ Levit. xvi, 1—12.

⁸ Exodus xxix, 44.

⁹ Hebrews v, 4.

⁴ Levit. x, 3.

⁵ Numb. ix, 1, 2.

⁶ Id. Ibid.

passover a month after their brethren.⁹ We have no account of any thing done more, until the first day of the second month; so that we have here sixteen days interval, in which space, I imagine, the laws recorded in Leviticus, from the beginning of the xith chapter to the end of that book, were given, except the laws contained in the three last chapters; for these were given to Moses, not at the door of the tabernacle but upon the mount.¹ The son of Shelomith, the daughter of Dibri, of the tribe of Dan, was stoned for cursing and blaspheming about this time.²

On the first day of the second month, A. M. 2514, Moses was commanded to take the number of the congregation by a poll of every male of twenty years old and upwards,³ excepting the Levites, who were not to be numbered.⁴ And in order to taking this poll, twelve persons were named to be princes of the tribes of their fathers;⁵ and they assembled their tribes, and gave in, upon this first day of the month, each the names and number of the persons in the tribe over which he was set.⁶ After this Moses received a command to appoint the order, in which the host of the Israelites was to march and encamp.⁷ In the next place he was directed to take the number of the Levites; and to appoint to their several families their respective services, and to set apart the whole tribe for the ministry of the tabernacle.⁸ In the more ancient times, the first-born of every family was to be the minister of religion;⁹ but in the Jewish institution God thought fit to dismiss the first-born from this service, and to direct the Levites to be dedicated to him, instead of them.¹ As many Levites as were over and above the first-born of the Levites, who, by being the first-born, were before this institution holy unto the Lord; so many of the first-born of the other tribes were discharged from attending upon the service of the tabernacle. Accordingly, there being twenty and two thousand Levites,² these were accepted instead of so many of the first-born males of the children of Israel. The whole number of the first-born of the Israelites were twenty-two thousand, two hundred, threescore and thirteen.³ The whole number of the Levites were, of the sons of Gershon, seven thousand five hundred;⁴ of the sons of Kohath, eight thousand six hundred;⁵ of the sons of Merari, six thousand two hundred;⁶ in all twenty-two thousand three hundred; and yet we are told that there were two hundred threescore and thirteen ⁹ Numb. ix, 10, 11.

² Levit. xxiv, 10.

⁴ Numb. i, 49.

⁶ Ver. 18.

⁸ Chap. iii.

¹ Numb. iii, 12.

² Ver. 43.

³ Ver. 28.

¹ Chap. xxv, 1; xxvi, 40; xxvii, 34.

² Numb. i, 1, 2, 3.

⁴ Ver. 4—17.

⁶ Numb. ii.

⁹ See vol. i, b. v.

² Ver. 39.

⁴ Ver. 22.

⁶ Ver. 34.

of the first-born of the children of Israel more than the Levites;⁷ that is, more than there were Levites to be accepted instead of them. But this difficulty is easy to be accounted for; because many of the Levites were the first-born of their families, namely, three hundred of them; so that there remained twenty-two thousand only, who were not first-born, and might therefore be accepted instead of the first-born of the other tribes; and thus we must understand the 39th verse of the iiiid chapter of Numbers. *All that were numbered of the Levites, which Moses and Aaron numbered, at the commandment of the LORD throughout their families; all the males from a month old and upwards were twenty and two thousand.*⁸ All that were numbered, i. e. in order to be taken instead of the first-born, were so many; for if the first-born Levites be included, if the sum of the whole tribe be taken, they amount to three hundred more, as any one may see by putting together the several sums of the three families.⁹ But there being three hundred first-born Levites, and twenty-two thousand two hundred threescore and thirteen first-born Israelites of the other tribes; there would indeed remain two hundred threescore and thirteen first-born more than there were Levites to answer them; therefore for these God ordered five shekels of the sanctuary a-piece, to be taken in lieu of each of them.¹ The laws mentioned in the vth, vith, and viiith chapters of Numbers, were given about this time, and the Levites were consecrated to their ministry, according to all that the LORD had commanded;² and when all this was done, and the tabernacle hereby fully set up,³ all its officers and ministers being duly appointed, the princes of the tribes made their offerings.⁴ The princes offered each on a day by himself;⁵ so that they were twelve days bringing in their respective offerings. The camp began to march on the twentieth day;⁶ the offerings were therefore over, probably, a day or two before the twentieth, and must therefore have begun on the fifth or sixth day; and consequently what I have mentioned, as previous to the princes' offerings, from the polling the people to the finishing the consecration of the Levites, took up four or five days. About the eighteenth day of the month, Moses had two silver trumpets made,⁷ for calling of an assembly,⁸ or to summon to a meeting the heads of the congregation,⁹ or for the blowing an alarm for marching the camp;¹ and on the twentieth day the cloud was taken off from the tabernacle, and the Israelites prepared to march in due order;² and by the direction of the cloud, they journeyed three days together, from the wilderness of Sinai into the wilderness of Paran.³ Before they began their march, Moses asked Hobab, the son of Jethro, his father-in-law, to continue with them, but he was desirous to return into his own land, and to his kindred.⁴ Moses was unwilling to part with him, and represented how serviceable he might be to them in their travels,⁵ and made him such offers as induced him not to leave them;⁶ and accordingly we find his posterity settled afterwards in Canaan.⁷

⁷ Numb. iii, 46.⁸ Ver. 39.⁹ Ver. 22, 28, 34.¹ The shekel of the sanctuary is, as I have before computed it, about two shillings and sixpence of our money; so that they paid each man about twelve shillings and sixpence for his redemption.² Numb. viii, 20.³ Chap. vii, 1.⁴ Ver. 2.⁵ Ver. 11.⁶ Chap. x, 11.⁷ Ver. 2.⁸ Ibid.⁹ Ver. 4.¹ Ver. 5.

Upon the clouds's resting in the wilderness of Paran, the camp being thereby stopped from marching any farther, the Israelites grew uneasy,⁸ and complained, perhaps for not being carried directly into Canaan. Their uneasiness was offensive to God, and he destroyed many of them with fire from Heaven for it;⁹ but upon Moses's prayer the fire ceased.¹ In a little time they murmured at having nothing to eat but manna, and were very vexatious to Moses in soliciting him to obtain some other diet for them.² Moses, quite tired out with their restless humours, begged earnestly that God would be pleased, some way or other, to ease him of the great burden which lay upon him.³ Hereupon God ordered him to choose seventy elders out of the officers, whom he had employed over the people.⁴ After Moses had chosen them, God was pleased to give them a portion of his spirit to qualify them for the employment they were designed for.⁵ Sixty-eight of the seventy came up unto Moses to the tabernacle, upon being chosen. But Eldad and Medad, two, whom Moses had nominated, seemed desirous to decline the honour which was offered them, esteemed themselves, perhaps, not equal to the undertaking, and therefore they went not out unto the tabernacle, but remained in the camp.⁶ But God was pleased to convince them, that he could readily give abilities for any employment to which he should call them; and therefore he

² Ver. 11.

⁹ Ver. 12.

⁴ There appears some little confusion in the Scripture accounts of Jethro, from the different names given him in different places; but it is no unusual thing to find many names given to one and the same person. From Numbers x, 29, it appears that Jethro was called Raguel, and from Judges iv, 11, that he was also called Hobab. He had a son also, whose name was Hobab, Numbers x, 29; but there is no room for a careful reader to mistake the one Hobab for the other. Some learned writers have indeed imagined, that Jethro did not leave Moses, but went with him through the wilderness; but Moses says expressly, that Jethro went his way into his own land. Exod. xviii, 27. Hobab indeed went on with Moses, but not Hobab, Moses's father-in-law, which had been Jethro; but Hobab, the son of Moses's father-in-law, or the son of Jethro.

⁶ Numb. x, 31.

⁷ Judges i, 16.

⁸ Ibid.

² Ver. 4—6.

⁴ Ver. 16.

⁵ Ver. 26.

⁶ Ver. 32.

⁸ Numb. xi, 1.

¹ Ver. 2.

³ Ver. 11—15.

⁶ Ver. 17.

enabled them to prophesy in the camp, as the others did at the tabernacle.⁷ Eldad and Medad's prophesying in the camp was soon reported to Moses, and Joshua the son of Nun thought it would be expedient for Moses to forbid them;⁸ supposing it would lessen Moses's authority, if these two men, who, by their not coming up to the tabernacle, might appear to have no commission under him, should be thought to have, and be allowed to use this privilege. But Moses having no aim to his own glory, remonstrated, that he wished *all the Lord's people were prophets, and that the Lord would put his spirit upon them.*⁹ This would have truly eased his burthen; for if God would have thus immediately revealed his will to every Israelite, all Moses's labour would have been at an end, and the people, from the highest to the lowest, would all have known what they were to do as well as himself, and he, not seeking his own honour, nor having at heart his private interest, but sincerely desiring to be faithful to him that appointed him,¹ would have sincerely rejoiced to see the purpose and design of God thus effectually taking place amongst his people. The elders went down with Moses into the camp,² and God sent a wind, which brought great quantities of quails,³ which the people took and dried and salted for their eating.⁴ But though God sent them this food upon their impatience, yet he punished them for their mutinous temper,⁵ and by a plague cut off those, who had required this provision. They called the name of the place Kibroth Hattaavah, because they buried the people here who lusted.⁶ After the plague ceased, they journeyed hence to Hazereth.⁷

At Hazereth, Miriam and Aaron spake against Moses for his having married a foreigner, a woman, who was not of the children of his people; for he had married the daughter of Jethro the Cushite or Arabian.⁸ Moses was very meek, ⁷ Numb. xi, 26.

⁸ Ver. 27, 28.

⁹ Ver. 29.

¹ Hebrews iii, 2.

² Numb. xi, 30.

³ Numb. xi, 31. Our English version represents the quails as having lain round about the camp as it were two cubits (or a yard) high; but there is no word in the Hebrew text for the number two. The Hebrew word כסמים signifies, as it were cubits high, expressing no determinate measure, but in general a considerable height. In like manner we say, he that gathered least, gathered ten homers, ver. 32, a surprising quantity, if a homer be, as is by some computed, five of our English bushels and a half. But, perhaps, the word we here render homers, was not intended to signify in this place the particular Jewish measure so called, but should rather have been rendered heaps in general, without defining the quantity, which each heap contained. It is thus used Exod. viii, 14, and we may well suppose that each man gathered ten heaps; but five and fifty bushels a man does not seem a quantity likely to have been gathered by them.

⁴ This management of quails, in order to preserve them, was usual amongst the heathens. Athen. Deipnos. lib. ix, c. 11.

⁵ Psalm cvi, 15; lxxviii, 30, 31; Numb. xi, 33.

⁶ Numb. xi, 34.

⁷ Ver. 35.

⁸ Chap. xii, 1; See vol. i, b. iii.

above all the men which were upon the face of the earth;⁹ and the exceeding goodness of his temper led Miriam and Aaron most warmly to oppose him upon this subject. There appears to have been no law given, which could directly affect the case of Moses. Whether Aaron inferred that this marriage was wrong, from what had been¹ enjoined the priests, thinking Moses obliged in every respect to as great strictness as they could be, I cannot say. However, he and Miriam would admit of no plea in Moses's favour, but contended that they knew as well as he what was lawful, and what was not;² for that God had revealed his will to them as to him. This dispute might have had a very unhappy effect upon the people; for if the persons, whom they all knew to have been favoured with immediate revelations from God's will, had thus evidently differed and contradicted one another about it, how should the congregation know by whom to be directed? Parties and divisions would have arisen from such contests; but God was pleased to interpose upon this occasion. *The Lord came down in the pillar of the cloud to the door of the tabernacle, and called Aaron and Miriam,*³ and observed to them, that he had never revealed his will to either of them, or to any others, in so extraordinary a manner as he had done to Moses,⁴ and that therefore they ought to have been afraid to speak against and contradict him;⁵ and in order to justify Moses to the whole congregation, Miriam was struck with a leprosy, and ordered to be put out of the camp for seven days;⁶ after that, by Moses's prayer for her, she was recovered.⁷ Upon her re-admission into the camp, the Israelites removed from Hazeroth further on, in the wilderness of Paran.⁸

From the place where they now encamped, Moses, by God's command, sent twelve persons, having chosen one out of each tribe, to go as spies into the land of Canaan,⁹ to take a view, and to bring an account of the land and its inhabitants. The twelve persons appointed took their journey, and went over the land, and in forty days returned back to the camp.¹ At their return, the congregation was summoned to receive their report,² which as to the fruitfulness of the land, was very agreeable; but they represented the large stature and strength of the inhabitants, so as to intimidate the people, and to induce them to think themselves in nowise able to conquer it.³ The camp grew into a great ferment upon this representation, and a false report of the goodness of the country got about, and increased the discontent, notwithstanding all that

⁹ Numb. xii, 3.² Ver. 5.⁶ Ver. 10, 14.⁹ Chap. xiii, 2.³ Ver. 27—31.¹ Levit. xxi, 14.⁴ Ver. 6—8.⁷ Ver. 13.¹ Ver. 21—25.² Numb. xii, 2.⁵ Ibid.⁸ Ver. 16.³ Ver. 26—31.

Caleb, who had been one of the spies, could offer to appease it;⁴ and at last such a spirit was raised among the people, that they were for making themselves a captain to lead them back to Egypt.⁵ Moses and Aaron expressed the deepest concern at this strange infatuation;⁶ and Caleb and Joshua made the utmost efforts to reduce the camp to a better temper. They remonstrated, that the land was certainly exceeding good; that it was God's design to give it to them; that since God was for them, the strength of the Canaanites against them was not to be feared; that to return to Egypt would be a rebellion against God, who had so miraculously delivered, preserved, and appointed them for this undertaking.⁷ What they said was far from having the designed effect. The people were rather transported by it to greater fury, and were for having Joshua and Caleb immediately stoned;⁸ but the glory of the Lord appeared in the tabernacle of the congregation, in a manner visible to all the people.⁹ Such an obstinacy as they were now guilty of, was an exceeding great sin against God; however Moses was admitted to intercede, that the whole congregation should not be destroyed.¹ But God determined, that for this offence, none of the persons who had seen his glory and his miracles done in Egypt, and had thus rebelled against him, should come into the land of Canaan;² for their entrance into the land should now be deferred until forty years were expired from their exit out of Egypt, before which time all that generation, who were twenty years old and upwards, when Moses and Aaron numbered them after the exit out of Egypt, except Caleb and Joshua, should die in the wilderness.³ Moses told the people these things, at the hearing whereof they mourned greatly.⁴ They were now desirous to attempt to enter the land; but Moses cautioned them against it,⁵ assuring them, that God would not now give them success. However, they would march; but the Amalekites and Canaanites smote them and discomfited them unto Hormah.⁶ The laws contained in the xvth chapter of Numbers, seem to have been given within the forty days, when the spies were travelling over the land of Canaan; about which time I suppose that the man was stoned, who gathered sticks on the Sabbath-day.⁷

There is a passage in a speech of Joshua and Caleb, upon which the Jewish Rabbins founded a most whimsical conceit. Joshua and Caleb represent, that, as to the Canaanites, their defence was departed from them.⁸ The Hebrew word is צללם Tzillam, their shadow, upon which the Rabbins thus comment: they say, that on the night of the seventeenth day of ⁴ Numb. xiii, 30—33.

⁷ Ver. 6—9.

¹ Ver. 11—20.

⁴ Ver. 39.

⁷ Chap. xv, 32—36.

⁵ Chap. xiv, 4.

⁸ Ver. 10.

² Ver. 22, 23.

⁵ Ver. 41, 42, 43.

⁸ Chap. xiv, 9.

⁶ Ver. 5.

⁹ Ibid.

³ Ver. 22—38.

⁶ Ver. 44, 45.

the seventh month, God showed his people by the moon-shine, what should happen to them in the year following.⁹ They pretended, that if any one went out into the moon-shine in that night in a proper dress, he would see the shadow of his body diverse, according to what would happen to him. The shadow of his hand held out would want a finger, if he was to lose a friend that year. His right-hand would cast no shadow, if his son was to die; his left-hand, if his daughter. If the person himself was to die, then his shadow would appear a head, or, perhaps, his body cast no shadow at all, his shadow being departed from him. It would be trifling to endeavour to show that Caleb and Joshua intended nothing of this sort. The use of the word shadow for protection is an easy metaphor. The strength of the Israelites was thought by Joshua and Caleb to be the Lord's being with them; under which consideration they looked upon the Canaanites as deserted of God, and therefore unable to bear up against them. This was the whole of what they endeavoured to represent to the people; but no expression of Scripture can be so clear and express, which superstition may not turn to fancy and fable. The Greeks had a whim about the shadow of those who entered¹ the temple of the Arcadian Jupiter, not altogether unlike this fiction of the Rabbins; and the Monkish tale, which some of our vulgar people can still tell, of their shadow in the night of St. Mark's festival, was, perhaps, derived from it.

Moses was ordered to lead the Israelites back towards the Red Sea again;² and after their unsuccessful attempt against the Canaanites,³ they began their retreat. We hear but little more of them for about thirty-seven years; during which time they marched up and down the wilderness, and made seventeen encampments,⁴ from their leaving Rithmah in the wilderness of Paran,⁵ to their coming to Kadesh in the wilderness of Zin.⁶ Their being obliged to make this retreat, and deferring their entrance into Canaan, raised discontents among them, and very probably occasioned the rebellion of Korah, Dathan, and Abiram, which happened about this time. Two hundred and fifty princes of the assembly were concerned in it;⁷ and many thousands of the people, as may be supposed from the number of those who perished by the plague,⁸ were swallowed up in the earth,⁹ or consumed by the fire.¹ The heads of the conspiracy were, Korah a Levite, Dathan and Abiram the sons of Eliah, and On the son of Peleth, of the tribe of Reu-

⁹ Buxtorf. Synagog. Judiac. cxvi, p. 363.

¹ Ομοιωματος φασαι, τος με το τε της αλυστης ομοιωτας παρ' Αρκαδιαν αριστος γινωσκει. Vid. Polyb. Hist. lib. xvi, c. 11.

² Numb. xiv, 25.

⁴ Chap. xxxiii, 19—36.

⁶ Chap. xxxiii, 36.

⁸ Ver. 49.

³ Ver. 44, 45.

⁵ Compare xii, 16, with xxxiii, 18.

⁷ Numb. xvi, 1, 2.

⁹ Ver. 32.

¹ Ver. 35.

ben. They contended, that there was no reason for so great subjection to, and dependance upon Moses and Aaron;² that the priesthood ought not to have been appropriated to Aaron and his family; for that *all the congregation was holy, every one of them; and the Lord amongst them.*³ They remonstrated against Moses, that he had brought them out of Egypt, a very plentiful country; that he had no real intention ever to bring them into Canaan; that he designed only to carry them about, through innumerable difficulties, until he could inure them to servitude, and make himself altogether a prince over them;⁴ that to deny this to be his aim, would suppose that the people had no eyes to see the situation of their affairs, and the prospects which were before them.⁵ Moses had by express command from God denounced to the congregation, that not one of them, except Caleb and Joshua, should enter into Canaan; that all the rest who were above twenty years old, when they were polled after coming out of Egypt, should die in the wilderness, and the younger generation only should come into the land.⁶ This had put them all into so great a ferment, that even a miraculous interposition of the divine power was not immediately sufficient to subdue the spirit of their rebellion; for we read, that on the morrow after the earth had swallowed up Dathan and Abiram and all that belonged to them,⁷ after Korah and his company were consumed with fire from the Lord,⁸ all the congregation murmured against Moses and against Aaron, and accused them of having killed the Lord's people.⁹ But hereupon God sent a plague among them, and took off fourteen thousand by it,¹ and also gave them a farther evidence by the blossoming of Aaron's rod, that he was the person whom God had appointed to be priest for his people.² After the punishment of the plague, and the testimony of the farther miracle in Aaron's rod, their opposition ceased;³ Aaron's rod was by divine command laid up in the tabernacle in memory of this miraculous confirmation of his priesthood.⁴ The people expressed themselves now convinced, that whoever presumed to intrude into the service of the tabernacle, would be pursued by divine vengeance unto death.⁵ The laws, mentioned in the xviiith and xixth chapters of Numbers, were given about this time.

Whilst the Israelites were in the wilderness, some writers suppose that Sesostrius was king of Egypt; and that he raised a powerful army, and conquered a great part of the then known world. They suppose him to be the son of Pharaoh, who in pursuit of the Israelites was drowned in the Red Sea. Archbishop Usher was of this opinion;⁶ and the late learned

² Numb. xvi, 3.

³ Ver. 14.

⁴ Ver. 35.

⁵ Chap. xvii.

⁶ Ibid.

⁷ Ibid.

⁸ Chap. xiv, 28—33.

⁹ Ver. 41.

¹ Ibid.

² Annals, A. M. 2522, p. 21.

³ Ver. 3, 13.

⁴ Chap. xvi, 32.

⁵ Ver. 49.

⁶ Ver. 10.

bishop Cumberland endeavours to support it.⁷ The substance of what he argues upon the subject amounts to, 1. That Sesostris was the brother of the Grecian Danaus; and, therefore, since Danaus is confessed to have lived about the time of Moses,⁸ that Sesostris must be likewise placed in the same age. 2. That according to the testimony of the ancient writers, Sesostris was the son of Amenophis, the Pharaoh who was drowned in the Red Sea. If indeed either of these assertions can be supported, Sesostris must be placed in these times. But if both these arguments may be refuted, Aristotle's general opinion, cited by the learned bishop, that Sesostris lived before Mines,⁹ or Apollonius's supposing that he planted colonies in Colchis before the Argonautic expedition,¹ or Pliny's hinting that he lived before the Trojan war, will be of no great weight; for it is known, that very considerable writers have mistaken the true time of the reign of Sesostris.²

I. Bishop Cumberland contends, that Danaus and Sesostris were brothers; but a supposed citation from Manetho, in Josephus, is the only proof of this fraternity.³ Manetho is supposed to have said, that Sesostris was called Ægyptus, and that Armais his brother was Danaus. I must confess, I suspect this passage; for the words cited seem not to be those of Manetho, but of Josephus.⁴ Josephus, after having given a large citation from Manetho, adds what, I conceive, he inferred from him to be true. And I rather think so, because nothing which comes up to what is here cited, appears in the remains of Manetho, as transmitted to us by either Africanus or Eusebius; though they have both given us the list of kings cited by Josephus, and one of them some words of Manetho, from which Josephus might probably make his inference. Africanus transmits to us the series of kings, but has not remarked any relation between any two of them.⁵ But Eusebius at the name of Armes or Armais, calls him also Danaus, and records that he reigned in Egypt five years, and then fled out of the kingdom from his brother Ægyptus, and went to Greece, and reigned at Argos;⁶ so that from Eusebius it seems probable, that Manetho had hinted that Danaus and Ægyptus were brothers. Josephus supposed that Ægyptus and Sesostris were one and the same person; and hence concluded, that Manetho had suggested Danaus and Sesostris to be so related. This seems to me to be the foundation of what is cited in and from Josephus. That Danaus was indeed the brother of Ægyptus, may be proved from many ancient writers;⁷ but ⁷ Sanchoniatho. sect. 4, p. 387.

⁸ Aristot. Polit. lib. vii, c. 10.

² See Pref. to vol. ii.

⁴ The words in Josephus are, καὶ γὰρ οὗτος ὁ μὲν Σέσωσις καλεῖται Ἀγυπτιεύς, Ἀρμαίης δὲ ὁ ἀδελφεὸς αὐτοῦ Δαναός.

⁶ Syncell. Chronograph. p. 73; Euseb. Chron. p. 16.

⁷ Apollod. lib. ii, c. i; Chron. Alexandrin. Cedren. lib. i; Euseb. in Chronic. ib.; Prideaux in Not. Historic. ad Chron. Marmor. Ep. ix.

⁵ See vol. ii, b. viii.

¹ Apollon. Argonaut. lib. iv.

³ Joseph. contra. Apion. lib. i, c. 15.

⁶ Vid. Syncell. Chronograph. p. 72.

it appears evident, from divers circumstances recorded concerning each of them, that Ægyptus and Sesostris were not the same person. Balus the son of Neptune and Libya married Anchinoë daughter of Nilus, and had two sons by her, Ægyptus and Danaus.⁶ Thus it appears, that these two persons were brothers; but if we pursue the history of Ægyptus, we may evidently see that he and Sesostris were not the same person. Ægyptus had fifty sons, as Danaus had fifty daughters;⁷ but Sesostris had only six children.¹ Ægyptus was indeed treacherously dealt with by his brother Danaus, and so was Sesostris by a brother; but in a manner very different. It is a known story, how the fifty daughters of Danaus were married, each of them to a son of Ægyptus, and how all of them, except one, killed their husbands, by the order of Danaus their father. Thus Danaus attempted to have his brother's family extinct;² but the attempt upon Sesostris made by his brother, was of another sort. At Sesostris's return home from his conquests, his brother invited him, his wife and children to an entertainment, and fired the house where he received them, with design to burn them.³ Sesostris enjoyed himself in Egypt after his conquests many years in peace, and died in his own country, and was succeeded in his kingdom by his son;⁴ but Ægyptus the brother of Danaus was an exile from Egypt as well as Danaus, and died and was buried in Achaia in Greece,⁵ and his only surviving son Lyncæus never was king of Egypt, but succeeded Danaus in the kingdom of Argos,⁶ and was buried in that country in the same tomb with Hypermnestra his wife.⁷ Thus Ægyptus and Sesostris were two different persons, the circumstances of whose lives, deaths, and children, will in nowise coincide, but are very diverse from one another; and therefore it cannot be conclusive to argue that Danaus was brother of Sesostris, because Danaus and Ægyptus are recorded to have been thus related. Diodorus Siculus and Herodotus are very large in their accounts of Sesostris;⁸ and both minutely mention the circumstances of his brother's treachery;⁹ but neither of them hint that Danaus had been his brother. Danaus lived about the time of Moses;¹ and consequently Ægyptus in the same age; but as Ægyptus appears not to have been Sesostris, the fraternity between Ægyptus and Danaus can have no effect towards proving the time of Sesostris's reign.

⁶ Apollod. lib. ii. c. i; Not. Eustath. et Didymi in Homer. Il. a. ver. 42.

⁷ Id. ibid. Pausan. in Corinth. c. 25.

¹ Herodot. lib. ii, c. 107.

² Apollod. Eustath. et Didym. in loc. sup. citat. Pausan. in Corinthiacis.

³ Diodor. Sic. lib. i, c. 57; Herodot. lib. ii, c. 107.

⁴ Diodor. ubi sup. et c. 59; Herodot. lib. ii, c. 111.

⁵ Pausan. in Achaic. c. 22.

⁶ Id. in Corinthiac. c. 16.

⁷ Id. ibid. et c. 21.

⁸ Diodor. lib. i; Herodot. lib. ii.

⁹ Diodor. lib. i, c. 57; Herodot. lib. ii, c. 107.

¹ See vol. ii, b. viii; Photii extract. c. lib. xi; Diodor. Sic.; Photii Biblioth. p. 1151.

II. Bishop Cumberland contends, that Sesostris was the son of Amenophis, who was the Pharaoh that was drowned in pursuit of the Israelites in the Red Sea. He cites Manetho and Chæremon in Josephus to prove that Amenophis was the king, in whose reign the Israelites went out of Egypt.² This Amenophis, he says, was the father of Ramesses, who was also called Ægyptus, and had Danaus for his brother; and Ægyptus and Sesostris were the same person. But 1. Amenophis was not the king in whose reign the Israelites left Egypt. Josephus indeed remarks, that Manetho in one particular place asserts it;³ and that Chæremon agrees with him in it.⁴ But then he remarks, that it was a mere fiction of Manetho, contrary to what he himself had expressly owned,⁵ in other parts of his works, and that Chæremon erred in agreeing with him in it;⁶ so that the very authorities upon which the learned bishop would argue, that Amenophis, his supposed father of Sesostris, had been the Egyptian king, who reigned at the Jewish exit, have been long ago refuted by Josephus, the very author from whom the bishop had them, and in the very place where he found them. But, 2. If Amenophis was indeed the king who reigned at the Jewish exit; if he was also the father of Ramesses, or Ægyptus the brother of Danaus; yet as it appears from what I above offered, that Ægyptus the brother of Danaus and Sesostris were in nowise the same person; nothing can be concluded from the learned bishop's argument to prove that Sesostris had lived in these times. Here therefore I will leave this subject, though it might be more largely refuted in every particular belonging to it; but so nice a discussion must surely be superfluous. One thing I confess I am surprised at; I greatly wonder that such learned and judicious writers, as the great authors I have mentioned, could ever entertain such a thought. If Sesostris had lived in these times, and commanded such victorious armies as he was said to be master of would not the camp of the Israelites have fallen in his way; or should we not have had him mentioned among the hints which we have in Scripture of the Canaanitish nations? He must have carried his forces through these countries; but they appear to have enjoyed an uninterrupted peace, until Joshua attacked them. But had the great Sesostris lived in these times, whence, or how should he have raised his armies? When Pharaoh pursued the Israelites to the Red Sea, he took his people with him, all his horses and chariots, and all the chariots of Egypt, and his horsemen and his army.⁷ He and all these perished in the sea.⁸ The kingdom had been just before spoiled of its treasure,⁹ and every family weakened by the loss of the first born.¹ Can it then appear probable,

² Sanhoniatho. p. 398.

³ Lib. contra Appion. i, c. 32.

⁴ Id. ibid.

⁵ Ver. 28.

⁶ Chap. xii, 36.

⁷ Lib. contra Appion. l. i, c. 24.

⁸ Joseph. ubi sup.

⁹ Exod. xiv. 6, 7, 9.

¹ Ver. 29, 30.

that in such a deplorable crisis of affairs, a king of this country should attempt and pursue a variety of conquests of foreign nations? Egypt must at this time have been reduced so low, that it might have been an easy prey to any invasion. The Israelites many times thought so, and were therefore frequently tempted and inclined to return thither, when they met with discouraging difficulties in their expectations of Canaan. When the spies, who had been employed to search the land, had intimidated the congregation, by magnifying the strength and stature of the inhabitants, the Israelites were for making them a captain to lead them back to Egypt.² They knew the fruitfulness of this country, were sensible that it must be under a feeble government; and though they supposed themselves not able to conquer the Canaanites, who were in their full strength, yet they were not afraid of an exhausted nation. This indeed was a natural way of thinking: but that Sesostris should be the son of Pharaoh, who was drowned in the Red Sea, and that in the state to which his father's misfortunes must have reduced Egypt, he should immediately find strength sufficient to subdue kingdom after kingdom, and erect himself a large empire over many great and flourishing nations; this must be thought by any one who duly considers things, to seem at first sight a most romantic fiction.

It may, perhaps, be expected, that I should not only say, who was not, but who really was the Pharaoh that was drowned in the Red Sea; but perhaps I may not be able to determine this point, so as to have no doubts remaining about it. However, as the Egyptian antiquities have been the study of many learned writers in divers ages, and great pains have been taken to settle and deduce a reasonable and consistent account of them; it may not be unacceptable to such as have not opportunity of informing themselves better, if I here, once for all, set before the reader some account of the works or remains, which are most commonly cited for these antiquities; after which he may judge for himself, how far we can fix the particular time of any reign or transaction, which belongs to the history of this people. Now the authorities most generally appealed to upon this subject are, 1. The old Chronographeon. 2. The Tomes of Manetho. 3. The Catalogue of Eratosthenes. 4. Some extracts from Manetho in Josephus. 5. The Chronographia of Africanus. 6. The Chronicon of Eusebius. 7. The Chronographia of Syncellus. And, 8. The Canon Chronicus of our learned countryman, Sir John Marsham.

1. We are told of an old Egyptian Chronographeon, of which Syncellus has preserved some remains, or rather an imperfect account. But I may offer the whole of what he gives us of it, in the following translation of his words. According to him it was thus³ worded:

² Numb. xiv, 3, 4.

"Time we do not assign to Vulcan, for he is ever. Sol the son of Vulcan reigned 30,000 years. Then Saturn and the other gods, being twelve, reigned 3984 years. Then the eight demi-gods, who were kings, reigned 217 years. And after these were set down fifteen generations of the Cynic Cycle, taking up the space of 443 years. Then came the 16th dynasty of Tanite kings, containing eight (generations, or) reigns of 190 years. Next to these the 17th dynasty of Memphites, four reigns, 103 years. After them the 18th dynasty of Memphites, fourteen reigns, 348 years. Then the 19th dynasty of Diospolitans, five reigns, 194 years. Then the 20th dynasty of Diospolitans, eight reigns, 228 years. Next the 21st dynasty of Tanites, six reigns, 121 years. Then the 22d dynasty of Tanites, three reigns, 48 years. The 23d dynasty of Diospolitans, two reigns, 19 years. The 24th dynasty of Saitans, three reigns, 44 years. The 25th dynasty of Ethiopians, three reigns, 44 years. The 26th dynasty of Memphites, seven reigns, 177 years. The 27th dynasty of Persians, five reigns, 124 years.⁴ The 29th dynasty of Tanites, . . . reigns,⁵ 39 years. The 30th dynasty completes the whole, consisting of one Tanite king, his reign 118 years."

This is the account we have of the ancient Chronographeon; and I would remark concerning it, 1. That, excepting the three or four first lines, it cannot be thought to be given us in the very words of the Chronographeon; rather, it is an abstract of what was supposed to be the contents of it. The Chronographeon itself, as it particularized the reign of Sol, and then of Saturn; so, unquestionably, it exhibited distinctly the reigns of the other gods, and distributed such a part of the 3984 years, said to be the sum of all their reigns, as belonged respectively to, and was made up from the course of each of them. In like manner, I imagine, it recounted the eight demi-gods, and the fifteen Cynic heroes, more distinctly, and in a larger narration, than we here find them; for in this account, I take it, we have only the beginning of the Chronographeon, and then the sum or heads of what followed, and not the particulars at large, which were contained in it. But I would observe, 2. That we have reason to think, that the foregoing account was not originally intended for an account of the old Chronographeon only; but rather for an account of the Chronographeon and of some other work accommodated and connected with it. From the beginning of the account to the end of what is said of the heroes of the Cynic Cycle,

³ Οὗτω πως ἐστὶ λεγόμενον. Ἡρόδοτος χρόνος καὶ οὗτος Syncell. p. 51.

⁴ Through some defect of the copy, we have here an omission of the 28th dynasty.

⁵ We have here a like omission of the number of the reigns in the 29th.

we have the substance of the old Chronographeon. From what follows thus, then the 16th dynasty of Tanite kings, &c. we have the contents, not of the old Chronographeon, but of some later chronicle, which was thought to supply what the old Chronographeon did not contain, towards completing the Egyptian history. In the old Chronographeon, next to the Cynic Cycle, were lists of the kings of three kingdoms, first of the Auritans, secondly of the Mestæans, and thirdly of the Egyptians.⁶ And so many names of kings were probably contained in each list, as had reigned to the time, perhaps, when the Chronographeon was composed. But the author of the account above produced, not purposing to go on with the more obsolete names of the old Chronographeon, but taking the Auritans to be the same nation as were afterwards called Tanites, the Mestæans the same as Memphites, and the Egyptians the same as Diospolitans; and knowing that a later chronicle at its 16th dynasty began its account of the Tanite kings; and in its 17th and 18th its account of the Memphites; and in the next dynasty its account of the Diospolitans; he thought this to be a point of time where he was sure the two registers, from which he copied, coincided; and therefore having given the contents of the more ancient one, down to this point, instead of going on in that any farther, here, says he, we are come to the 16th dynasty, an epoch well known to those who had perused the accounts of Manetho, and from hence he adds dynasty to dynasty down to what he took to be the end of the Egyptian history.

If we do not take the account I am treating of, in this light, it will be hard to reconcile the several parts of it to one another. We have in it the contents of the Egyptian history of their gods, demi-gods, Cynic Cycle, and then comes the 16th dynasty.—It must be obvious here to ask, how comes this to be called the 16th dynasty; for where are the preceding fifteen? The learned editor of Syncellus was aware of this difficulty, and therefore suggests in his annotations, that Γεναιο τε Κυκλῳ συνεκτε should be read, δυναστίας τε, that instead of fifteen generations of the Cynic Cycle, we should read fifteen dynasties;⁷ but this is to cut the difficulty, and not to solve it. This was certainly not the intention of the author of the account, who supposed that the whole history, from the beginning of the Chronographeon to the end of the dynasties he added to it, contained in all but thirty dynasties; and accordingly endeavours to sum up the amount of them all to be thirty-six thousand five hundred and twenty-five years.⁸ But if we begin the dynasties from the Cynic Cycle, the sum of them will fall short myriads of years of that number; and the

⁶ Πρωτοι μὲν τῶν Αὐριτῶν, δεύτεροι δὲ τῶν Μεστῶν, τρίτοι δὲ Αἰγυπτίων. Syncell. p. 51.

⁷ Vid. Annotat. Goar. ad Syncell. p. 51.

⁸ Vid. Euseb. Chronic. p. 7; Syncell. p. 52.

Chronographeon will contain the history of the gods and demi-gods, besides the dynasties, which the composer of this account had no notion that it did.

I might add farther, that if we take the account above mentioned as giving us the contents of the old Chronographeon only, we shall destroy the supposed antiquity of the Chronographeon. For as the 27th dynasty mentions the Persian kings,⁹ of whom Cambyses was the first;¹ so it is evident, that the other three dynasties carry on the Egyptian history to about the time of Nectanebus,² and there Manetho's tomes ended.³ Nectanebus was expelled his kingdom by Ochus king of Persia, about three hundred and fifty years before CHRIST,⁴ A. M. 3654. Manetho dedicated his tomes to Ptolemy Philadelphus before A. M. 3757,⁵ within about one hundred years after Nectanebus; so that if the old Chronographeon reached down to Nectanebus, Manetho's work and that must have been of about the same antiquity. I ought here to take notice, that some very learned writers have supposed this old Chronographeon was nothing else but an abridgment of Manetho. This was Scaliger's opinion, and accordingly, in his Chronicon of Eusebius, he puts upon it the following title: Θεων Βασιλεια κατὰ το παλαιον χρονικον εκ των Μανηθω. Or, "the reign of the gods according to the old Chronicle out of the books of Manetho."⁶ This, I believe, was Dean Prideaux's sentiment; who tells us we have an epitome of Manetho's work preserved in Syncellus,⁷ taking, I suppose, this Chronographeon to be that epitome. But they were probably led to think it so, from Manetho's work and the Chronographeon's ending at the same period; and would perhaps have thought differently of it, had they duly observed how the account we have of the Chronographeon differs, the former part of it from the latter part, in a very remarkable particular, which shows that it had been an abstract not of one, but of two different works; the former part exhibiting the contents of a work, which had not been divided into such dynasties as the latter part is made up of; the latter part containing the substance of one half of a work, which had comprehended in thirty dynasties the whole Egyptian history.

That the old Chronographeon was a different and distinct work from that of Manetho is evident from Syncellus; for he collected from it, that Manetho had committed errors;⁸ and suggests, that the period of time, which the old Chronographeon digested into dynasties, was not the same with that

⁹ Καὶ μετὰ τούτοις καὶ δυναστεία Περσῶν α. στον ραβ. Syncell. p. 52.

¹ Vid. Syncell. p. 76; Prideaux, Connect. part i, b. iii.

² Syncell. p. 76, 77; Prideaux, b. iii, vii.

⁴ Prideaux, b. vii.

³ Syncell. p. 256.

⁵ Ib. part ii, b. ii.

⁶ Euseb. Chronic. p. 6.

⁷ Connect. part i. b. vii, ad annum 350.

⁸ Εἰς α καὶ τοῦ Μανηθῶ παρατηρεῖται νομίζω. Syncell. p. 51.

which Manetho sorted into divisions of a like denomination.⁹ From the old Chronographeon, Manetho took a hint, which led him to compose the Egyptian history in such sections;¹ but the dynasties of the old Chronographeon were astronomical, not historical.² The page of Syncellus, from which we might hope to form a judgment of this old Chronographeon, is printed very incorrectly; or perhaps never had the last hand of its author; for Syncellus died before he had completed and corrected his work;³ and, I should think, has left us in this page rather some hints, which he might intend afterwards to perfect, than a clear and complete account of the old Chronographeon. As far as we can guess, from his short and imperfect suggestions, the old Chronographeon divided a very large period of time, a space of thirty-six thousand five hundred and twenty-five years, first into thirty dynasties, then, en γενεαῖς καλὴν οὖν, it subdivided it again into one hundred and thirteen generations.⁴ The Egyptians reputed that a period of thirty-six thousand five hundred and twenty-five years was the space of time, in which the luminaries of Heaven performed, what they called an entire revolution of the world;⁵ and perhaps at the time of the composure of the Chronographeon, they might think that their revolution of the Zodiac was performed in one thousand two hundred and seventeen years and six months; and so was repeated thirty times in the course of years above mentioned;⁶ and this might lead them to divide that great period by thirty into dynasties. Now if I could trace the fictions of their romantic astronomy, and determine precisely the particular lights of Heaven, which in the first ages were called their gods, and calculate exactly how they measured the courses of each of them; I might probably deduce one hundred and thirteen other periods contained in the thirty-six thousand five hundred and twenty-five years, which they might call generations, and show, how in these their said gods completed again other courses, which had relations to one another. Of this sort were the thirty dynasties and one hundred and thirteen generations of the old Chronographeon, and belonged to the courses of the Sun, Moon, and Stars, which were the gods of Egypt in these times.⁷ After these the Chronographeon gave account of the demi-gods and their times, but not in dynasties; and who these were, I have already considered.⁸ Next, it related the

⁹ Περὶ τῶν λ. δυναστῶν—χρονὸν αἰώνιον, καὶ ἡ τοῦ αὐτοῦ τοῦ Μανέθου. Syncell. p. 51.

¹ Ἐκ τούτων ἀλλὰ δὲ λαβὼν τὰς ἀφορμὰς. Id. p. 52.

² Ἀγυπτιῶν μὲν—τὰς περιόδους καὶ μυριάδας ὅσων, καταδύσας τὰς τῶν παρ' αὐτοῦ ἀστρολογικῶν ἐξόδων. Id. p. 17.

³ Prefat. in Syncell.

⁴ Syncell. p. 51.

⁵ Marsham, Can. Chron. p. 9. See vol. i. b. i.

⁶ Afterwards they computed a revolution of the Zodiac more accurately to be fourteen hundred and sixty years, still falling a little short of a true calculation. Censorin. de Die Natali, c. 18.

⁷ See vol. i. b. i. b. 5.

⁸ Book i.

heroes of the Cynic Cycle;² and lastly, added the names of such Auritan, Mestæan, and Egyptian kings,³ as had reigned down to the times where the Chronographeon ended. Let us now consider in the next place the tomes of Manetho.

II. Manetho was a learned and noble Egyptian at the head of their sacra.⁴ About the time, or soon after the Septuagint translation was made of the Hebrew Scriptures, he was ordered by Ptolemy Philadelphus to compile the history of his own country. Having consulted the sacred books of the Egyptians, and extracted, as he pretended, what had been transcribed into them from their most ancient monuments, and completed his undertaking in the Greek tongue, he dedicated it to Ptolemy, at whose command he had composed it.⁵ His work contained an account of the gods, demi-gods, heroes, and mortals, that had reigned in Egypt;⁶ and herein the subject matter of it bears a resemblance to the old Chronographeon, for that, as I have said, began with the reigns of Sol and the other gods, then gave account of the demi-gods, then of the Cynic heroes, and lastly of the Auritan, Mestæan, and Egyptian kings. Manetho divided his history into thirty dynasties and one hundred and thirteen generations;⁷ but he differed from the Chronographeon, in that the times he treated under these titles were not the same periods with those, which the Chronographeon exhibited under the like denominations.⁸ The dynasties and generations of the Chronographeon were astronomical, prior to the reigns or lives of the demi-gods; but Manetho's began from the reigns of the demi-gods, were carried on through the reigns of the gods, heroes, and mortals, and terminated with Nectanebus. Manetho was unquestionably a great master of the Egyptian learning, and might think it a point of their doctrines, that all things had their period in thirty-six thousand five hundred and twenty-five years.⁹ He had lived to see the ancient glory of his country passed over; for Egypt was in the possession of a foreign race of kings in his time. Nectanebus was the last Egyptian who sat on the throne of this nation.¹⁰ Upon his flight from Ochus king of Persia, Egypt came into the hands of the Persians, and afterwards was reduced by Alexander the Great;¹¹ at whose death it became a part of the provinces of Ptolemy, one of his captains, who in a few years became king of it, and his son Ptolemy Philadelphus reigned when Manetho wrote his history. Thus Manetho had seen of the Egypt-

² Vid. b. i.

¹ Syncell. p. 51.

³ Syncell. p. 40; Voss. de Hist. Græc. lib. i. c. 14.

⁴ Joseph. contra Ap. lib. i. c. 14; Syncell. p. 40.

⁵ Εἰς τὴν ἀρχὴν τῆς ἀνατολῆς ἵσταται τὸν ἀρχοῦντα παρ' αὐτοῦ Σάου, καὶ ἡμεῖς, καὶ ἡμεῖς, καὶ Σάου, καὶ Σάου, καὶ Σάου, καὶ Σάου.

⁶ Πρὸς γὰρ τὴν αἰὶνότητα τῶν ἀνατολῆς καὶ ἀνατολῆς. Syncell. p. 51.

⁷ Οὐ τοῦ αὐτοῦ [χρονίου] τοῦ Μανέθου. Id. p. 51.

⁸ Vid. Jamblich. de Myst. Egypt. c. de Deo atque Diis.

⁹ Prideaux, Connect. part i, b. vii.

¹⁰ Id. ibid.

ian race of kings, that their times had been fulfilled, and their kingdom departed from them; and upon the dogmata of the Egyptian learning, he conceived that such a revolution might indeed happen at the end of thirty-six thousand five hundred and twenty-five years, and therefore deduced his dynasties according to it. Thus he made his work not dishonourable to his country, or to the stock of which himself was descended;¹ for it showed that the Egyptian reigns had been carried down to a full and complete period; and it might be likely to give Ptolemy no disadvantageous sentiments of the Egyptian sacra and learning, if it could suggest to him, that his kingdom was founded near the beginning of a new order of ages,² and might, under the protection of the same gods, be extended to as late a date.

Syncellus has in several places, from Africanus and other writers, given us the number of years supposed to belong to the parts of Manetho's history. But the reader would have little satisfaction, if I were to collect and compare them; for they do not appear to be the true numbers, nor are they always consistent with one another.³ Syncellus unquestionably never saw the work of Manetho;⁴ for no remains of it were extant in his time, other than what later writers had cited from him. And the several writers, who had cited Manetho, had so calculated, reduced,⁵ and disposed what they cited, to make it suit such schemes as themselves had formed of the Egyptian antiquities, that Syncellus could at best only guess, what Manetho's scheme was, or what precise number of years he really assigned to the several particulars of it. Manetho composed his work in three tomes, volumes, or rather books;⁶ which contained, as above, thirty dynasties, deduced through one hundred and thirteen reigns, successions, or generations.⁷ In the former dynasties the history of the gods, demi-gods, and heroes were contained; in the latter the history of the mortal kings;⁸ and according to the supplement to the old Chronographeon above mentioned, the account of the mortal kings took up the last fifteen dynasties;⁹ and in them were set down the reigns or successions of between seventy and eighty kings,¹ in the space of seventeen or eigh-

¹ Manetho was of the Sebennite race. Syncell. p. 40. A family which in Nectanebus ascended the throne. Prideaux ubi sup.

² Virgil compliments the Augustan age, in which the affairs of Rome were come to a new settlement, in this manner: Magnus ab integro seclorum nascitur ordo. Eclog. iv, lib. 5.

³ Syncell. p. 18, 19, 52.

⁴ Marsham, Can. Chron. p. 3.

⁵ Vid Syncell. p. 19. Numeri isti non tam Manethonis sunt, quam Eusebii vel Panodori. Marsham, ubi sup.

⁶ Syncell. p. 52.

⁷ Ibid.

⁸ Ibid.

⁹ Ibid.

¹ The number of kings will be found to be seventy-seven, if we fill up the 28th dynasty with the reign of one king, and the 29th with five, and suppose the 30th to contain the reign, not of one, but of three kings: and that these supplements and corrections are just, the reader may be satisfied from the ac-

teen hundred years.³ If the number of kings were seventy-seven,³ add to these fifteen Cynie heroes,⁴ eight demi-gods,⁵ twelve gods,⁶ and Sol the son of Vulcan, and we have, perhaps, Manetho's one hundred and thirteen generations. In like manner I might attempt to fix the numbers of years which he assigned to the several generations. If the reigns of his kings amounted to between seventeen and eighteen hundred years, then the reigns of his gods, demi-gods, and heroes, filled up the space of almost thirty-five thousand; for all together made thirty-six thousand five hundred and twenty-five years. The numbers of years of the reigns of the kings, as calculated in the supplement to the old Chronographieon, are seventeen hundred and ten.⁷ The dynasties ended with Nectanebus, A. M. 3654;⁸ count back from hence seventeen hundred and ten years, and we begin the reign of the first king, A. M. 1944. Menes, or the Mizraim of Moses,⁹ went into Egypt about A. M. 1772, removed from the land of Zoan there into a farther part of the country about A. M. 1881, and died about A. M. 1943;¹ so that Manetho's accounts began the kings about the time of Menes.² Of this sort, I believe, was the work of Manetho: and it is obvious, that it did not appear to carry the accounts of the Egyptian kings so far backward as the Greeks must suppose they ought to be carried, from what had been before published of them in the Greek tongue. Herodotus wrote about a century and a half earlier than Manetho;³ and according to what he collected, the Egyptians had had from Menes to Cambyzes above three hundred and fifty kings.⁴ When Herodotus was in Egypt, he was carried into a temple, where he counted the number of the statues of the priests, that were set up there, and he reckoned three hundred and forty-five;⁵ and the Egyptians informed him, that they had so many priests, and counts given of these dynasties by Africanus and Eusebius, Syncell. p. 76, 77, and from the true history of Egypt from Nectanebus's advancement to the throne, to the flight of Nectanebus. See Prideaux, Connect. part i, b. vii.

³ If the reader counts up the numbers of years assigned to the reigns of the kings in the several dynasties annexed to the Chronographieon, supposing six years to be the reign of the king omitted in the 28th dynasty, (see this dynast. in African et Euseb. Syncell. p. 76, 77,) and supposing the years of the 30th dynasty to be 25 not 18, (consult Prideaux's Connect. for the reigns of the kings which belonged to that dynasty,) he will find the sum of years to be seventeen hundred and ten.

³ Vid. quæ sup.

⁴ Chronograph. Syncell. p. 51.

⁶ Ibid.

⁶ Ibid.

⁷ Vid. quæ sup.

⁸ Syncell. p. 256.

⁹ See vol. i, b. iv.

¹ Ibid.

² I cannot think the numbers are printed so accurately, or that we may be able, perhaps, to correct them with so much certainty and exactness, as to determine absolutely that this was the real number fixed by Manetho; from this number we may form a general notion of his computations, and that is all we can pretend to endeavour at.

³ Compute the time of Herodotus from Prideaux, Connect. part i, b. vi, ad an. 444.

⁴ Herodot. Hist. lib. ii.

⁵ Ibid. c. 142.

as many kings, from Menes, their first king, to Sethos.⁶ We cannot suppose that Herodotus should herein publish an absolute falsehood; and if Herodotus did indeed see such a collection of statues, how is it possible, that there should have been no more kings of Egypt, than what Manetho seems to have suggested? But this matter may be easily cleared. The Egyptians had collected into this temple the statues of priests from a multitude of cities, and might, in showing them to strangers, ostentatiously set off the number of their priests and kings, not telling how they had collected them, and they might hereby easily send into the world enlarged accounts of the Egyptian antiquities. But Manetho knew the affairs of his country too well to be led into this error. He supposed one continued empire to have subsisted and been maintained in Egypt from Menes to Nectanebus; that the seat of it had in different ages been at different cities; sometimes at This, sometimes at Memphis, sometimes at Diospolis, and sometimes at Tanis. Accordingly he deduces and connects a series of those kings, whom he imagined to have had in their times the supreme command; omitting all others their contemporaries, whom he supposed to have governed but as deputies to these, in their respective provinces or cities. However, Manetho's account does not seem to have given an entire satisfaction; for in a little time after he had composed it, in the reign of Ptolemy Euergetes, the immediate successor of Philadelphus, who had employed Manetho, Eratosthenes was ordered to make a farther collection of the Egyptian kings.

III. Eratosthenes was a Cyrenian, had studied at Athens, was of great eminence for his parts and learning, had an invitation into Egypt from Ptolemy Euergetes, who made him one of the keepers of the royal library at Alexandria,⁷ and commanded him to give him a catalogue of the Egyptian kings. Eratosthenes hereupon made a list of the kings, who had reigned at Thebes or Diospolis, and to every king's name added the number of years in his reign. His catalogue is preserved in Syncellus,⁸ and the names of the kings, and number of years of the respective reigns set down in it, are as follows. I. Menes reigned years 62. II. Athothes 59. III. Another Athothes 32. IV. Diabies 19. V. Pemphos 18. VI. Tægar Amachus Momcheiri 79. VII. Stæchus 6. VIII. Gosormies 30. IX. Mares 26. X. Anoyphes 20. XI. Sirius 18. XII. Chnoubus Gneurus 22. XIII. Ramosis 13. XIV. Biyris 10. XV. Saophis Comastes 29. XVI. Sensaophis 27. XVII. Moscheris Heliodotus 31. XVIII. Musthis 33. XIX. Pammus Archondes 35. XX. Apappus Maximus

⁶ Herodot. Hist. lib. ii, c. 142.

⁷ Voss. de Histor. Græc. lib. i, c. 17; Prideaux, Connect. part ii, b. ii.

⁸ Syncell. p. 91—147.

100. XXI. Achesens Ocaras 1. XXII. Nicotris 6. XXIII. Myrtæus Ammonodotus 22. XXIV. Thuosi Mares 12. XXV. Thinillus 8. XXVI. Semphruceates 18. XXVII. Chouthar Taurus 7. XXVIII. Meures Philoscors 12. XXIX. Chomæptha Mundus Philephæstus 11. XXX. Anchunius Ochytirannus 60. XXXI. Penteachyris 16. XXXII. Stamenemes 23. XXXIII. Sistesichermes 55. XXXIV. Mæris 43. XXXV. Siphos, or Mercury, 5. XXXVI. The name of the king is wanting, the years of his reign are 14. XXXVII. Pheuron, or Nilus, 5 years. XXXVIII. Amuthantæus 63. This is the remain we have of Eratosthenes, taken by Syncellus from the annals of Apollodorus.⁹ It begins from Menes, who was the Mizraim of Moses,¹ sixty-two years before the death of Menes, one hundred and twenty-four years, says Syncellus, after the confusion of tongues,² that is, when Menes removed from the land of Tanis into Thebais, A. M. 1881.³ The sum of all the reigns contained in the catalogue amount, according to Syncellus, to one thousand and seventy-six years,⁴ and consequently the catalogue may be computed to end A. M. 2957. But before I leave this work of Eratosthenes, I would offer a few remarks upon it. 1. The nature and manner of it points out, what were the reputed defects of Manetho's performance at the time of composing it. Had Manetho's been esteemed a complete work, Eratosthenes would certainly not have been employed so soon after him. But the number of Egyptian kings suggested by Herodotus, upon the appearance of a strict inquiry, and a very good information, could not but put the learned Greeks at Alexandria, as well as others, upon examining whether Manetho was not deficient in his number of Egyptian kings. With this view Eratosthenes collected the kings of one particular kingdom. There were in Manetho's dynasties but about fifteen kings of the Theban kingdom;⁵ but, besides these, Eratosthenes collected thirty-eight, who had been omitted by Manetho. 2. The learned have very reasonably computed, that Eratosthenes's catalogue was carried down to the time of the first Diospolitan king mentioned in the⁶ dynasties of Manetho, i. e. the king of Diospolis, who was the first of Manetho's XIIth dynasty, was the immediate successor of Amuthantæus, the last of the catalogue of Eratosthenes. 3. It is something difficult to form a computation of the numbers of years belonging to the reigns

⁹ Syncell. p. 91.

¹ Gen. x, 13; vol. i, b. iv.

² Syncell. p. 147.

³ Vol. i, b. iv.

⁴ If the reader sums up the reigns above recounted, he will find them amount to but one thousand and fifty: but I must observe, that in the margin of Syncellus's Chronographia, at the name of Penteachyris, the XXXIst king, it is remarked, that the years of his reign should be read $\mu\epsilon$ not κ , 42 not 16: make this correction, and the sum of years of the catalogue will be one thousand and seventy-six, as Syncellus writes it.

⁵ Vid. Chronograph. xix, xx, xxiii, Dyn.; Syncell. p. 51, 52.

⁶ Marsham, Can. Chron. p. 3; Prideaux, Connect. part ii, b. ii, ad ann. 239.

in Eratosthenes, and in Manetho, suitable to the connecting Eratosthenes's catalogue with Manetho's dynasties in this manner. But I think, we are so far from being sure, that we have every number in either Eratosthenes or Manetho exactly as they left them, or that they themselves did not mistake sometimes, in computing or transcribing the old Egyptian numeral characters, that great stress cannot be laid upon any seeming repugnancies of this nature. As Eratosthenes's catalogue now stands, from the beginning of the catalogue to the reign of Nilus the XXXVIIth king, are nine hundred and eighty-two years; so that Nilus began his reign, according to this account, A. M. 2863. But Dicaearchus computed the reign of Nilus to the four hundred and thirty-sixth year before the first Olympiad;⁷ if we fix the first Olympiad to A. M. 3228,⁸ Nilus began his reign A. M. 2792; seventy-one years earlier than the catalogue suggests. But for errors of this sort, allowances must be given and taken, in many parts of the ancient Egyptian history.

IV. We have in Josephus some citations from Manetho, which ought in the next place to be examined. Josephus tells us from Manetho, that the incursion of the Pastors, who made themselves masters of Egypt,⁹ happened when Timæus was king;¹ that the first Pastor king was Salatis, who reigned nineteen years; and was succeeded by Bæon, who reigned forty-four years. After Bæon reigned Apachnas thirty-six years and seven months, then Apophis sixty-one years, then Janias fifty years one month, after whom Assis forty-two years two months,² and after these, other kings. Josephus informs us, that the Pastors held Egypt in subjection five hundred and eleven³ years; at the end of which term Alisfragmuthosis, a Theban king, gave them a great overthrow, and that his son Thummosis reduced them to leave Egypt.⁴ After this, Josephus from Manetho gives us⁵ a list of Theban kings. I. Tethmosis reigned 25 years 4 months. II. Chebron 19 years. III. Amenophis 20 years 7 months. IV. Amesses 21 years 9 months. V. Mephres 12 years 9 months. VI. Mephrammuthosis 25 years 10 months. VII. Thmosis 9 years 8 months. VIII. Amenophis 30 years 10 months. IX. Orus 36 years 5 months. X. Acencheres 12 years 1 month. XI. Rathotis 9 years. XII. Acencheres 12 years 5 months. XIII. Another Acencheres 12 years 3 months. XIV. Harmais 4 years 1 month. XV. Ramesses 1 year 4 months. XVI. Ramesses Miamon 66 years 2 months. XVII. Amenophis 19 years 6 months. XVIII. Sethosis 59 years.⁶ XIX.

⁷ Apollon. Argonaut. lib. iv, v, 272, in Schol. p. 412.

⁸ Vid. Maraham, Can. Chron. p. 423; Usher's Annals ad ann. Per. Jul. 3938.

⁹ See vol. ii, b. vii, p. 153.

¹ Id. ibid.

² Id. c. 15.

³ Joseph. contra Apion. lib. i, c. 14.

⁴ Id. ibid.

⁵ Id. c. 26.

Rampses or Ramesses 66 years.⁷ Concerning what is thus offered by Josephus, I would observe,

1. That we have no reason to suppose, that the first Pastor kings were a real part of Manetho's Egyptian dynasties. Manetho's purpose was to deduce the succession of the Egyptian kings; but the Pastor kings were not Egyptian; they were foreign invaders, who over-ran Egypt, and reduced a great part of the country into subjection. When therefore Manetho came down to the times where they made their invasion, though he probably took notice of their incursion, their names, and what part of the country they gained possession of, yet he probably continued down the history of the kings of Egypt in the Thebans, who were not reduced by the Pastors. Accordingly, in the epitome of Manetho, we find no dynasty of Pastors;⁸ nor would Africanus,⁹ or Eusebius,¹ I should think, have supposed any, had they duly attended to what must have been the design of Manetho's performance. They might perhaps have remarked the Pastor kings over against, and contemporary with those kings of Thebais, in whose reigns they got possession of a great part of Egypt.

2. The Pastors came into Egypt about A. M. 2420;² until which time Egypt appears in Scripture to have enjoyed a long and uninterrupted peace from its most early ages.³ But now a new or foreign king arose,⁴ unacquainted with what had been transacted in it;⁵ and farther, the sacred pages suggest, that a people had been about this time expelled their country,⁶ who probably might be these Pastors, who invaded Egypt. In like manner, if from A. M. 2420, we count down five hundred and eleven years, the term during which the Pastors kept their conquests, we shall fix their leaving Egypt about A. M. 2931. They had then leave to march into whatever country they liked to go, and which would receive them;⁷ they marched through the desert,⁸ and probably found a reception in some nation of Arabia. They went from Egypt not fewer in number than two hundred and forty thousand,⁹ and consequently the nation which received so considerable an addition to its people must in a little time have grown very populous. Agreeably hereto, about A. M. 3063,¹ within little ⁷ Joseph. contra Apion. lib. i, c. 26.

⁸ Vid. Chronograph.

⁹ Africanus supposes three Pastor-dynasties, 15th, 16th, 17th. Syncell. p. 61.

¹ Eusebius suggests but one Pastor-dynasty, namely his 17th. Euseb. Chron.; Syncell. p. 61.

² See vol. ii, b. vii, p. 156.

³ The learned writers, who would introduce the Pastors in another age, are forced to place them about the first planting of Egypt, in times when we have no mention of the state of it in the Scriptures. See Bishop Cumberland's Sanchoniatho, and his Origines Gentium.

⁴ Exod. i, 8; see vol. ii, b. vii, p. 153.

⁵ Ibid.

⁶ Exod. i, 8; see vol. ii, b. vii, p. 155.

⁷ Joseph. contra Apion. lib. i, c. 14.

⁸ Ibid.

⁹ Ibid.

¹ Usher's Annals.

more than a century, Zerah the Ethiopian or Cushite,² a king in Arabia Petrea, invaded his neighbours with an army of a thousand thousand;³ so that the sacred pages give intimations of the state both of Egypt, and of the neighbouring countries, well answering to the thus fixing the times of the Pastors. Josephus seems to me not to be consistent with himself, in the account he gives from Manetho of the Theban kings.⁴ In one place he says Tummosis the son of Alisfragmuthosis expelled the Pastors.⁵ This Tummosis was surely the king whom he afterwards calls Thmosis, and whom he sets down next to Mephramuthosis.⁶ Yet in recounting these kings, he sets Tethmosis, who, he says, expelled the Pastors, five reigns before Mephramuthosis.⁷ But probably Manetho had rendered this part of his work dark and confused. Manetho took the Israelites and the Pastors to be one and the same people;⁸ and by treating the Jewish exit and the expulsion of the Pastors as one event, he might mention the names of different kings, so as to lead Josephus into this contrariety. If we may form our notion of Manetho's work from the Epitome of it,⁹ Josephus mistook the number of Manetho's Theban kings. The Epitome suggests that he had mentioned only fifteen; five in his 18th dynasty, eight in his 20th, and two in his 23d. And if I knew how to choose the fifteen rightly out of Josephus's list, and to make the first five begin where Eratosthenes's catalogue ends, and continue to the expulsion of the Pastors; and then to choose eight more, whose reigns might carry on the history to Sesostris or Sethosis, who was Sesac, and came against Jerusalem A. M. 3039;¹ I should take the last two of Manetho's Theban kings to be Sesostris and his son Rameses. And I should imagine, I had hereby set Josephus's catalogue right, and made Manetho's account agreeable, in this part of it, to true history.

V. Next to Josephus, we are to consider the work of Sextus Julius Africanus, who was a Christian, lived in the third century, and wrote about a hundred and fifty years after Josephus. He composed a Chronography consisting of two parts; in the former of which he collected, from other more ancient writers, the materials he intended to make use of; in the latter he formed from them a chronicle or historical deduction, beginning from the creation of the world, and carried down to the consulate of Gratus and Seleucus, to the year of our Lord 221, says Sir John Marsham.² Amongst other collections, in the former part of his work, were the dynasties of Manetho; but not such as Manetho left them; for they ² See vol. i, b. iii.

³ 2 Chron. xiv.

⁴ Joseph. contra. Apion. b. i, c. 15.

⁵ Ibid. c. 14.

⁶ Joseph. cont. Apion. lib. i, c. 15.—Africanus and Eusebius call him Tuthmosis.

⁷ Ibid. c. 15.

⁸ Ibid. c. 14, 16, 26.

⁹ Chronograph. in Syncell. p. 51, 52.

¹ See Preface to vol. ii.

² Can. Chron. p. 5.

were new modelled according to some scheme of them formed later than the times of Manetho. For, 1. Manetho's dynasties began with the reigns of the gods, demi-gods, and heroes, and then exhibited the reigns of the mortal kings;³ but the dynasties given us by Africanus begin from the mortal kings,⁴ and omit all that related to the superior beings, who were said to have reigned before them.⁵ 2. Manetho's dynasties of the mortal kings were but fifteen; they began at the 16th dynasty, and ended with the 30th;⁶ but Africanus gives us thirty-one dynasties of Egyptian kings. Upon this account we must conclude, 3. That several of Africanus's dynasties were not in Manetho. Thus the 31st dynasty was not Manetho's; for he carried down his history no farther than to the end of Nectanebus's reign; but this 31st dynasty contains the names of Persian kings, who reigned after Nectanebus was expelled his kingdom.⁷ In like manner Manetho's tomes seem to me not to have had Africanus's 2d dynasty of Thinite kings,⁸ nor the 5th of Elephantine, nor the 6th of Memphites, nor the 15th of Pastors, nor the 22d of Bubastites, as Africanus gives them. Farther, Africanus's 18th dynasty of Theban kings seems to be taken rather from Josephus than from Manetho; for Manetho had in all but 15 Theban kings, and those set down in three dynasties.⁹ As to Africanus's 7th, 8th, 9th, 10th, 19th, 14th, 16th, 17th, and 20th dynasties, they are mere numbers of years, without any names of kings affixed to them;¹ and unquestionably no such dynasties were to be found in Manetho.

It may be here asked, how it can be supposed that Africanus should take away from, and add to Manetho's dynasties in this extravagant manner, or how or whence could he find matter or pretence to do it? I answer, 1. For his omission of what Manetho had recorded prior to the reigns of the mortal kings, it is easy to find a good reason. He thought all that Manetho offered of the reigns of gods, demi-gods, and heroes, to be fable, fiction, or false theology;² and therefore superfluous, not worth his transcribing. 2. There might be in the tomes of Manetho the names of many kings, besides those,

³ Syncell. p. 40.

⁴ Id. p. 54.

⁵ Africanus begins his dynasties thus, Μετα τινος τις αμαθης αγρας Γαλας μεταφραστης Γαλας αγρα—Syncell. ibid.

⁶ Vid. Chronograph. in Syncell. p. 51, 52. και επι πασις λ. δυνασαι.

⁷ The kings of the 31st dynasty are Ochus, Arsaces, Darius. Syncell. p. 77.

⁸ It ought to be here observed, that Africanus perhaps did not in his 1st and 2d dynasty copy after Manetho. Manetho gave a list of Περσικων Ταιμων. Vid. Chronograph. But Africanus's 1st and 2d dynasties are not of Tanite but Θασιτων, of the kings of This, or Thinite kings; so that Africanus had found here a different catalogue of kings from Manetho's, and did not distinguish it.

⁹ Vid. 19th, 20th, 23d dynast. in Chronograph. in Syncell. ubi sup.

¹ Meros numeros inaniter turgentes. Marsham. Can. Chron. p. 5.

² Quæ Manetho μυθον απο αεχμηρος γραφει φανερων απο θμου υμνων γοργων, ista omnia tanquam Scriptore Christiano indignum Africanus aspernat, et in illud tempus rejicit, quod præcessit diluvium. Marsham, p. 5.

of which Manetho supposed his dynasties to consist. Manetho accounted all Egypt, from its rise to Nectanebus, as having been only one empire; and considering it as such, he deduced one continued history of the kings, who had had the supreme rule in it. But as he supposed that the seat of this empire had been at different times in different cities; and agreeably hereto, as his dynasties were sometimes of kings of Tanis, sometimes of Memphis, and sometimes of Diospolis, according as he thought the kings who had the supreme command reigned at this or that city; and as it might happen, whilst the kings of a Memphite or Theban dynasty were at the head of affairs, there might be in Manetho's account deputy-rulers at Tanis, Bubastus, Elephantis, or other cities; so from hence Africanus might have an opportunity of making a Tanite dynasty, an Elephantine, a Memphite, and a Bubastite more than Manetho ever supposed. The names of the kings suggested by Africanus in these dynasties were perhaps to be found in Manetho's history. But Manetho might record them as tributary or deputy-rulers to some of the kings of the dynasties he treated of; Africanus supposed them independent, and made dynasties appropriated to them. 3. Africanus's 15th dynasty contains the names of the Pastor kings, and their names were to be found in Manetho;³ but Manetho did not relate these Pastors as being a part of the Egyptian succession of kings; but rather noted them as having invaded and dispossessed some of the Egyptian kings of a great part of Egypt; and accordingly only mentions them as being in Egypt in the times of those kings. 4. Manetho had mentioned fifteen kings of Thebais, five in his 19th dynasty, eight in his 20th, and two in his 23d;⁴ Africanus has named as many in his 11th, 12th, and 19th dynasties. He farther found several Theban kings' names in Josephus, said to be taken from Manetho;⁵ which he also collected, and made of them his 18th dynasty.⁶ But he should have observed, that Josephus has, through some mistake, multiplied the names of these kings, beyond what Manetho intended; and farther, there is such a repetition and similitude of names in this dynasty, and in Africanus's 11th, 12th, and 19th, that it seems most probable, that they give only the same kings with some small diversity in naming them; and that fifteen kings, rightly chosen out of the names mentioned in these four dynasties, would give the true reigns which Manetho has recorded. 5. The dynasties, suggesting reigns without names of kings, were perhaps added by Africanus from the intimations of Herodotus;⁷ or, from the time when Manetho's account came ³ Vid. Joseph. contra Apion. lib. i, c. 14.

⁴ Vid. Chronograph. in Syncell p. 51.

⁵ Joseph. ubi sup.

⁶ Syncell. p. 69.

⁷ Herodotus computes about three hundred and sixty-eight kings down to Cambyzes. Vid. Histor. lib. ii, lib. iii.

to be generally esteemed deficient. Soon after Eratosthenes had published his catalogue, it might become customary for the learned to annotate upon their copies of the tomes of Manetho, what kings' names, and what reigns they conceived he had omitted in every part of his history: and from some transcripts of such enlarged copies of the tomes of Manetho, Africanus, who did not write till near five hundred years after him, might apprehend, that such dynasties as he has given, might be collected from the books of Manetho.

If the reader will take the pains to inspect Africanus's account of the dynasties, and compute the number of reigns, and years of the reigns contained in them, he will find the kings, named and not named, to be together in number four hundred and seventy-three, down to the end of Nectanebus's reign; and that the sum of all their reigns amounts to four thousand eight hundred and twenty-three years four months and ten days. But Africanus could not intend to bring such a length of Egyptian history within the compass; that his work could allow for it; because whoever will consider the nature of his epochs and chronology, in what year of the world he supposed Noah's flood to have happened, and to what year he fixed the end of Nectanebus's reign, will see, that he could not have above the space of two thousand eight hundred and eighty years for the Egyptian history. And unquestionably in the second part of his work, when he came to use the collections he had made, he brought his dynasties down to about this measure; which he might readily do, if, in composing his chronicle, he rejected the reigns as fictitious, which have no names of kings annexed to them, and took into his history only the kings, whose names he has given; for the kings so named by him are in number only one hundred and twenty-eight, and the times of their reigns amount to two thousand nine hundred and eighty-three years. Besides, Africanus might apprehend from Diodorus Siculus, who flourished in the times of Julius Cæsar,⁹ long after Herodotus and Manetho, and who had been in Egypt for information as well as Herodotus,¹ that Herodotus's enlarged catalogue of kings of Egypt ought probably to be reduced to about this number.² In this manner I would consider the work of Africanus, and think of him; not that he made imaginary dynasties, and altered and interpolated Manetho just as his fancy

⁹ If we may suppose in this number a mistake of one hundred years, which is no great matter, considering how often the translators might miscalculate, or write erroneously the old numeral characters, we shall have a number suited to Africanus's Chronology.

⁹ Prideaux, Connect. part. ii, b. vii, ad. ann. 60; Voss. de Hist. Græc. lib. ii, c. 2.

¹ Diodor. lib. i, c. 4, p. 44.

² Diodorus suggests about one hundred and thirty kings of Egypt. Hist. lib. i.

led him;³ for this would be to make him a most romantic writer; but rather, 1. That he took into his dynasties what he thought Manetho had duly adjusted to true history, and of this sort we may suppose his 1st, 3d, 4th, 11th, 12th, 19th, 21st, 23d, 24th, 25th, 26th, 27th, 28th, 29th, 30th, answering to Manetho's fifteen dynasties from the 16th to the 30th.⁴ 2. He added to these in other dynasties, some names of kings mentioned in Manetho as having reigned in Egypt; but he differed from Manetho, I take it, in a material point about these kings. He deduced their reigns in dynasties made for them, as if they had continued and brought down the Egyptian succession. Manetho did not suppose that any of these kings had reigned in times distinct from the Egyptian; but rather that they were deputies to, or usurpers, who held and kept some parts of Egypt from the rightful sovereigns their contemporaries, kings of the true Egyptian line. Of these Africanus perhaps made his 2d, 5th, 6th, 15th, and 22d dynasties. 3. Africanus found numerous additions of nameless reigns suggested by annotators as belonging to Manetho's tomes, agreeably to what Herodotus had written of the Egyptian history. He took these also into his collection, and made of them his 7th, 8th, 9th, 10th, 13th, 14th, 16th, 17th, and 20th dynasties; though he discarded these again when he came to compose from the materials he had collected, supposing that Manetho had really given no more kings, than what there were names to be found in his books. 4. Africanus collected his 18th dynasty, as I have said,⁵ from Josephus. 5. The 31st dynasty might be added to Manetho by some later hand, who was minded to remark the Persian kings unto whom Egypt became tributary; and being thus transcribed into some copies of Manetho, it might come down to Africanus, and not be rejected by him. If we consider Africanus's work in this light, we shall do justice to his character;⁶ allow him to have been a serious and considerable writer, who took true pains to give what he judged a reasonable account of Manetho's performance, such as might represent it agreeing with what he reputed the true chronology of the world.

VI. Pamphilus Eusebius, bishop of Cæsarea in Palestine, wrote about a century after Africanus. His Chronicon was a work of the same nature with Africanus's Chronographia; which he divided into two parts. The former part contained the Materia Chronologica for a universal history; in the se-

³ Sir John Marsham says of him, Maximus Manethonis interpolator Africanus vetustiores suas dynastias (siquid video) ex mero suo ipsius arbitrio disposuit: si penitus inspiciamus, alias illarum frustula tantum esse dynastiarum, alias reperiemus meros esse numeros inaniter turgentes. Marsham, Can. Chron. p. 5.

⁴ Vid. Chronograph. in Synzell. p. 51, 52.

⁵ Vid. quæ sup.

⁶ Julius Africanus accuratissimus temporum observator. Vossius de Hist. Græc. lib. ii, c. 15. Αφρικανὸς χρονολογικὰ συντάγματα ἐκ ἀκριβοῦς πηγιμῆνα. Euseb. Ecclesiastic. Histor. lib. vi, c. 31.

cond he ranged and synchronized such of the materials collected in the former part, as he intended to make use of; so as to give in one view a concurrent plan of the sacred and profane history. Eusebius began this part of his work from the birth of Abraham, and carried it down to the 80th year of Constantine the Great.⁷ In his former part, amongst other collections, were the dynasties of Manetho, taken in a great measure from Africanus's account of them; though in some points he differed from Africanus sufficiently to show that he did not think Africanus had ascertained indisputably the dynasties of Manetho. Eusebius represents that the dynasties down to Nectanebus contained the names of only ninety-three kings; and that the reigns which have no names of kings affixed to them were only two hundred and fifty-nine. But I would not carry the reader into a tedious discussion of every little difference between Africanus and Eusebius upon this subject. Their dynasties are described at large in Syncellus;⁸ and whoever would examine this subject more curiously, may, by consulting his work, see and compare them with one another. However, I must observe, that Eusebius certainly took great liberty, in order to form the dynasties to his own purpose; sometimes following Africanus, and sometimes the Epitome of Manetho added to the Chronographeon above-mentioned, and making no scruple to vary from both, if his scheme required it. For, 1. His scheme was to synchronize the last year of Nectanebus, where Manetho's work ended, with the 1667th year from the birth of Abraham;⁹ and to fix to the birth of Abraham the beginning of the 16th Egyptian dynasty.¹ He supposes that dynasty to contain five Theban kings;² herein he followed neither the Epitome of Manetho,³ nor Africanus;⁴ however the Epitome suggesting that Manetho had ascribed one hundred and ninety years to the 16th dynasty, Eusebius writes to it the same number. Having thus fixed in what part of the dynasties he should begin his account, and what interval of years he had to fill up with Egyptian reigns, he proceeded as follows: 2. He observed, that the Epitome computed one hundred and three years as the contents of the 17th dynasty;⁵ and accordingly he ascribes to it the same number of years. The Epitome styles this dynasty Memphite; but Eusebius knowing, that Manetho had mentioned the Pastor kings, and counting down from the birth of Abraham, and computing this dynasty as reaching to the times of the Israelites being in Egypt; and conceiving

⁷ Euseb. Chron.; Marsham, p. 6.

⁸ Syncell. p. 54—78.

⁹ Euseb. Chron. ad num. αχξζ, p. 175.

¹ Id. ad. num. α. p. 89.

² Syncell. p. 61; Euseb. Chron. p. 15.

³ Ταυτην ες. δυνασταν γαρων η. οταν ρη. Epit. Syncell. p. 51.

⁴ Εκακοδικατη δυνασταν ποιμενικη Ελληνικη λεγεται οτι ο Αφρικανος. African. in Syncell. p. 61.

⁵ Syncell. p. 51.

that some of the Egyptian kings had been called Pastor kings from their receiving and entertaining Jacob and his children, a family of shepherds; he took from hence his title to this dynasty,⁶ and called it the Pastor dynasty. 3. The Epitome supposes the 18th dynasty to be Memphite, the number of kings fourteen, the sum of their years three hundred and forty-eight.⁷ Africanus's 18th dynasty is Diospolitan, the number of its kings sixteen, the sum of the years of their reigns two hundred and eighty-four.⁸ Here Eusebius, as to the title of the dynasty and number of reigns in it, corrects the Epitome by Africanus; but in the sum of years in the reigns, he corrects Africanus by the Epitome, making his 18th dynasty Diospolitan, and to contain sixteen kings, and their reigns to amount to three hundred and forty-eight years.⁹ 4. In the Epitome the 19th dynasty is Diospolitan, the kings in it are five, the sum of years in their reigns one hundred and ninety-four.¹ Africanus's 19th dynasty is likewise Diospolitan, the kings in it are seven, their reigns two hundred and ten years;² but here Eusebius takes the numbers of the Epitome, and sets down five kings and one hundred and ninety-four years.³ 5. In the 20th dynasty his management is remarkable. The Epitome supposes this dynasty Diospolitan,⁴ and Africanus gives it this title.⁵ The Epitome numbers in it eight reigns of two hundred and twenty-eight years; Africanus twelve kings; but has no names of any of them; he supposes their reigns to amount to one hundred and thirty-five years. Eusebius here copies after Africanus, both in the number of the kings, and in not having the names of any of them; but differs from him in the sum of their years, which he sets down one hundred and seventy-eight. Eusebius seems to me to have chosen this dynasty to be the closure of his plan. All the other dynasties which he used have the names of the kings belonging to them; upon which account he was more obliged to fix them a number of years, such as he had some appearance of authority to justify, either from the Epitome or from Africanus. But having here a dynasty without names of kings contained in it, he could affix to it, without hazard of contradiction, such a number of years, as his other dynasties would fall short of one thousand six hundred and sixty-seven, which was the term to be filled up by him. 6. The Epitome and Africanus agree to call the 21st dynasty Tanite; the Epitome gives it six reigns, one hundred and twenty-one years; Africanus seven reigns, one hun-

⁶ Reges Ægyptiorum Pastores conijicimus nuncupatos propter Joseph et fratres ejus, qui in principio pastores descendisse in Ægyptum comprobantur. Chron. Euseb. Lat. p. 64.

⁷ Syncell. p. 51.

⁸ Euseb. Chron. a. num. 648 p. 101. ad num. 746. p. 118.

¹ Syncell. p. 51.

² Euseb. Chron. a. num. 746. p. 118. ad num. 864. p. 128.

⁴ Syncell. p. 51.

⁶ Id. p. 62—72.

² Id. p. 72.

⁶ Id. p. 73.

dred and thirty years:⁶ Eusebius takes here the numbers of Africanus. 7. The Epitome calls the 22d dynasty Tanite, its reigns are three, years of reigns forty-eight.⁷ Africanus makes here a Bubastite dynasty, and supposes its reigns three, years forty-nine:⁸ Eusebius takes the title of the Epitome, and the numbers of Africanus.⁹ 8. The 23d dynasty in the Epitome is Diospolitan, contains two kings, their reigns amount to nineteen years;⁴ in Africanus it is Tanite, consists of four kings, whose reigns make up eighty-nine years.⁵ Eusebius gives it Africanus's title, but describes in it three kings, and computes their reigns to be forty-four years.³ 9. The 24th dynasty is Saitan, both according to the Epitome and Africanus.⁴ The Epitome supposes it to contain three reigns of forty-four years; Africanus says, one reign of six years. Eusebius agrees with both as to the title, but ascribes it to Africanus's first reign, with forty-four, the number of years set down to it in the Epitome.⁶ 10. The Epitome and Africanus agree that the 25th dynasty consisted of three Ethiopian kings, and their reigns to be forty-four years;⁶ and herein Eusebius concurs with them.⁷ 11. The Epitome supposes the 26th dynasty to consist of seven Memphite kings, who reigned one hundred and seventy-seven years.⁸ Africanus represents that it contained nine Saitan kings, who reigned one hundred and fifty years six months.⁹ Eusebius gives it Africanus's title and number of kings, but makes the years of their reigns one hundred and sixty-seven.¹ 12. The 27th dynasty is, according to the Epitome, Persian, and contains the reigns of five kings in one hundred and twenty-four years.² Africanus reckons it also Persian, but computes that eight kings, reigning one hundred and twenty years four months, belonged to it.³ Eusebius styles it Persian, and sets down in it seven kings, reigning one hundred and eleven years.⁴ But these differences may be accounted for. Egypt came into subjection to the Persians, when Cambyzes was king of Persia,⁵ and recovered its liberty in the reign of Darius Nothus;⁶ and some writers not taking into their accounts the Persian kings, who did not reign a full year, might reckon but five kings from the one to the other. Others might number, in their lists of Persian kings, Smerdes the Magian, who reigned some months, after him Darius Hystaspes, then Xerxes, then Artaxerxes, then the son of Artaxerxes, who reigned but two months, then Sogdianus, who reigned seven months, and then Darius Nothus,⁷ and so with Cambyzes make eight Persian kings in this dynasty. In like manner, if the years of this dynasty be computed, from the first year of Cambyzes's reign in Persia to the last year of Darius Nothus, they will amount to one hundred and twenty-four, the number in the Epitome. If they be reckoned from the fourth or fifth year of Cambyzes, the year in which the Persians conquered Egypt, they may amount to about Africanus's number, one hundred and twenty years four months. If they be more strictly calculated, from Cambyzes's conquest of Egypt to Amyrteus's being made king upon the revolt of the Egyptians from Darius Nothus, in about the tenth year of Darius's reign,⁸ the interval will be, as Eusebius reckons it, one hundred and eleven years. 13. As to the 28th, 29th, and 30th dynasties, if we allow for little mistakes, which may easily happen in transcribing numbers; and consider that Tanite, Mendesian, and Sebennite may be synonymous terms, Mendes and Sebenneh having been cities of the land of Zoan or Tanis,⁹ these dynasties in the Epitome, in Africanus, and in Eusebius, may be conceived to have been the same. Of this sort the reader, if he examines it, will find the work of Eusebius, as far as it relates to the Egyptian dynasties. Manetho had left only fifteen dynasties of mortal kings; for his other fifteen treated of gods, demi-gods, and heroes of a superior race.¹ Upon this account Eusebius, in composing his Chronicon, rejected fifteen of Africanus's dynasties, reputing them prior to the times, of which he could hope to find any true history; and having selected the fifteen dynasties of Africanus from the 16th to the 30th, and new modelled them, by comparing them with the like dynasties added in the Epitome in the old Chronographicon; sometimes giving his dynasties titles and numbers from the Epitome, sometimes from Africanus, and now and then varying from both, if his purpose required it; and having thus formed such a series of Egyptian reigns as would fill up his interval between the birth of Abraham and the flight of Nectanebus, he gave himself no farther trouble; though one would think, he must have seen, that he might rather be said to have made a way to give the dynasties some appearance of an agreement with his chronology, than have given any true and just account of them.

⁶ Syncell. ubi sup.⁷ Id. ibid.⁸ Id. p. 73.⁹ Euseb. Chronic. a num. αμμδ p. 144, ad num. αη'c. p. 147.¹ Syncell. ubi sup.² Syncell. p. 74.³ Euseb. Chron. a num. αη'γ. p. 147. ad num. ααδc. p. 249.⁴ Syncell. p. 52, 74.⁵ Euseb. Chron. a num. ααδc. p. 149, ad num. ααα. p. 152.⁶ Syncell. ubi sup.⁷ Euseb. Chron. a num. ααα. p. 152, ad num. ααδc. p. 155.⁸ Syncell. p. 52.⁹ Id. p. 75.¹ Euseb. Chron. a num. ααα. p. 155. ad num. αη'α. p. 164.² Syncell. p. 52.³ Id. p. 76.⁴ Euseb. Chron. a num. αη'c. p. 164. ad num. αη'γ. p. 172.⁵ Prideaux. Connect. part i, b. iii.⁶ Id. b. vi.

VII. Syncellus is the next writer to whom we are to go for the Egyptian antiquities. He composed his Chronographia about the year of our Lord 800;² and transcribed into it what ⁷ Consult Dean Prideaux's History of these times.

⁸ See Prideaux's Connection, part i, b. 6.

⁹ Strabo Geograph.

¹ Vkl. quæ sup. de Manethone.

² Marsham's Can. Chron. p. 7; Vossius de Historic. Græc. lib. ii, c. 24.

remains he could find of the more ancient writers, and some extracts from others; who had composed before him a work of like nature with what he attempted. Accordingly we find in him the contents of the old Chronographeon,³ of Manetho's dynasties,⁴ of Africanus's,⁵ and of Eusebius's,⁶ agreeably to what he judged to be the scheme and purport of each. In many places we have his strictures and observations, as he goes along, upon the matters offered by them; and has also given us Eratosthenes's catalogue of the Theban kings.⁷ He remarks, that the dynasty writers must have supposed that their 27th dynasty, which they call Persians, had begun when Cambyses king of Persia conquered Egypt.⁸ Amasis was king of Egypt at that time;⁹ and to this Amasis he brings down a list of eighty-six kings of Egypt, from Menes their first king, setting against each king's name the years of his reign as follows: I. Mestraim or Menes reigned 35 years. II. Curudes 63. III. Aristarchus 34. IV. Spanius 36. V. and VI. Two kings, whose names are lost, their reigns amounted to 72 years. VII. Serapis 23. VIII. Sejouchosis 49. IX. Amenemes 29.¹ X. Amasis 2. XI. Achesephthes 13. XII. Achoreus 9. XIII. Armiyses 4. XIV. Chamois 12.² XV. Amesises 65. XVI.— 14. XVII. Use 50. XVIII. Ramesses 29.³ XIX. Ramessomenes 15. XX. Thusimares 31. XXI. Ramesso-sees 23. XXII. Ramesse-menos 19. XXIII. Ramesse-Tubaete 39.⁴ XXIV. Ramesse-Vaphris 29. XXV. Concharis 5.⁵ XXVI. Silitis 19.⁶ XXVII. Baon 44.⁷ XXVIII. Apachnas 26. XXIX. Apophis 61.⁸ XXX. Sethos 50. XXXI. Certus, according to Josephus 29 years, according to Manetho 44. XXXII. Aseth 20.⁹ XXXIII. Amosis, who was also called Tethmosis, 22.¹ XXXIV. Chebron 13. XXXV. Amephes 15. XXXVI. Amenses 11. XXXVII. Misphragmuthosis 16. XXXVIII. Misphees 23. XXXIX. Tuthmosis 39.² XL. Amenophis 34.³ XLI. Horus 48. XLII. Achencheres 25. XLIII. Athors 29. XLIV. Chencheres 26.⁴ XLV. Acheres 8, or 30. XLVI. Armeus, or Danaus, 9.⁵ XLVII. Ramesses, who was also called Ægyptus, 68. XLVIII. Amenophis 8. XLIX. Thuoris 17. L. Nechepsus 19. LI. Psammuthis 19. LII.— 4.⁶ LIII. Certus 20. LIV. Rhampsis 45.⁷ LV. Amenses, or Amenemes, 26.⁸ LVI. Ochyras 14. LVII.

³ Syncell. p. 51.⁴ Ibid. p. 52.⁵ Id. p. 54—77.⁶ Ibid.⁷ Ibid. p. 91, &c.⁸ Syncell. p. 210.⁹ Id. ibid.¹ Ibid. p. 91, vid. Euseb. Chron. p. 17, 18.² χαρμης κτ. Euseb. p. 18.³ Syncell. p. 96; vid. Euseb. Chron. p. 18.⁴ Syncell. p. 101; Euseb. p. 20.⁵ Syncell. p. 103; Euseb. 21.⁶ Syncell. p. 104; Euseb. 21.⁷ Βασις λθ. Euseb. 22.⁸ Syncell. p. 108; Euseb. 22.⁹ Αραθ κτ in margine Syncell. p. 123.¹ Syncell. ibid.; Euseb. 23.² Syncell. p. 147; Euseb. 25.³ Syncell. p. 151; Euseb. 26.⁴ Id. ibid.⁵ Syncell. p. 155; Euseb. 29.⁶ Ερα κ. Euseb. 30.⁷ Ερα κ. Euseb. 30.⁸ Syncell. p. 160; Euseb. 30.

Amedes 27. LVIII. Thuoris 50.⁹ LIX. Athothis 28. LX. Cencenes 39. LXI. Venephes 42.¹ LXII. Sussachim 34.² LXIII. Psuenus 25. LXIV. Ammenophes 9. LXV. Nephcheres 6. LXVI. Saïtes 15. LXVII. Psinaches 9. LXVIII. Petubastes 44. LXIX. Osorthron 9. LXX. Psammus 10. LXXI. Concharis 21.³ LXXII. Osorthron 15. LXXIII. Tacephes 13. LXXIV. Bocchoris 44. LXXV. Sabacon Æthiops 12. LXXVI. Sebechon 12.⁴ LXXVII. Taracas 20. LXXVIII. Amaes 38. LXXIX. Stephinates 27. LXXX. Nachepsus 13.⁵ LXXXI. Nechaab 8. LXXXII. Psammitichus 14. LXXXIII. Nechaab the second, called Pharaoh, 9. LXXXIV. Psammuthis, or Psammitichus the second, 17. LXXXV. Vaphres 34. LXXXVI. Amasis 50.⁶

It is queried by the learned, whence Syncellus collected this series of Egyptian kings.⁷ Scaliger supposed that he had found it in the Chronicon of Eusebius; and accordingly in his attempt to retrieve that work, he has inserted these kings amongst others of Eusebius's collections. But in this point Scaliger must have been mistaken; we have no reason to imagine that this catalogue had ever been in Eusebius. It seems rather to have been, a great part of it, Syncellus's own composition, who imagined he could in this manner deduce the Egyptian kings. If the reader will strictly examine, he will find that the kings, from the forty-ninth to the eighty-sixth, might be taken from Africanus's 19th, 21st, 22d, 23d, 24th, 25th, and 26th dynasties; only Syncellus has now and then added or repeated a name of a king or two, and given new numbers to all their reigns, such probably as suited the scheme he had formed for the Egyptian chronology. From the twenty-third king to the forty-eighth, we have a catalogue of Theban kings formed from considering and comparing Josephus's list with Africanus and Eusebius's 18th dynasty. The kings from the twenty-sixth to the thirty-second are taken from Josephus, Africanus, and Eusebius's account of the Pastor kings. From Mestram or Menes the first king, to Concharis the twenty-fifth, Syncellus does indeed give a series of reigns, which we do not now meet with in any writer before him. Perhaps, as Africanus mistook, and gave us a series of Thinite kings in his first and second dynasties, instead of Manetho's Tanite kings;⁸ so here Syncellus, from some ancient quotations or remains, has happened upon the succession of Tanite kings, which might begin Manetho's accounts of the mortal kings; though, I dare say, he had no true notion of the nature of it. For Syncellus had certainly formed no right judgment of the Egyptian history; as ap-

⁹ Syncell. p. 169; Euseb Chron. p. 32.

² Syncell. p. 177; Euseb. 34.

⁴ Syncell. p. 184; Euseb. 36.

⁵ Syncell. p. 210; Euseb. 46, 47.

⁸ See the notes in page 144.

¹ Syncell. p. 170; Euseb. 33.

³ Ibid.

⁶ Syncell. p. 191; Euseb. 38.

⁷ Marsham, Can. Chron. p. 7.

pears evidently from his declaring that he knew no use of, nor occasion for, Eratosthenes's catalogue of Theban kings.⁹ He found the fragment above mentioned; and seeing it differed from all other collections, he intended himself to differ from all others, who had written before him; for which reason, and probably for no other, he began his catalogue with it. He added to it the Pastor and Theban kings from Josephus, and completed it with taking as many names of kings from Africanus and other writers, as he thought he wanted; and having taken the liberty to give to the several reigns of these later kings, not the numbers of years assigned them by the writers from whom he took them, but such as might bring down the succession in a manner suitable to his own chronology, this was his attempt towards clearing the Egyptian history.¹ The reader, if he examines, will after all find that Syncellus's catalogue is somewhat too long for the interval, to which he intended to adjust it: but the learned are apprised, that Syncellus's work is in many places inaccurate in this matter.

VIII. We are in the last place to consider what our learned countryman Sir John Marsham has done upon this subject: And, 1. He considered Egypt as being divided into four concurrent kingdoms in the most early ages; namely, into the kingdoms of Thebes, of This, of Memphis, and of Tanis, or Lower Egypt.² 2. He formed a canon or table, to give the reader, in one view, the contemporary kings of each kingdom. And, 3. In the execution of his work in proper chapters, he endeavours to justify the position of the kings, according to the succession assigned to them in the respective columns of his canon. The following Tables will give the reader a view of Sir John Marsham's succession of the Egyptian kings, from Menes, the first king over all Egypt, to the times of Sesac, who came against Jerusalem in the fifth year of Rehoboam.³

⁹ Vid. Syncell. p. 147.

¹ Sir John Marsham says very justly of Syncellus, "Reges comminiscitur, annosque et successiones mutilat vel extendit, prout ipsi visum est, ut imprudentiam hominis non possis non mirari, qui cum aliis rixatur, ipse cum sit reprehensioni maxime obnoxius." Can. Chron. p. 7.

² Marsham, Can. Chron. p. 24.

³ 2 Chron. xii, 2, 3.

I. SIR JOHN MARSHAM'S TABLE OF KINGS OF EGYPT.

Kings of Thebes taken from Eratosthenes.	Kings of This taken from Manetho.	Kings of Memphis taken from Manetho.	Kings of Lower Egypt taken from Syncellus.
Reigned years, 1 Menes.....62	1 Menes.....62 1 Dynast. African. Syn- cell. p. 54.	Menes built Memphis Herodot. l. ii, c. 99. III. Dy. Afric. Syncell. p. 56.	1 Menes, or Mestram 35 Syncell. p. 91.
2 Athothes..59	2 Athothes..57	1 Tosor- thrus.....29	2 Curudes....63
	3 Cencenes..31	2 Tyris.....7	3 Aristar- chus.....34
3 Athothes..32		3 Mesochris 17
		4 Soiphis.....16	4 Spanius....36
4 Diabies.....19	4 Venephes 23	5 Tosertasis 19
5 Pemphos..18	5 Usaphæ- dus.....20	6 Achis.....42	5 * * * * * 32
6 Tægar Ama- chus Mom- cheiri.....79	6 Miebidus 26
	7 Semem- phis.....18	7 Siphuris...30	6 * * * * * 40
	8 Bienaches 26	8 Cerpheres 26
	II. Dyn. Afric.	IV. Dyn. Afric.	7 Serapis.....23
7 Stæchus.....6	9 Bochus.....38	9 Soris.....29
8 Gosor- mies.....30		10 Syphis....63	8 Sesoncho- sis.....49
9 Mares.....26	10 Keachos 39		9 Amenemes29 Syncell. p. 96.
10 Anoy- phes.....20	11 Bino- thris.....47	11 Syphis....66	10 Amasis.....2 11 Acheseph- thres.....13

TABLE OF THE KINGS OF EGYPT,

Continued.

Kings of Thebes.	Kings of This.	Kings of Memphis.	Kings of Lower Egypt.
11 Sirius.....18			12 Achoreus..9
12 Chnubus Gneurus..22			13 Armiyses 4
			14 Chamois 12
			15 Amesises 65
13 Ranosis...13	12 Tlas.....17
14 Biyris.....10	13 Sethenes 41		16 * * * * 14
15 Saophis...29		12 Menche- res.....63	17 Use.....50
16 Sen-Sao- phis.....27	14 Cheres....17		18 Ramesses 29
	15 Neph- cheres.....25
17 Mosche- ris.....31	16 Seso- chris.....48	13 Ratares..25	Syncell. p. 101.
18 Musthis 33		14 Bicheres 22	19 Ramesso- menes.....15
	17 Chene- res.....30	15 Seber- cheres.....7	20 Thusima- res.....31
19 Pammus Archondes 35		16 Thamptis..9	21 Rames- seos.....23
		VI. Dyn. Afric.	22 Ramesse- menos.....19
20 Apappus Maximus 100	18 Nechero- phes.....28	17 Othoes	23 Ramesse- Tubaete...39
	Here the king- dom of This ended.	18 Phius.....53	Syncell. p. 103.
21 Achescus Ocaras.....1	Sum of the Years 593	19 Methusu- phis.....7
22 Nitocris....6		20 Phiops..100	24 Ramesse- Vaphres...29
		21 Mentesu- phis.....1	25 Concharis 6
		22 Nitocris..12
Sum of the Years 675		Sum of the Years 643	Sum of the Years 701

In this manner Sir John Marsham deduces the account of the ancient kings of Egypt, down to the time of the Pastors' irruption: 'the Pastors invaded Egypt in the reign of Timæus.⁴ Sir John Marsham supposes that Concharis was the king, whom Josephus calls Timæus;⁵ and agreeably hereto Syncellus conceived that Silites or Salatis, who was the⁷ first Pastor king, had succeeded Concharis, his twenty-fifth king of Lower Egypt.⁸ Nitocris is thought to have been the last of the crowned heads of Memphis; for we find in Africanus no name of any king of this kingdom after her;⁹ therefore here we are to fix the period or dissolution of it, and we find that the Pastors over-ran not only Lower Egypt; but took Memphis¹ and possessed themselves of this kingdom also. Nitocris was queen not only of Memphis, but likewise of Thebes; for we find her name twenty-second in Eratosthenes's Theban catalogue. Sir John Marsham observes, that her predecessor in both kingdoms reigned but one year, and the king before him in both kingdoms exactly a hundred.² He judiciously concludes from hence, that Apappus Maximus, king of Thebes, and Phiops, king of Memphis, were but one and the same person, as were also Acheschus Ocaras and Menteshuphis, who succeeded in each kingdom; and that the kingdoms of Memphis and Thebes were united two reigns at least before Nitocris.³ She is recorded to have reigned twelve years at Memphis, and six only at Thebes. I suppose that Memphis was, at her coming to the throne, the seat of her kingdom; she was obliged to retire out of this country when the Pastors invaded it, and after this retreat she reigned six years at Thebes. The kingdom of This did not last until the invasion of the Pastors; very probably the Theban kings, when they grew powerful by the accession of the kingdom of Memphis, added this little domain to their territories.⁴ Upon these hints and observations, Sir John Marsham has opened a prospect of coming at a history of the succession of the kings of Egypt; and that in a method so natural and easy, that it must approve itself to any person who enters truly into the design and conduct of it. He gives us Eratosthenes's Theban kings; he ranges with these, Syncellus's twenty-five kings of Mestrea or Lower Egypt;⁵ and by taking Africanus's dynasties in pieces, by separating the Thinite dynasties

⁴ Marsham, p. 18, 20.

⁵ Marsham, p. 91, 98, &c.

⁶ Syncell. p. 103, 104.

⁷ Josephus, contra Ap. lib. i, c. 14.

⁵ Joseph contra Ap. lib. i, c. 14.

⁷ Josephus contra Ap. lib. i, c. 14, &c.

⁹ Vid. Marsham, Can. Chron. p. 90.

² Οὐβανη κ. βασιλευσα Αιγυπτου μετ' αὐτοῦ ὡς αὐτὴ παρα παρα μίας ἐστὶν ἡ βασιλευσα Οὐβανη κ. βασιλευσα Αἰγυπτου Οὐβανη ὅς α. Eratosth. in Syncell. p. 104. Ἐκτὶ δυναστειῶν βασιλευσα Μενφίτων ὁ Οὐβανη ἑξήστis ἀρχαίτης βασιλευσα διαγινώσκει μετ' αὐτοῦ ὡς α. Μεντὲσφυς ὅς α. African. in Syncell. p. 58.

³ Ista regnandi æqualis inæqualitas nimis insolita est, ut illam bis et simul fortuito contigisse credamus. Marsham, p. 85.

⁴ Id. ibid.

⁵ Syncell. p. 91.

from the Memphite; by collecting the kings of each title into a distinct catalogue, he gives us two other concurrent lists of the names of the kings of the other two kingdoms.

There is one difficulty, which I wish our very learned author had considered and discussed for us; which is, that the catalogues of the kings of three of the four kingdoms are too long to come within the intervals of time, which the true chronology of the world can allow for them. For to begin with Lower Egypt: Menes, or the Mizraim of Moses,⁶ came into this country about A. M. 1772.⁷ It was a fen or marsh in his time,⁸ and he does not seem to have made a long stay in it. He went forward and built Memphis;⁹ afterwards, one hundred and twenty-four years after the dispersion of mankind,¹ A. M. 1881, he went into the country of Thebais. After having made settlements here, he seems to have come back and formed a kingdom in Lower Egypt thirty-five years before his death; for Menes stands recorded king of this country only thirty-five years;² if so, then this kingdom was founded about A. M. 1901.³ The Pastors came into Egypt about A. M. 2420.⁴ The interval is five hundred and twelve years; but the twenty-five kings of Lower Egypt above mentioned reigned seven hundred and one years; i. e. one hundred and eighty-nine years longer than we can find a space of time for them. In like manner, 2. If we consider the Theban kings; Mizraim came into this country A. M. 1881,⁵ let us from this year begin the computation of his reign or kingdom. From this year to A. M. 2420, the year of the invasion of the Pastors, are five hundred and thirty-nine years; but the reigns of the Theban kings, from Menes to the twelfth year after⁶ the decease of Achesus Ocaras, the predecessor of Nitocris, are six hundred and eighty-two years; so that this catalogue reaches down beyond the incursion of the Pastors one hundred and seventy years. 3. The kingdom of This is recorded to begin from the sixty-second year before the death of Menes;⁷ from the year of the rise of the kingdom of Thebes, A. M. 1881. The reigns of the kings of This amount to five hundred and ninety-three years;⁸ but from A. M. 1881 to 2420, the year of the Pastors, are, as I said, but five hundred and thirty-nine years; so that this catalogue is too long by ⁶ See vol. i, b. iv, p. 129.

⁷ Ibid.

⁸ Herodot. lib. ii, c. 4.

⁹ Id. c. 99.

¹ Apollodor. in Euseb. Chron. p. 18; Syncell. p. 147.

² Μενεμνις ο παρ Μινως επι λε. Syncell. p. 91.

³ Menes died A. M. 1943; see vol. i, b. iv, p. 131.

⁴ See vol. ii, b. vii, p. 156.

⁵ Vid. quæ sup. and vol. i, b. iv, p. 131.

⁶ We must compute in this manner, if we allow Achesus Ocaras to have been the same person with Menteshuphis, who was Nitocris's predecessor in the Memphite catalogue; and suppose Nitocris to have reigned twelve years at Memphis, and then, being obliged to quit that country by the Pastors, to have reigned afterwards six years at Thebes.

⁷ African. in Syncell. p. 54.

⁸ Vid. Tab. seu. Can.

fifty-four years. As to the kingdom of Memphis, a better account of it seems to offer itself to us. Menes entered Egypt A. M. 1772:⁹ he stayed but a little while in the Lower Egypt, perhaps about three years, until he had formed Zoan, a little town, which was built seven years after Hebron in Canaan.¹ Here he might plant a few inhabitants, and go forward and build Noph or Memphis higher up the country; and designing to go himself a farther progress, he might make his son Toserthrus, or Naphtuhim² the first governor or king of this city about A. M. 1777: accordingly the reigns in the Memphite dynasties begin not from Menes, but from Toserthrus.³ The sum of the reigns from the first year of Toserthrus to the twelfth of Nitocris are six hundred and forty-three years which, if we count down from A. M. 1777, will bring us to A. M. 2420, the year in which, I suppose the Pastors entered Egypt, and reduced this kingdom. Thus the Memphite succession very fully accords with true chronology; and probably, if the other successions were carefully examined, a little pains would enable us to bring them to an agreement with it. For,

The catalogue of Mestracan kings exceeds, indeed, in length, about one hundred and eighty-nine years; but I apprehend, that some interpolations made by Syncellus are the cause of it. Three of the reigns, the fifth, sixth, and sixteenth, are mere numbers without names of kings annexed to them. And Serapis the seventh king, Sesonchosis the eighth,⁴ Amanemes the ninth,⁵ and Amasis the tenth,⁶ are all names of kings inserted here by Syncellus to lengthen the catalogue, so as to make it suit his scheme of chronology. Syncellus took great liberties in this manner:⁷ the numbers of years affixed to all these reigns amount to the hundred and eighty-nine; if we therefore strike out these reigns, we reduce the catalogue to a true measure. I would not be too tedious to the reader, and shall therefore leave it to him, if he chooses to enter deeper into this subject, to consider, whether the Theban and Thinite catalogues may not be as well adjusted, if they be examined and corrected in a proper manner.

From the Pastors invading and completing their conquests in Egypt, our learned author considers the country as parted only into two kingdoms. The Pastors possessed the land of ⁹ Vide quæ sup.

¹ Numb. xiii, 22.

² See vol. i, b. iv, p. 133; Gen. x, 13.

³ African. in Syncell. p. 56.

⁴ Sesonchosis was the same person as Sesostriis, vid. Scholiast. in Apoll. Argonaut. ver. 272, p. 411, and lived in a much later age.

⁵ Amanemes is again repeated by Syncellus, and is his fifty-fifth king.

⁶ Amasis is his eighty-eighth. He disguises the repetition of the names of Amanemes and Amasis, by giving different numbers of years to their reigns; but we have no reason to think there were such kings in this age.

⁷ Reges comminiscitur, annosque et successiones mutilat vel extendit, prout ipsi visum est, magna nominum, maxima numerorum interpolatione.—Marsham, Can. Chron. p. 7.

Memphis, and of Tanis or Lower Egypt; the Thebans, whom the Pastors did not conquer, held their own country, and had added the land of This to it. Africanus indeed suggests a dynasty of Elephantine kings, supposing nine successions of them.⁸ Elephantis was a remote city in the most southern parts of Egypt,⁹ above two hundred miles higher up into the country than Thebes or Diospolis.¹ The names of kings, supposed to be of this kingdom, have a great similitude with those of the kings of This, and perhaps some little companies of Thinites, when the Thebans conquered their country, might travel into this distant region, and plant themselves here, and build a city, and have a quiet enjoyment of it, for above two centuries.² We find no history, nor any thing recorded of these Elephantines, and, probably, after having lived for the space above mentioned in a little independent society, at the end of that term, the Thebans extending and enlarging their country, they might at last become a city or district of their kingdom. The following table will give the reader a view of Sir John Marsham's continuation of the Theban kings, and of the succession of the Pastor reigns until the Pastors were expelled Egypt.

⁸ African. Dynast. v. in Syncell. p. 57.

⁹ Herodot. lib. ii, c. 17, 18, 29.

¹ Id. c. 9.

² The reigns supposed by Africanus to belong to this dynasty, amount to two hundred and eighteen years.

II. TABLE OF EGYPTIAN KINGS.

Continuation of Eratosthenes' Theban Kings.		Pastor Kings from Manetho, &c. See Joseph. and African. 15th Dynasty.
	Yrs. M.		Yrs. M.
23. Myrtæus.....	22 0	1. Salatis.....	19 0
24. Thuosi Mares.....	12 0	2. Bæpn.....	44 0
25. Thimillus.....	8 0	3. Apachnas.....	36 7
26. Semphrocrates.....	18 0	4. Apophes.....	61 0
27. Chouthier Taurus....	7 0	5. Janias.....	50 1
28. Meuros Philoscopus	12 0	6. Assis.....	40 2
29. Choma Ephta.....	11 0	21st Dyn. African. ⁴ in Syn-
30. Anchunius Ochyr		cell. p. 123.
Tyrannus.....	60 0	7. Smedes.....	26 0
31. Pente-Athyris.....	16 0	8. Psusenes.....	46 0
32. Stamenemes.....	23 0	9. Nephelcheres.....	4 0
33. Sistosichermes.....	55 0	10. Amenophthis.....	9 0
34. Mæris.....	43 0	11. Osocher.....	6 0
35. Siphos or Mercury	5 0	12. Pinaches.....	9 0
36. _____ ³	14 0	13. Susennes.....	14 0
37. Phruron or Nilus....	5 0	23d Dyn. Afric.
38. Amuthantæus.....	63 0	14. Petubates.....	40 0
Here ends the Catalogue of Eratosthenes.		15. Osorcho.....	8 0
From Manetho, 18th Dynasty of Africanus. See Josephus.		16. Psammus.....	10 0
39. Amosis.....	25 4	17. Zoet.....	31 0
40. Chebron.....
41. Amenophis.....	27 7
42. Amesses.....	21 9
43. Mephres.....	12 9
44. Misphegmothosis..	25 10

³ Sir John Marsham passes over this reign, there being no name annexed to it, and supposes that Nilus succeeded Mercury, and Eratosthenes' Catalogue contained but thirty-seven kings. Can. p. 94, 238.

⁴ It may be here remarked, that both Manetho and Africanus (see Chronograph. in Syncell. p. 52; African. Dyn. p. 71) style this dynasty Tanite. But to this it may be answered, that the Pastors, possessing the land of Tanis or Lower Egypt, were the Tanite kings of these times.

Misphragmuthosis, or Alisfragmuthosis, gave the Pastors a great overthrow in battle, and shut them up in Abaris, where he confined them by a close siege.⁵ His son was 45. Tuthmosis 9 years 8 months.

The Pastors capitulated with this king at his coming to the crown, and surrendered upon condition to be suffered to march out of Egypt.⁶ Next to Tuthmosis, or Tummosis, reigned 46. Amenophis 30 years 10 months.

In the reign of this king the Pastors invaded Egypt again, and for thirteen years dispossessed him of his kingdom; but at the end of that term Amenophis came with an army, and entirely conquered them, and expelled them Egypt for ever,⁷ and at this their second expulsion, the five hundred and eleven years are computed to end, during which the Pastors are said to have held Egypt.⁸

After this second expulsion of the Pastors, Sir John Marsham adds the following Theban kings, sole monarchs of all Egypt.

	Years. M.
47 Orus reigned	36	5
48 Achenchres	12	1
49 Rathotis	9	0
50 Acencheres	12	5
51 Acencheres	12	3
52 Armais	4	1
53 Ramesses	1	4
54 Ramesses Maimun . . .	66	2
55 Amenophis	19	6
19th Dynast. African.
56 Sethosis, Sesostris, or Sesac.

The reader has now before him a view of Sir John Marsham's scheme from the beginning of the reigns of the Egyptian kings down to his Sesostris or Sesac: and if he will take the pains thoroughly to examine it, if he will take it in pieces into all its parts, review the materials of which it is formed, consider how they lie in the authors from whom they are taken,

⁵ Joseph. contra Ap. lib. i, c. 14.

⁶ Id. ibid.

⁷ Id. ibid. 26, 28; Marsham, Can. Chronic. p. 318.

⁸ The Pastor reigns above mentioned, from Salatis to Zet, amount to four hundred and seventy-eight years ten months; the reign of Tuthmosis is nine years eight months. If the Pastors invaded Egypt again in the tenth year of Amenophis, and were totally conquered thirteen years after; this conquest of them will indeed fall five hundred and eleven years from the first year of Salatis.

and what manner of collecting and disposing them is made use of, he will find, that, however in some lesser points a variation from our very learned author may be defensible, yet no tolerable scheme can be formed of the ancient Egyptian history, which does not in the main agree with him. Sir John Marsham has led us to a clear and natural place for the name of every Egyptian king, and time of his reign, who is mentioned by either Eratosthenes, Africanus from Manetho, Josephus, or Syncellus, which we can reasonably think had a real place in the Egyptian history; for as to the name of the king in Africanus's 9th dynasty, called a dynasty of kings of Heracleopolis,⁹ Manetho made no such dynasty.¹ Africanus found out one of the names of the kings of it.² Heracleotis, Heracleopolis, or Heroopolis, was a city of Lower Egypt, near one of the mouths or outlets of the Nile into the sea.³ Perhaps it was a town not immediately reduced by the Pastors, and its holding out, and preserving its liberty for some time, might occasion the writers of after-ages to think it had been an independent kingdom, who endeavoured to form dynasties of its kings. In like manner we may remark concerning Africanus's 22d dynasty, which he calls Bubastite. Bubastus was a city of Lower Egypt,⁴ probably governed by magistrates, deputies to the Pastors, or it might, perhaps, revolt from the Tanite or Pastor kings, when the Thebans began to weaken and distress them, and become a free town, and have governors of its own for some successions towards the end of the times of the Pastors being in Egypt; and some mention of this sort having been made of it, might occasion after-writers to number its magistrates among the kings of Egypt. But Manetho made no such dynasty; accordingly Sir John Marsham does not collect these kings. Were there indeed any such kings, a place might be found for them, by setting them down as contemporaries with some of the last Pastor or Tanite kings. Sir John Marsham has not taken into this part of his canon the kings of the 11th, 12th, and 19th dynasties of Africanus: the reader may see his reasons for omitting them.⁵ I think a different account from that of our most learned author may be given of them;⁶ but I shall give what I conceive to be the true account of these kings, when I come down to the times succeeding the reigns of Sesac, where I shall be also able, with less trouble and more perspicuity, to adjust Eratosthenes's canon of Theban kings, and Sir John Marsham's supplement of reigns added to it, to a true length. As they now stand in his canon, Nitocris the 22d in Eratosthenes must be thought to have reigned A. M. 2420. The sixteen reigns succeeding her's to the end of Era-

⁹ African. in Syncell. p. 59.

² African. ubi sup.

³ Ib. l. xvii, p. 806.

⁴ Vid. quæ supra.

¹ Vid. Chron. ib. p. 82.

² Strabo, Geog. l. ii, p. 85.

³ Can. Chron. p. 391, 392.

to the ~~ancient~~ ^{ancient} catalogue, contain three hundred and seventy-four years; the seventeen reigns added to these by Sir John Marsham, from Amosis to Sesothis, Sesostriis, or Sesac, contain three hundred and fifty-four years;⁷ add these together, and we come down to A. M. 3148; but Sesac came against Jerusalem A. M. 3033;⁸ so that here again the Theban list of kings appears to be of too great a length by above one hundred and fifteen years.

If the Pastors came into Egypt as above, about A. M. 2420, and their first king Salatis reigned nineteen years, their second king Beon reigned forty-four, and their third king Apophis thirty-six years and seven months,⁹ the end of Apophis's reign falls A. M. 2520; so that he was the Pharaoh or king of Lower Egypt, who pursued the Israelites, and perished in the Red Sea. The exit of the Israelites out of Egypt, and their passing over the Red Sea, happened A. M. 2513; but the judicious reader will not expect to be ascertained of our having all the numeral characters in the Egyptian reigns so truly calculated, or conveyed down to us, that the difference between A. M. 2513 and 2520 of six or seven years, can want to be accounted for.

⁷ Vid. Eratosth.; vid. Marsham, p. 96.

⁸ Usher's Annals.

⁹ Vid. Joseph, contra Ap. lib. i; Marsham, Can. Chron. p. 94.

THE

SACRED AND PROFANE

HISTORY OF THE WORLD CONNECTED.

BOOK XII.

IN the first month of the fortieth year after the exit out of Egypt, A. M. 2553, the Israelites came into the desert of Sin,¹ and pitched their tents at Kadesh. Miriam died soon after their coming hither.² They found little or no water in these parts, and as soon as their wants made them uneasy, they murmured against Moses and Aaron.³ Moses and Aaron consulted God for a supply, and Moses was ordered to go with Aaron and gather the assembly. Moses was then to take Aaron's rod, and he and Aaron were to speak unto a rock in the desert, and which rock was to pour out water in the sight of all the Israelites.⁴ We have no mention of the Israelites from the time of the rebellion of Korah, Dathan, and Abiram, until they came into this difficulty. There had passed six or seven and thirty years in this interval; during which time Moses had led them up and down from place to place,⁵ as God had thought fit to direct their journeyings by the cloud which moved before them.⁶ And it is probable, that, during all this space of time, the people had been very obedient, for we hear of no discontents or oppositions amongst them. This was their first emotion; for now they began to be refractory again; but Moses could not now so well bear it, and was here transported beyond his usual temper. The murmurings of the people *provoked his spirit, so that he spake unadvisedly with his lips.*⁷ He and Aaron here com-

¹ Numb. xx, 1.

² Ver. 8.

Psalm cvi, 33.

³ Ibid.

⁴ Chap. xxxiii.

⁵ Ver. 3, 4, 5.

⁶ Exod. xl, 36, 37.

mitted a fault, for which God pronounced against them, that they should not bring the people into the land which he had given them.⁸ The commentators appear in some doubt, what the fault was of which Moses and Aaron were here guilty; but I think it a point not hard to be determined. When Moses undertook the charge of the people, after they were passed the Red Sea, it was strictly required of him, that he should be punctually obedient to all the directions which God should give him.⁹ He was to be a minister of the power of God unto his people, and in all his actions to be faithful to him that appointed him,¹ to promote his glory; to convince the people that the Lord was really their God, and that there was none else besides him, who could protect and assist them, or whom they ought to worship. This Moses had hitherto observed in all his conduct; but in the instance before us there is a failure in his behaviour. When the people were in distress here by want of water, God vouchsafed to hear their complaint, and directed Moses and Aaron to give them a demonstration, that his power was ready at hand miraculously to relieve them. They had been once before in the same strait; when God thought fit to cause a rock, upon Moses striking it with his rod, to pour forth water.² But here Moses and Aaron were commanded to take the rod; to go and stand before a rock appointed them, having summoned the people to see how God would relieve them; then they were to speak only to the rock, and the rock was to give forth water. Had the Israelites been here prone to entertain any superstitious fancy of the virtue of that rod, which had been the instrument of so many miracles, what an opportunity had Moses to convince them of their folly, and evidencing, that neither himself, nor Aaron, nor the rod, was of any importance, but that God could have perfected the same wonders by a word only, if he had thought fit to have done them in that manner. But instead of thus discharging himself, he took the rod, and he and Aaron gathered the congregation, and he said unto them; Hear now, ye rebels, must we fetch you water out of this rock? And Moses lift up his hand, and smote the rock twice, and the water came out abundantly.³ In this he spoke and acted unadvisedly;⁴ for he did not speak or act according to the commission which God had given him; but spake and acted of himself, too great an argument of an affectation of raising his own credit; for he that speaketh of himself, seeketh his own glory.⁵ Moses expressed himself to have had this sense of things upon another occasion. When Nadab and Abihu offered strange fire before the Lord, which he commanded them not, Moses remon-

⁸ Numb. xx, 12.

² Exod. xvii.

⁶ John vii, 18.

⁹ Exod. xv. 26.

³ Numb. xx, 10, 11.

¹ Heb. iii, 2.

⁵ Psalm cvi, 32.

strated their crime to Aaron in the clearest terms, and declared, that God would be *sanctified in them that came nigh him, and glorified before all the people.*⁶ But here he and Aaron joined in a part very different from these sentiments. Their duty was to have glorified God in the sight of the congregation, by punctually performing what he had directed. But instead of this, they did and said what he commanded them not, and thereby gave the Israelites an opportunity to imagine that the supply might come from them, from their power and ability to procure it. And for this reason, because they were not strictly careful to promote the glory of God, instead of raising their own credit⁷ among the people, they were sentenced not to lead the Israelites into the land of Canaan.

Kadesh, near which the Israelites were at this time encamped, was a city upon the borders of the land of Edom;⁸ from the neighbourhood of which place Moses sent messengers unto the king of Edom to ask leave to march through his country.⁹ The Israelites had received a strict charge not to¹ make any attempt against this people; and Moses's message was in terms of the greatest assurance of friendship to them. He acknowledged the relation between them and Israel, and promised, in the most explicit manner, that he would only pass through their country, without foraging any part of it, or injuring any person inhabitant of it.² But the Edomites were not willing to run the venture. Hitherto they had been governed by dukes;³ but about this time, apprehending danger, they made a king, thinking it necessary to unite under one head for their common preservation. This king of Edom refused to admit the Israelites into his territories, and guarded his frontiers with numerous forces;⁴ whereupon the Israelites were obliged to march another way, and therefore moved from Kadesh to mount Hor. Upon mount Hor Aaron died, and Eleazar his son was appointed high-priest in his place.⁵ Aaron was a hundred and twenty years old when he died in mount Hor,⁶ and died there in the fortieth year after the children of Israel were come out of the land of Egypt,⁷ and so died A. M. 2553.

The king of Arad, a city in the southern parts of Canaan, upon the Israelites coming near his borders, attacked them, and took some of them prisoners.⁸ The Israelites had offered ⁶ Levit. x, 3.

⁷ The 12th verse of xxth chapter of Numbers should be thus translated: Because ye were not faithful to me, to (sanctify or) glorify me, in the eyes of the children of Israel, therefore ye shall not bring this congregation into the land which I have given them.

⁸ Numb. xx, 16.

¹ See Deut. ii, 4, 5, 6.

² See vol. ii, b. vii, p. 136.

³ Numb. xx, 22—29.

⁴ Chap. xxxiii, 38.

⁵ Numb. xx, 14.

⁶ Numb. xx, 17—19.

⁷ Numb. xx, 18, 20.

⁸ Chap. xxxiii, 39.

⁹ Chap. xxi, 1.

no violence to his country, and were so provoked at this attempt upon them, that they vowed a vow unto the LORD, that if they should hereafter be able, they would utterly destroy this people;⁹ and they were enabled, and did perform this vow in the days of Joshua,¹ or in a little time after his death.² The third verse of this twenty-first chapter of Numbers seems to intimate that the Israelites at this time conquered these Canaanites, and utterly destroyed them and their cities. But this was not fact; for the king of Arad is one of those who were conquered by Joshua;³ and the vengeance here threatened was either executed upon this people by his hand, or completed by Judah and Simeon, when they slew the Canaanites that inhabited Zephath, and utterly destroyed it.⁴ The kingdom of Arad was not conquered in the days of Moses, and therefore we cannot suppose, that the remark here inserted, that the Lord hearkened unto the voice of Israel, and delivered up the Canaanites, and they utterly destroyed them and their cities, was of his writing. I think Moses left the text thus: And Israel vowed a vow unto the LORD, and said, If thou wilt indeed deliver this people into my hand, then I will utterly destroy their cities, and called the name of the place Hormah, i. e. Israel called the place so, in token, that if ever it should be in their power, they designed to make it desolate.⁵ As to what is added in the third verse, that the LORD hearkened unto the voice of Israel, and delivered up the Canaanites, and that they utterly destroyed them and their cities; the thing was not done, and therefore the remark could not be made in the days of Moses. The words perhaps might be written, by way of observation, in the margin of some ancient MS. of the Pentateuch, after the Israelites had destroyed the Canaanites; copiers from such a MS. might afterwards transcribe it from the margin into the text, and thereby occasion it to come down to us as part of it.

The king of Edom refusing to admit the Israelites to pass through his country, and the king of Arad opposing them upon the frontiers of his kingdom, they were obliged to retire back into the wilderness, and therefore decamped from mount Hor. They were ordered to march towards the Red Sea, and to fetch a compass round about the land of Edom.⁶ They began this expedition, but the soul of the people was much discouraged because of the way.⁷ They remonstrated to Moses all the difficulties which would attend it; complained that they should be distressed for want of water, and that, as to the manna, they loathed it,⁸ and therefore were not willing to go again through a desert, where they could expect no other provision. They began hereupon to be too muti-

⁹ Numb. xxi, 2.

¹ See Josh. xii, 14.

² See Judges i, 17.

³ Josh. xii, 14.

⁴ Judges i, 17.

⁵ The word Hormah signifies a place devoted to destruction.

⁶ Numb. xxi, 4.

⁷ Ibid.

⁸ Ver. 5.

nous for Moses to lead them any farther, had not God been pleased to correct them for their obstinacy, by sending amongst them fiery serpents, which destroyed many of them.⁹ This calamity soon humbled them, and upon their intreating Moses, he prayed for them, and obtained them a cure of the malady which afflicted them. God directed him to make a serpent, and set it up in the camp; and promised, that whoever would look upon it, should, though bitten with a fiery serpent, recover and live.¹ Moses made a serpent of brass, as he was commanded; which the people found to be a remedy against the calamity, that had destroyed great numbers of them.²

Sir John Marsham is very particular in his remarks upon the setting up this brazen serpent.³ He has collected several passages from profane writers, which hint at charms and enchantments to cure the bite of serpents; and says, the Hebrews made use of enchantments for this very purpose; which assertion he endeavours to support by a citation from the Psalms, by another from Ecclesiastes, and by a third from Jeremiah; and from the whole of what he offers, he would intimate, that the cure of the Israelites here, who were bitten, was not miraculous; but that the brazen serpent venenum extinguebat—et morsus arte levabat, was a charm for the calamity,⁴ or an amulet for the distemper,⁵ ἀλεξήριον τῆς τοκουτῆς ἀληγῆς. It would be trifling to endeavour to refute this opinion; for no one, acquainted with Sir John Marsham's way of thinking, can suppose that he believed it. I dare say, he thought a charm for the bite of a serpent as ridiculous on the one hand, as the opinion of some learned commentators is on the other; who, in order to make the miracle appear the greater, contend that brass is of a virulent nature, and that the looking upon a serpent made of that metal, would, by way of sympathy, add rancour to the wounds, instead of curing them.⁶ To a reasonable inquirer, the brazen serpent cannot appear to have been, of itself, of any effect at all. This unquestionably was Sir John Marsham's opinion; and what he cites from heathen writers was intended by him to prove, not that charms had ever been a real cure for the bite of serpents, but that the world had been amused with such fancies. And he cites the sacred writers in order to hint, that they admitted and countenanced these popular superstitions; but his real thoughts about Moses and the Israelites in the case before us appear to me to have been, that the bitings of the serpents with which the Israelites were infested, were not mortal; that Moses set up the brazen serpent to amuse the people, that those who were bitten might make themselves easy by looking at it, in ⁹ Numb. xxi, 6.

² Can. Chron. p. 142.

⁶ Vid. Pol. Synops. Crit. in loc.

¹ Ver. 8.

⁴ Ibid. p. 144.

² Ver. 9.

⁵ Ibid.

hopes of a cure, until the poison had spent itself, and the inflammation ceased; that when they grew well, Moses might teach them to ascribe their cure to a secret efficacy of the brazen serpent, in order to raise and support his credit among them. This must be our learned writer's sentiment, in its full strength and latitude; to which I answer,

I. There were indeed serpents of divers sorts in many parts of the world; and some not so venomous, but that their bite was curable. Diodorus Siculus informs us, that in the island Taprobane, now called Ceylon, there were serpents of a large kind, of no noxious quality;⁷ and Herodotus mentions a lesser sort as free from venom in the parts near Thebes, in Egypt.⁸ The inhabitants of Epidaurus in Greece were well acquainted with these sorts of serpents,⁹ and such abounded in Ethiopia.¹ Pausanias was of opinion, that the same sort of serpents would not be equally venomous in different countries; for that a different pasture may add to, or diminish the virulence of their poison.² And thus it may be true in fact, that there anciently were, and now are in the world, many sorts of serpents not thought capable of biting mortally; but that a little time and patience, without much help of medicine, might heal the wounds received from them. And we may suppose, that the nature of the more noxious sorts might be mitigated by removing them into a climate, or managing them with diet not apt to supply them with too potent a poison.³ And phisic and surgery are now brought to such perfection, that perhaps there is no poison of serpents so deadly, but that, if application be made in due time, a sufficient remedy may be had for it. But though we allow all this, let us observe,

II. That as Moses represents that the serpents, which bit the Israelites, had caused a great mortality;⁴ so the heathen writers concur in testifying, that the deserts, wherein the Israelites journeyed, produced serpents of so venomous a kind, that their biting was deadly, beyond the power of any art then known to cure it. The ancients observed, in general, that the most barren and sandy deserts had the greatest number, and most venomous of serpents. Diodorus makes this remark more particularly concerning the sands of Africa;⁵ but it was equally true of the wilderness wherein the Israelites journeyed. Serpents and scorpions were here, according to Moses, as natural as drought and want of water.⁶ And Strabo's observation agrees with Moses;⁷ and both Strabo and Diodorus concur that the serpents, which were so numerous here, were ⁷ Diodor. Sic. lib. ii, p. 99.

⁸ Herodot. lib. ii, c. 74; Id. lib. iii, c. 109.

⁹ Pausan. in Corinthiac. c. 28.

² Pausan. in Bœotic. c. 28.

⁶ Numb. xxi, 6.

⁶ Deut. viii, 15.

⁷ . . . πολὺν τὸν τῶν ὄφιδων ἢ αὐταῖς πληθεύς. Strab. Geog. l. xvi, p. 759.

¹ Herodot. l. iv, c. 183.

³ Diodor. l. iii, p. 119.

⁵ Diodor. lib. iii, p. 128.

of the most deadly kind, and that there was no cure for their biting.³ Some writers have supposed that the serpents, which bit the Israelites, had been of the flying kind. Herodotus informs us, that Arabia produced this sort;⁴ and the time of year, in which the Israelites were under this calamity, was in this season, when these serpents are upon¹ the wing, and visit the neighbouring and adjacent countries; so that these might at this time fly into the camp of the Israelites in great numbers. But Moses does not hint that they had been flying serpents, he calls them ha nechashim haserapim,² had he meant flying serpents, he would have said, nachashim serapim menopepin; for they are so described, where they are mentioned in the Scriptures.³ Strabo has taken notice of a kind of serpents produced in or near the parts where the Israelites journeyed, which might be called fiery from their colour,⁴ and both he and Diodorus were of opinion, that the bites of these were incurable;⁵ of which sort probably were those which assaulted the Israelites. But whether we can fix this point is not very material; it is enough for our purpose, that from what has been offered it may be observed, that after all the knowledge which the heathens had of cures and enchantments for the bites of serpents, yet they would not have judged any of their arts sufficient to have recovered the Israelites, whose malady was occasioned by a sort of serpents, against whose venom they had no remedy. But,

III. Let us see what charms the heathens pretended to have to cure the bite of serpents. The profane writers indeed celebrate the Marai, a people in Italy,⁶ the Paylli in Africa,⁷ and the Ophigenes in Lesser Asia,⁸ as very eminent for their abilities against the poison of serpents, and they give us many wonderful stories about each of them. But we may remark upon their performances, as Strabo does upon Alexander's curing the wounds of Ptolomy;⁹ and it will appear, that the persons of whom we have such marvellous accounts, were perhaps possessed of some physical recipes for the venom of serpents, and that the mythologists, as was their usual way, invented fables to raise their fame, instead of recording their

³ Strab. l. xvi; Diodor. l. iii.

⁴ Herodot. l. iii, c. 109.

¹ Λογος δι' ους αμα το κερ σφραγιστος ουκ ει της Αραβιης ποταμος. Id. lib. ii, c. 75.

² Numb xxi, 5.

³ See Isaiah xiv, 19; xxx, 6.

⁴ Οφις φονικη της χροας. Strab. Geog. l. xvi, p. 778.

⁵ Το δηγμα εχοντες ανικητον. Strabo, ibid. Diodorus says, δηγματα σφραγιστος πανταυς ανικτα. Hist. lib. iii, p. 126.

⁶ Virg. Æn. vii, v. 750; Plin. Nat. Hist. lib. vii, c. 2.

⁷ Plin. ibid.; Pausan. in Bœotic.; Strab. Geog. lib. xiii.

⁸ Strabo, lib. xiii; Plin. ubi sup.

⁹ τραδηται δι' Ιταλιανον ανδρα ον ο υιος δι' παραστα της το Αλεξανδρον, διδαι μζαν και χρυσου αμας δι' της βαβυλου ανικησι το αλεγμα, υπαικος γινεται το βασιλιν. Εμος δι' της μινουα της αμας το δι' μυδαυς σφραγιστη κελαινας χαρη. Strabo, lib. xv, p. 723.

skill in a true narration. It is remarkable, that the persons above-mentioned are acknowledged by those who speak most fabulously of their art, as having used external and medicinal applications. The Psylli began the cure by anointing the wound with their spittle,¹ which was thought no mean medicine both by Varro and Pliny;² and it might have more effect than we may be apt to think, if the artists who applied it had prepared their mouths by chewing such herbs as they thought proper to use upon the occasion. If this application did not answer, then they endeavoured to suck out the poison.³ It may be said, these were but poor attempts for the cure of so dangerous a malady. I answer, the knowledge and use of physic was not carried to great perfection in these ages. Pliny has given us above a hundred different remedies for the venom of serpents;⁴ most, perhaps all of them, would be now thought to be but trifling prescriptions, and yet, probably, twenty of the meanest of them would have raised any person to the reputation of an extraordinary magician in the days of the Marsi, Psylli, and Ophiogenes. Pausanias had no very high opinion of the powers of the Psylli; for he seems to doubt whether they could cure the bite of a serpent, unless the serpent before its biting had accidentally eaten some food, which might abate its venom.⁵ However, these men had their medicines, which sometimes proved successful; and their skill, though it would not have gained them the title of good surgeons in an age of more experience, was enough, in the times when they lived, to convey them down to the fabulous writers, as more than mortal. And these writers, fond of the marvellous, were apt to omit relating every thing in their practice, which did not appear surprising, and to give us that part only, which might look like magic and enchantment. The philosophy of these times led those, who thought themselves most rational, into many superstitions;⁶ and the practitioners of medicine thought it necessary to use some rites to gain a favourable influence of the planetary powers upon their endeavours, and to put the mind of the patient into a harmonious temper for their operations having success upon him. Hence music was thought to have its use at the time of their giving medicine, and sometimes proper words were muttered;⁷ for words duly compounded were thought to have great power,⁸ in charming the elements to favour the cure. And

¹ Lucan. Pharsal. l. ix.

² Plin. Nat. Hist. l. vii, c. 2.

³ Lucan. ubi sup. We are told by some of our English historians, that queen Eleanor sucked the poison out of the wound which a Saracen had given to Edward the First with a poisoned knife.

⁴ Plin. Nat. Hist. in var. loc.

⁵ Pausan. in Bootic, c. 28.

⁶ See vol. ii, book ix.

⁷

— Par lingua potentibus herbis.

Plurima tum volvit spumanti carmina lingua.

⁸ See vol. ii, book ix.

what they did of this sort, appearing more prodigious than their applications of the juices of herbs and other medicaments, the fabulous writers omit to speak of the latter, but mention at large their other performances, and lay great stress upon them. Thus the Indians were said to have itinerant enchanters, who were thought to cure the bites of serpents by their singing;⁹ but Strabo remarks, that what they did was almost the only practice of physic in use in India in their days;¹ so that I imagine they used medicines as well as music. Upon the whole; all the accounts we have of the heathen cures of the malady we are treating of, carry, if duly considered, the appearance of as much medicinal art as these ages were acquainted with; and they have no farther show of magic and incantation, than what the philosophy of these times, and the true religion built upon such philosophy, taught the learned to think necessary to give medicine its due and natural effect upon the body. And whoever will judiciously consider the whole of what the profane writers offer upon this topic, may abundantly see, that none of the heathen magicians would have admitted that a brazen serpent set up, as Moses set up that in the wilderness, could possibly have had any effect towards curing the people.

IV. But let us consider whether the texts of Scripture, cited by Sir John Marsham, do indeed support the points for which he cites them. He remarks, that David mentions, the deaf adder, that stoppeth her ear, which will not hearken to the voice of the charmers, charming never so wisely;² and that Solomon hints at a serpent which would bite without enchantment;³ and that Jeremiah speaks of cockatrices and serpents which will not be charmed.⁴ From whence he insinuates, that the sacred writers were sensible that charms were a sufficient cure for the bite of some serpents; though there were others, whose poison was not to be controlled by their influence. I answer, two of these texts, if duly examined, are very foreign to Sir John Marsham's purpose; for there is nothing of charming or enchantment suggested in them. The words of David, Psal. lviii, truly translated, are,⁵ as the deaf adder will not attend to the voice of the elo-

⁹ Εἰσὶν ἀφαιρέται ἀνθρώπων μαδῶν. Strab. Geog. lib. xv.

¹ Καὶ οὕτως οὐδέποτε οὐκ ἔστιν αὐτοῖς ἰατρικὴ. Id. ibid.

² Psalm lviii, 4, 5.

³ Eccles. x, 8.

⁴ Jer. viii, 17.

⁵ The Hebrew text, Psal. lviii, 4, 5, is in these words:—

10	11	10	9	8	7	6	5	4	3	2	1
כְּמוֹ-תֵּחַן	חֵרֶס	יֹאמֶם	אֲנִי	אֲשֶׁר	לֹא-יִשְׁמַע	לִקְלֹ	מְלָחִים	חֹזֵר	חֲרִים
סִחָם

i. e.

1	2	3	4	5	6	7	8	9
Sicut	aspis	surda	obturbabit	aurem	suam,	quæ	non	auscultabit
eloquentium	connectenti	connexiones	sapienti.

quent,⁶ putting together the sayings⁷ of the wise. David had no thought of charms or enchantments; but in a noble expression represents that wicked men are deaf to the best instructions offered to them in the most engaging manner. We have an English proverb, which in some measure expresses the import of David's words, though not with such a dignity of diction. When good advice is given, but not attended to, we compare it to a song sung to a horse. A horse or an adder are not to be moved by the wisest intimations; wicked and dissolute men are, morally speaking, like these animals; the best things that can be said are lost upon them; which is what David very elegantly represents, without any view or hint of the possibility of charming any serpent whatsoever. In like manner, nothing can be concluded to Sir John Marsham's purpose from the words of the preacher. We translate the verse, surely a serpent will bite without enchantment, and a babbler is no better. But the Hebrew words, truly rendered, would be thus: a serpent will bite without any warning, and a babbler (or one that loves to prate) is no better.⁸ The word lachash is here used as in 2 Samuel xii, 19, and the expression, be loa lachash, is without a whisper; i. e. without the least noise or intimation, in silentio, says the vulgar Latin; the LXX, ἐν τῇ ἡσυχίᾳ, without a whisper; the Targum, in taciturnitate, silently. The sacred writer hints, beautifully, that a prater wounds you before you can be aware of him; and we entirely lose his sentiment, if we take the verse to hint what Sir John Marsham would infer from it. The last text cited by our learned author is Jeremiah viii, 17. The Prophet threatens the Israelites with serpents, cockatrices which will not be charmed. It is evident to any one who considers the context, that the Prophet here uses an allegory, and does not mean that the Israelites should be infested with serpents, but that God would bring upon them the armies of their enemies, and calamities, against which they should find no remedy. How-

⁶ The word לשון may sometimes be used to mutter as enchanters did. It is a word not often used in Scripture; but it has not always this magic meaning. In 2 Samuel xii, 19, it signifies, to whisper, without any reference to sorcery or enchantment. In Isaiah iii, 3, לשון נבון is translated, the eloquent orator. Eloquii peritum, in the interlinear translation of the Hebrew. Prudent in giving counsel, says Jonathan in his Targum, and so it is rendered in the Syriac version. And thus I take the word in the passage before us, to signify, those who offer what they have to say, in the best, softest, and most engaging manner.

⁷ חברים Connexiones, in Quintilian's sense of the word: the conclusions of the wac.

⁸ The Hebrew words, Eccles. x, 11, are,

אִם יִשָּׁךְ הַנֶּחֱשׁ כִּלְאָה לֶחֶשׁ וְאִין יִרְרֹן לִבְעַל הַלֶּשֶׁן

i. e. Si mordeat serpens sine susurro: et non prastantia adamantia linguam, or non melior est, qui adamat loqui.

ever, since the allegory may be said to be founded upon the sentiment of the speaker, and the Prophet from his using the expression of serpents that will not be charmed, to signify irremediable calamities, may be argued to have thought some serpents capable of being charmed, as some calamities may have a cure; I would enter a little more exactly into his sentiment and expression. In order hereto let us observe, 1. That the Hebrews applied to no physicians in the most early times, but when under any malady^o they sought unto God for a cure. 2. There was an art of physic known both to Jews and heathens before the days of Jeremiah.¹ 3. The heathens had introduced into their practice of it, such rites as their learning and religion dictated; which rites were the charms, magic, and incantation they made use of.² They were charms of no real influence, nor truly productive of any supernatural effect; but they were thought significant by the learned of these ages, who built upon the rudiments of a vain and mistaken philosophy. 4. The Jews were not so careful in adhering strictly to the true God, and to his religion, but that in many things they frequently admitted the practice of the heathen superstitions, and learned their ways; and as Asa, when sick, almost three hundred years before the days of Jeremiah, sinned in this manner by applying to the physicians;³ so very probably in the Prophet's days much of the heathen physic might, in the corrupted state they were then in, be admitted and admired among them. But this is not all; in the days of Jeremiah the Jews were greatly corrupted, in both their religion and politics. They had departed far from God;⁴ walked after vanity, were become vain;⁵ and set up idols as numerous as their cities.⁶ They had *changed their glory for that which could not profit them;*⁷ *turned their back upon God;*⁸ *burned incense unto Baal;*⁹ *kneaded their dough to make cakes unto the queen of heaven; and to pour out drink offerings unto other gods;*¹ and now distress was coming upon them, and a dread and fear of being ruined, sometimes from the armies of the kings of Assyria, at other times from the invasions of the kings of Egypt; they thought to be preserved under the protection of their false gods, by a vain policy, in confederating with one or other of these powers, as circumstances might require, in order to be supported by one or the other of them. And to this end, before Jeremiah applied to them, they had made a league with the king of Assyria, and had suffered by it, and been ashamed of it.² At the time of his address to them, they were in alliance with ^o See vol. ii, b. ix.¹ See 2 Chron. xvi, 12.² This their method for the cure of the bites of serpents abundantly suggests to us.³ 2 Chron. xiv, 12.⁴ Jer. ii, 5.⁵ Ibid.⁶ Ver. 28.⁷ Ver. 11.⁸ Ver. 27.⁹ Chap. vii, 9.¹ Ver. 18.² Jer. ii, 36; see Prideaux's Connection, vol. i, b. i.

Egypt;³ but of this the Prophet tells them they would in a little time be ashamed also;⁴ for that God had rejected their confidences, and that they should not prosper in them.⁵ The design of Jeremiah was to set before the Jews, that in the Lord their God was the only true salvation of Israel;⁶ that from all other helps they hoped for it but in vain; that destruction upon destruction would come upon them:⁷ a nation from far be brought against them;⁸ and that, if they did not amend their ways and their doings,⁹ turn from their wickedness and idolatry, they should find, that they put their trust in lying words, which could not profit,¹ and that the evils which were coming upon them, would be as serpents; cockatrices, which could not be charmed; i. e. would be calamities really fatal, not to be remedied by the trifling and insignificant amusements, on which they so much depended. This is the argument and reasoning of the Prophet, which, if duly attended to, is so far from ascribing any true efficacy to charms and enchantments, that it strongly intimates they are a doctrine of vanities.² Jeremiah compares charms and enchantments, and the false confidences of the Israelites, with each other; and thereby declares his opinion of both to be, that they were insignificant and vain. In cases of no certain danger, those who were to be deceived with vain and imaginary expectations, might amuse themselves, and think they received benefit from them; but where the evil was real, and truly wanted a redress, there they would be found not able to profit, there no help was found to be had from them.

I have now considered to the bottom what Sir John Marsham intimates concerning the brazen serpent; and hope it must be evident, that there are no foundations for his suggestions; but that every sober querist must see reason to consider both the calamity that was inflicted upon the Israelites, and the miraculous cure of it, in the light in which the author of the Book of Wisdom long ago set it. They, i. e. the Israelites, were troubled, says he, for a small season, that they might be admonished, having a sign of salvation, to put them in remembrance of the commandment of thy law. For he that turned himself towards it, was not saved by the thing that he saw, but by thee, who art the Saviour of all.³ The Israelites were unmindful of the obedience which they owed to God: unwilling to march where God directed them. Hereupon they were punished, to bring them to a better mind, and their punishment was in a little time removed in a miraculous manner. They were commanded to come and look up to a brazen serpent, a thing evidently of itself of no impor-

³ Jer. ii, 36; see Prideaux's Connection, vol. i, b. i.

⁴ Jer. ii, 36.

⁷ Chap. iv, 20.

⁹ Chap. vii, 3—15.

³ Wisdom, xvi, 6, 7.

⁵ Ver. 37.

⁸ Chap. v, 15.

¹ Ver. 8.

⁶ Chap. iii, 23.

² Chap. x, 8.

tance; but by God's power and good pleasure made so effectual to their recovery, as abundantly to remind them, that whatever God should think fit to command, was importantly necessary to be performed by them.

Moses omits, in the xxist chapter of Numbers, two encampments of the Israelites; one at Zalmonah, the other at Punon; which are both mentioned in chap. xxxiii. The brazen serpent was set up at Punon; for after they were cured, they moved forwards to Oboth,⁴ and thence to Ijeabarim on the border of the land of Moab.⁵ They were warned not to attack the Moabites, and therefore did not enter their country, but marched forward on their borders into the valley of Zared, and pitched there at a place which they called Dibon-Gad.⁶ From hence they marched to the river Arnon, which divides the land of Moab from the country of the Amorites.⁷ They passed over this river, and pitched in the wilderness of the Amorites at Almondiblathaim.⁸ From hence they removed to the mountains of Abarim before Nebo.⁹ They made several encampments here, one at Beer, where they dug a well,¹ another at Mattanah,² a third at Nahaliel,³ a fourth at Ramoth,⁴ and the last at Pisgah.⁵ These were the several encampments from Kadesh to Pisgah; and by fixing them thus, we may perfectly reconcile the seeming differences between the xxist chapter of Numbers, ver. 11, 12, 13, 18, 19, 20, and the xxxiiid chapter, ver. 44, 45, 46, 47.

From the camp to Pisgah, Moses sent to Sihon, king of the Amorites, to ask leave to pass through his country;⁶ but Sihon was so far from being willing to permit them to march farther into his kingdom, that he determined to oblige them to quit it entirely. He therefore summoned together his forces, met the Israelites at Jahaz,⁷ and gave them battle, but was routed by them.⁸ The Israelites pursued their victory, and forced Sihon out of all that country, from the river Arnon unto Jabbok.⁹ This tract of land had formerly been the Moabites', until Sihon conquered it;¹ now the Israelites came into possession of it. The several victories which the Israelites obtained in the land of the Amorites,² were gotten by detachments from their main body; for the camp continued at Pisgah, until they removed to the plains of Moab.³ But they sent out select companies, such as they afterwards chose to fight the Midianites;⁴ for the whole camp was too great to move after every expedition. By these they reduced this whole country, and after this they conquered and took pos-

⁴ Numb. xxi, 10.

⁵ Deut. ii, 9; Numb. xxi, 12; xxxiii, 45.

⁶ Ibid. and xxxiii, 46.

⁷ Ver. 18.

⁸ Ver. 20.

⁹ Ver. 24.

¹ Ver. 25.

² Chap. xxxi, 3, 4, &c.

³ Ver. 11; xxxiii, 44.

⁴ Chap. xxi, 13.

⁵ Chap. xxi, 16.

⁶ Ibid.

⁷ Ver. 23.

⁸ Ver. 26—29.

⁹ Chap. xxii, 1; xxxiii, 43.

session of the kingdom of Bashan;⁴ and then Moses removed the whole camp, and pitched in the plains of Moab, near the banks of Jordan, over-against Jericho.⁵ So large a body as the camp of the Israelites took up a considerable tract of the country, and reached from Beth-jesimuth unto Abel-shittim.⁷

Balak the son of Zippor was king of Moab at this time: and was much alarmed at the march of the Israelites. And his people had great fears upon their account;⁸ for which reason he sent an embassy to the elders of Midian, and represented the common danger they were all in, and agreed with them to send to Balaam the son of Beor, a prophet, whose fame probably had been much talked of, to know if he could so curse this people, as that they might attack and destroy them.⁹ Balaam's country was far distant from the land of Moab. He came from the eastern parts of Syria.¹ He lived at Pethor, near Euphrates;² for he was of Mesopotamia.³ The ambassadors of the king of Moab, together with the elders of Midian, came hither to him, and delivered their message. Balaam required them to stay all night, until he should inquire of God what answer to give them. In the morning he acquainted them, that God would not give him leave to go with them.⁴ Upon the ambassadors reporting this to Balak, he thought he had not made the Prophet sufficient offers to induce him to take so long a journey; and therefore sent again by persons of higher rank, and offered him any advancement in his kingdom.⁵ But the Prophet answered, that no temptation should prevail upon him to do any thing, but what God should direct; therefore he required them to stay all night, until he should again consult God, and know what answer to give them.⁶ Upon this his second inquiry, God gave him leave to go, if the men came in the morning to call him;⁷ but strictly charged him, if he went, to say nothing but what he should direct.⁸ The offers of Balak had made impression upon Balaam, who grew fond of the journey and of the prospects of it; and in the morning he stayed not to be called, but got up early, and saddled his ass,⁹ and went with the princes of Moab. This was his fault; the wages which were offered, tempted him,¹ and he was greedy after the reward.² He did not preserve a due indifference to the journey, but pressed into it with a covetous or ambitious heart: and God's anger was kindled at his going in this manner.³ The commenta-

⁵ Numb. xxi, 33—35.

⁶ Chap. xxii, 1; xxxiii, 49.

⁷ Ibid.

⁸ Chap. xxii, 2, 3, 4.

⁹ Ver. 4, 5, 6.

¹ He came from Aram out of the mountains of the east, Numbers xxiii, 7; Aram is Syria; see vol. i, book iii, p. 108.

² Numb. xxii, 5.—The river Euphrates might be called the river of his land. Mesopotamia from this and the river Tigris is denominated Aram Naharaim. See vol. i, book iii, p. 109.

³ Deut. xxiii, 4.

⁴ Numb. xxii, 7—13.

⁵ Ver. 14, 16, 17.

⁶ Ver. 18, 19.

⁷ Ver. 20.

⁸ Ibid.

⁹ Ver. 21.

¹ 2 Peter ii, 15.

² Jude, ver. 11.

³ Numb. xxii, 22.

tors do not, I think, clearly determine what Balaam's fault was; and our modern deists, with great assurance, ridicule the fact here related. They remark, that his going upon Balak's second message, was by God's express command; and yet that the text says, God's anger was kindled because he went.⁴ I answer, our translators do indeed thus render the text; but the Hebrew words are clear of this absurdity. The Hebrew text is, and the anger of God was kindled, not כי הלך ci halak, because he went, but *כי הלך הוא, ci halak hua,*⁵ because he went of himself,⁶ i. e. without staying for Balak's messengers to come in the morning to call him. He had no leave to go at all, unless the messengers came in the morning again to him;⁷ and, perhaps, if he had not thus gone to them, after having promised them an answer, they might have thought their master's great offers neglected, and have gone away without him. But his head and heart were too full of expectations from the journey, to run the hazard of not being farther invited into it; and so he rose early in the morning, and went to them, directly contrary to God's express order,⁸ and was opposed by the angel for this breach of his duty.⁹ What follows in Moses's narration has appeared to many writers a great difficulty. Philo seems to have thought, that Balaam's ass did not really speak to him; for he gives a large account of all Balaam's proceedings, but is absolutely silent as to this particular.¹ The Jewish Rabbins represent Balaam as having heard and answered what the ass is related to have said to him, in a trance or vision;² and our modern naturalists are very free in their remarks upon the fact as related by Moses. 1. But an inspired writer, in the New Testament, assures us, that it was real fact as Moses relates it. Moses says, that the Lord opened the mouth of the ass, and she said unto Balaam,³ and St. Peter tells us, the dumb ass, speaking with man's voice, forbade the madness of the Prophet.⁴ 2. It is a fact in nowise impossible; some writers represent, that the very nature of the ass must have been changed, to make her capable of what is related. They argue, that not only a power of speaking must have been given to her, but that her mind also must have been enlarged, to enable her, first to know an angel, when she saw one, and in the next place to recollect backward, how she had carried her master until that time, and to remonstrate this, so as to suggest to him, that if something extraordinary had not happened,

⁴ Numb. xxii, 22.

⁵ Our Hebrew Bibles have the place, כי הלך הוא, but the Samaritan text is, I think, more accurate.

⁶ See book xi, p. 93.

⁷ Ibid; and ver. 21.

⁸ Philo. Jud. de vit. Mosis. lib. i, p. 643.

⁹ Maimonid. More Nevoch. part ii, c. 42.

¹ Numb. xxii, 28.

⁷ Numb. xxii, 20.

⁸ Ver. 22, 32.

⁴ 2 Pet. ii, 16.

she had undoubtedly still carried him in the same manner.⁶ The brute creatures are not conceived to have these powers of reasoning; they do not pursue, connect, and compare their ideas in this regular manner. Had Balaam's ass not been endowed with a greater compass of reason than creatures of this species ordinarily have, she would not have spoken what Moses relates, even though the power of speech had been miraculously given to her. She might have represented, that she was affrighted, but she would not have connected and compared her former services with the present miscarriage. But to this I answer, Moses does not say, that the ass knew an angel; an angel appeared to her in the way with a drawn sword to oppose their passage. She endeavoured to avoid him when she could, and when she could not, she fell down. She might have done the same, if a man had opposed them in the same manner. Or the appearance of the angel might very much affright her, without her knowing it to be an angel. As to her reasoning above the capacity of a brute animal, and speaking the result of such reasoning, God undoubtedly could, if he had pleased, have instantly capacitated any of the inferior creatures for this, or for much greater things. But even this does not appear to have been done. A human voice came out of the mouth of the ass;⁶ but I do not apprehend, that what the voice uttered proceeded from her sentiments; it was rather what God would have to be uttered to rebuke the Prophet. The tongue of the ass was miraculously moved, not by any natural power of her's so to move it; and it spake what it was moved to utter, without any connexion of the words spoken with the sentiments of the ass, and without her understanding the words which she uttered upon this occasion. This seems to me to have been the fact, and herein there is a real miracle; but no appearance of the absurdity, which is pretended. I would consider, 3. That the miracle of the ass's speaking was not superfluous and unnecessary; but very pertinent and suitable to the design which God intended to promote by it. It is thought by some, that this miracle might well have been spared; that the angel's appearing was abundantly sufficient to have recalled Balaam to his duty; that he was not much moved by the ass's speaking,⁷ it was the seeing the angel that affected him.⁸ And they say, why should God cause so unusual a miracle, as a dumb creature's speaking to so little purpose, and so little wanted? I answer; Balaam was, perhaps, much surprised at the ass's speaking, though Moses has not reported it to us. The ancient Jewish writers imagine he was so; and accordingly Josephus represents that he had been greatly astonished at it.⁹ But Moses's narration is short, and concise; and he may have omitted this ⁶ Numb. xxii, 28, 29, 30.

⁸ Ver. 34.

⁶ 2 Pet. ii, 16.

⁸ Joseph. Antiq. lib. iv, c. 3.

⁷ Numb. xxii, 29.

and other particulars of Balaam's story which were not of great moment to be told. For, what if the heat and obstinate bent of Balaam's temper caused him not to pay due regard to this miracle; shall the miracle be therefore argued to be in itself insignificant, because he did not suffer it to have its due effect upon him? Many miracles were wrought in Egypt, to which Pharaoh paid little regard; but we cannot censure them as extravagant or superfluous, because Pharaoh did not apply his heart duly to consider them.¹ Any one of them might have been of great service to him, if he would have made them so; which justifies the wisdom and goodness of God, in causing them to be wrought before him. This may be remarked in the case of Balaam; God did not design to permit a war between the Israelites and Moabites at this time. He had warned the Israelites not to distress or war against them;² and he would not suffer Balaam to curse the Israelites, because the Moabites would have paid so great regard to what he had promised, that they would thereupon have attacked them, in hopes of being able to *overcome and drive them out*³ of the neighbouring country. God, indeed, if he pleased, could have over-ruled Balaam's heart, and disposed him for his duty, without the appearance of any miracle, or have caused any one miracle to have been as effectual as ten thousand; but he dealt with Balaam as with a free agent. He did not take away his liberty, but set before him very considerable motives to induce him to make a right and virtuous use of it. If we consider the whole process of this affair, we shall not see reason to judge any part of what God was here pleased to do, as being superfluous or extravagant; but must allow, that in every particular, God was exceedingly merciful unto Balaam, though the corruption of his heart was very great. When he was first sent for by Balak, and inquired whether he should go, God did not lead him into a temptation too hard for him.⁴ Upon the second inquiry, a way was still made for him to escape;⁵ for had he not gone until he had been called in the morning,⁶ probably Balak's high and more honourable messengers⁷ would not have been so attendant upon what they might have thought his humour; but would have gone away without him. But he would go, and went with a corrupt heart, not likely to be duly mindful of the charge which God had given him;⁸ but liable to be tempted to gratify the king, in order to obtain the advancement which was offered him.⁹ Hereupon God was pleased to correct his intention by two miracles; by one of which he evidenced to him, that he could so control him, that it should not really be in his power to falsify, if he would, what God had designed to direct him to say. By the other, he threatened him not to attempt it upon pain of death. The ass he rode on was made to speak to him: a convincing demonstration, that it would be a vain thing in him to endeavour to speak otherwise than God should order him; since the same power, which here caused even a dumb animal to move its tongue very differently from what it was naturally capable of, could certainly over-rule even his tongue, and make him say just what, and no more than what was dictated to him, whether he was willing, or designed to speak it or not. Some writers, Philo in particular,¹ and Josephus,² represent Balaam as actually over-ruled in the use of his tongue, when he blessed the Israelites; and that he would have cursed instead of blessing them, if he could have made his tongue speak what he designed. But I see no reason to go into this opinion: God abundantly apprized Balaam by the miracle of the ass's speaking, that he could thus over-rule him, if he pleased; but I believe he still left him the liberty of a free agent, after having assured him by the angel, that, if he abused his liberty in this particular, he would destroy him. And, I think, both these miracles appear to have affected the Prophet. He seemed after this to bear in mind a due sense of his inability to speak otherwise than God should permit;³ and though he used endeavours, and had it at heart, if he could any ways do it, to gratify Balak;⁴ yet at last he did not dare to venture, but told the king, without reserve, all that God, and nothing but what God had been pleased to reveal to him.⁵ 4. But though the miracle of the ass's speaking was not superfluous; and insignificant to Balaam; yet if it had not been a real fact, Moses could have no inducement to relate it, nor any purpose to serve by it. The Israelites would have appeared under the special protection of God's providence as well without it. And Moses, as a wise and prudent man, if he had no other restraint, would not have invented such an unheard-of, needless prodigy; for it would have been to no purpose, if it had been his invention, because he could have no scheme or end to serve by it.

¹ Exodus vii, 23.² Deut. ii, 9.³ Numb. xxii, 11.⁴ Ver. 12.⁵ Ver. 20.⁶ Ver. 21.⁷ Ver. 15.⁸ Balaam's heart was known unto God, and he intended not to be strictly careful to speak only what God should direct, and therefore this point was given again in charge to him, ver. 35.⁹ Numb. xxii, 17.

Balaam's behaviour after he came to Balak; how he endeavoured to find enchantments to curse the Israelites, but could not succeed in them; and therefore instead of cursing them, blessed them three times, and gave thereby great offence to Balak; what he prophesied to Balak, and how Balak dismissed him, are points related at large in the xxiii^d and xxivth chapters of Numbers. And I may add what may be remarked

¹ Phil. Jud. lib. i, de vit. Mosis.

² Numb. xxii, 38; xxiii, 26.

³ Chap. xxxiii, 3—9, 17—24.

⁴ Joseph. Antiq. lib. iv. c. 5.

⁵ Chap. xxiii, 23; xxiv, 1.

upon them, if I inquire who Balaam was, and what character we ought to give him. I have before mentioned where he lived, when Balak sent to him. It does not seem as if he lived there in great circumstances of wealth and dignity; for if he had been in so easy a situation, Balak's offers of advancement would not have been so tempting to him. Or, when he could not obtain the advancement which had been proposed to him, he would have returned home again, and not have thought it worth his while to have stayed in Midian. But when Balak dismissed him, he behaved like a man in narrow circumstances, and of an ambitious spirit; was willing to ingratiate himself with the Midianites, and gave them the most wicked advice to ensnare the Israelites into ruin;⁶ and was found and slain in this country, when the Israelites warred against it.⁷ Pethor, in Mesopotamia, was most probably situate near or in Chaldea, under the government of the kings of Assyria; and as these nations had been long infected with idolatry,⁸ and were under a government which established and supported the idolatrous worship, it is not probable that Balaam, if he was a prophet of the true God, could have any prospects of advancement in his own country. The ancestors of Abraham and his family were expelled this land for worshipping the God of heaven;⁹ and if Balaam pursued the worship of this true God, whatever reputation he might have as to his private character, no public advantages in his own country were likely to accrue to him from it; which might make him so desirous to accept an invitation into another land.

It is disputed by some, whether Balaam was indeed a prophet and a worshipper of the true God. They suppose that he was a mere magician or enchanter; one who prophesied by the rules of vaticination in use in these days among the worshippers of false gods. If this opinion be true, then the revelations, which were made to him from the true God, must have been made to him in a manner to which he had not been accustomed, and beyond his expectation; in like manner as the Egyptian magicians were enabled to work real miracles.¹ But I think this notion of Balaam is not consistent with what Moses relates concerning him. When the messengers of Balak came first to him, he immediately applied to God for direction;² and the God he applied to was not Baal, nor any of the gods of the idolatrous nations, but JEHOVAH;³ the true and living God was his God. And he does not appear to have been at any time surprised at the answers which God was pleased to give him; or at the angels appearing to him; or at ⁶ Numb. xxxi, 16; Rev. ii, 14.

⁸ See vol. i, b. v.

¹ See vol. ii, b. ix.

² Ver. 8, 13, 18, 19, &c.

⁷ Numb. xxxi, 8.

⁹ Josh. xxiv, 2; Judith v, 6, 7, 8.

² Numb. xxii, 8.

the word of prophecy put into his mouth;⁴ being well apprised of and acquainted with God's communicating his will to his servants in these several ways. The only dubious appearance in his behaviour is, his having sought for enchantments.⁵ If he was a prophet and servant of the true God, why should he seek for enchantments? or what service could he think to receive from them? I answer; the arts of magicians, and their enchantments to procure prodigies and oracles, though the vulgar people did not understand the foundation on which they were built, were to the wise men and philosophers the produce of learning and natural science; falsely indeed so called, but really esteemed by them to be true.⁶ And as Moses was learned in all the learning of the Egyptians,⁷ though he did not practise any of the arts, which were the basis and support of false religion;⁸ so Balaam, though he had hitherto virtuously adhered to the true God, might, as a learned man, not be entirely a stranger to the theory of what human science and the then reputed natural knowledge had advanced upon these subjects. And as Saul, though he had before put away those that had familiar spirits, and the wizards out of the land,⁹ was yet induced, when the Lord answered him not, neither by dreams, nor by Urim, nor by prophets, to go to a woman that had a familiar spirit, and inquire of her;¹ so Balaam, finding nothing but a full disappointment of all his views, in the several revelations which God was pleased to make to him, and being warmly inclined to purchase, if he might with any colour be able to do it, the advancement which Balak had offered him, was tempted to try what might be the event, if he used some of the arts which the most learned nations held in the highest repute, and esteemed to be of the greatest efficacy.² He tried, but found no enchantment against Jacob, nor any divination against Israel.³ What particular arts he used, or upon what rules of science he proceeded, I cannot say; for Moses has not told us. But if his building seven altars, was as I have supposed, one of his artifices,⁴ it will hint that he had copied after the Egyptian theology. For, as they worshipped at this time the lights of heaven, so they first imagined the seven days of the week to be under the respective influences of seven of these luminaries.⁵ The Chaldeans are thought to have come into this ⁴ Numb. xxii, 9, 10, 12, 20, 31, 34; xxiii, 4, 5, 16.

⁵ Chap. xxiv, 1.

⁷ Acts vii, 22.

⁹ 1 Sam. xxviii, 3.

² They imagined that oracles and prodigies might be procured by these arts, sine Deo. See vol. ii, b. ix.

³ Numb. xxiii, 23.

⁶ See vol. ii, b. ix.

⁸ See vol. ii, b. ix.

¹ Ver. 6, 7.

⁴ Vol. ii, b. ix.

⁵ Καὶ ταῦτα ἅλλα Αἰγυπτίως ἐστὶ ἐκρημνισαί μιν τι καὶ ἡμεῖς ὡραστὴν ὄνομα ὅτι ἐστὶ. Herodot. i, ii, c. 82. Dio Cassius dicit, Dispositionem dierum ad septem planetas inventum fuisse Ægyptiorum. Philastrius Brixiensis expræsse asserit, Hermen definivisse secundum septem stellas hominum generationem consistere. Vid. Marsh. Can. Chron. p. 448.

doctrine next after the Egyptians;⁶ other nations did not admit it so early.⁷ Belus, the son of Neptune, had obtained leave for himself and some Egyptian priests to make a settlement at Babylon about half a century before Balak sent for Balaam.⁸ Belus and his followers taught the Chaldeans their astronomy, and probably introduced this Egyptian notion of the influence of the seven ruling stars, which might now be the reigning doctrine in Balaam's time; and he, not being a stranger to the learning of the age and country he lived in, might know enough of it to make a show before Balak of proceeding to his auguries by the rules of it.⁹ And if the sacrifices of Balak had been attended with any such circumstances as those, upon inspection of which the idolatrous prophets formed their divinations, I question not but Baalam had a disposition to take occasion to speak from them. But the providence of God seems not to have permitted him to have a possibility of being mistaken. If he would have cursed the Israelites, he must have done it, and at the same time have had a full sense that they were blessed, without any room for doubt or suspicion that it could be otherwise; and he was not hardy enough to be guilty of such an abandoned prostitution; but upon offering his third sacrifice he gave over. *He went not as at other times to seek for enchantments.*¹ This place I think is not well rendered: the Hebrew words intimate to us, that he did not perform the ceremonies in walking or dancing round the altar, by which the idolaters endeavoured to procure vaticinations;² but he set his face towards the wil-

⁶ Clem. Alex. Stromat. lib. i.

⁷ Marsham, ubi sup.

⁸ See vol. ii, b. viii, p. 162.

⁹ Some critics have imagined that Balaam built and offered upon seven altars, upon account of the states he offered for being in number seven. The Moabites indeed were under one head, Balak being their king, but the Midianites were under elders; and it is conjectured, that they were divided into seven principalities: but this imagination is entirely groundless. The kings or heads of Midian were five, not seven; Numb. xxxi, 8; and had the number of Balaam's altars been owing to the number of states he sacrificed for, he must have built not seven, but six only, five for the states of Midian, and one for the king of Moab.

¹ Numb. xxiv, 1.

² One of the heathen rites made use of to procure success to their sacrifices, was their dancing or moving in set steps backwards and forwards, from side to side, round about their altars. This the priests of Baal did in order to procure fire from heaven in the days of Elijah, 1 Kings xviii, 26. And this ceremony Balaam seems to have performed at each of the preceding sacrifices; at his last sacrifice he gave over. Our translation of the words would induce one to imagine, that his going away from Balak to meet or invoke the Lord, was his going to seek enchantments, but the Hebrew text suggests no such thing. The Hebrew words are,

וְלֹא הָיָה כְּמִקְדָּם בְּמִקְדָּם לְקִדְּמוֹתָם

In Latin thus,

Et non ambulavit secundum vicem in vice, &c.

The Greeks afterwards performed these ambulations thus: First, they moved towards the west, turning from the east, singing a sacred hymn: then they re-derness, and lifting up his eyes, he saw Israel abiding in his tents according to his tribes; and the Spirit of God came upon him, and he told Balak, without reserve, all that God was pleased to reveal to him.³ Balak was provoked at what Balaam now delivered to him;⁴ for Balaam spake now in a higher strain than ever in favour of the Israelites; but as he had now omitted some ceremonies, which he had before used to give effect to his sacrifices, and had not gone aside, as he twice before had done, to meet or invoke God, Balak could see no cogent reason for his so speaking. Balaam indeed prefaced what he delivered, with declaring them to be *the words which he heard from God, when he saw the vision of the ALMIGHTY, falling into a trance, but having his eyes open.*⁵ Certainly no such vision was ever seen by Balaam whilst Balak was with him; so that this revelation was made to him when he was alone, probably before he had attended upon Balak's sacrifices; and now upon his giving over all farther thoughts of amusing or gratifying Balak, God inspired him to recollect and deliver all that had been revealed to him; and Balak was so offended at his now speaking in so extraordinary a manner in favour of his enemies, because, to his apprehension; nothing had happened to cause his so doing. The prophet however proceeded and advertised him, what Israel should do to his people in after-ages.⁶ Balak paid but little regard to what he said, dismissed him with contempt, apprehending that he in nowise answered the character which had been given of him.⁷ Hereupon Balaam left him, and went to the Midianites, and formed a project to obtain their favour. He well knew that the prosperity of the Israelites depended upon their continuing to serve the living God; therefore he apprised the Midianites, that if they could seduce them to idolatry, they might then have hopes of prevailing against them.⁸ This was that counsel which Balaam gave the Midianites to cause the children of Israel to commit trespass against the LORD.⁹ And it is possible that he might amuse himself with the pretence of even a good view in it; for had it succeeded, and had the children of Israel been ruined by his scheme, why might he not have hoped, after so signal a success, to have had interest and influence enough over the Midianites to have, perhaps, brought them by degrees into the service of his own God, and so to have promoted both God's glory and his own advancement together. All this might look well in the eye of a politician; but much better had it been for Balaam to have lived at home at Pethor, than turned from the west back to the east again; and such turns or vices as these, I imagine Balaam had practised at Balak's sacrifices before and round the altars.

³ Numb. xxiv, 2—9.

⁴ Ver. 10.

⁵ Ver. 4.

⁶ Ver. 14—24.

⁷ Ver. 11.

⁸ See Rev. ii, 14.

⁹ Numb. xxxi, 16.

to be laying out these projects among the elders of Midian. Had there been any design of Providence to be carried on, by his coming out of private life, God both could and would have appointed events, which by natural steps would have raised him to that station, in which he intended he should be useful to the world. And if the Providence of God had no employment for him, how could it be worth his while to attempt the ruin of a very numerous people in order to gratify his own ambition? He might have lived at Pethor in peace and quiet, innocence and content; and if he had never been great in the world, he might have died the death of the righteous, and his last end have been like his.¹ But he warmly pursued other views, and was drawn away far into a foreign land, where he lost his integrity, and brought himself to an unhappy and untimely end.

Whilst the Israelites were at Shittim, the Moabites became acquainted with them; made them visits in their camp, and invited them to their feasts; and the Israelites fell in love with the daughters of Moab,² and an evil communication corrupted their manners, and led them into idolatry.³ Many of them went to the Moabites' sacrifices, and partook of them, and joined in the worship.⁴ Whereupon the anger of the Lord was kindled against Israel, and he commanded Moses to order the judges to put to death those who had committed this wickedness.⁵ The Midianites were instructed by Balaam to draw the Israelites into this evil.⁶ They communicated the advice to Balak, and the Moabites joined with them in effecting it, Balaam is said to have *taught Balak to cast a stumbling-block before the children of Israel; to eat things sacrificed unto idols, and to commit fornication.*⁷ But we do not read where Balaam gave any counsel of this sort immediately to Balak. It seems more probable, that what he advised was to the Midianites after he left Balak;⁸ though both nations joined to do what he directed. The one acquainted the other with the scheme he had taught them; and so either or both might, though not immediately, yet truly be said to be taught by him; because both followed his doctrine in what they did in this matter. Whilst the Israelites were under God's displeasure for this wickedness, and a pestilence raged in the camp, Zimri, the son of Salu, brought into his tent Cozbi the daughter of Zur, a prince of Midian, in the sight of all the congregation; but Phinehas the son of Eleazar the son of Aaron, took a javelin and went after them, and slew them both.⁹ At their deaths the plague stayed, after four and twenty thousand had died of it.¹

¹ Numb. xxiii, 10.⁴ Ver. 1.⁷ Rev. ii, 14.⁸ Chap. xxv, 6—8.² Chap. xxv, 1.⁵ Ver. 4, 5.⁸ See Numb. xxxi, 16.⁹ Ver. 9.³ Ver. 2, 3.⁶ Chap. xxxi, 16..

There may be several doubts raised about this act of Phinehas: it may be thought a very rash, irregular, and unjustifiable procedure. Zimri was a prince of a chief house among the Simeonites, say our translators: the Hebrew text styles him, prince of the house of his father Simeon.² He was, perhaps, the head of that tribe,³ and not accountable to Phinehas for his behaviour; how then could Phinehas have a right to execute this vengeance upon him? or what could be the safety of even the highest magistrates in this economy, if private men might put on an officious zeal, and assassinate, at pleasure, those whose actions were unjustifiable and deserved punishment? I answer: 1. That God had expressly ordered the persons who committed this wickedness,⁴ to be punished with death; so that nothing was done to Zimri more than God had directed to be the punishment of the crime he was guilty of. 2. Before Zimri appeared in this action, Moses had ordered the people to be punished in the regular way of their administration, by the proper officers who were over them;⁵ but Zimri was, I think, one of the supreme judges, one of the renowned men of the congregation,⁶ a prince of a tribe, a head of thousands in Israel, and had a right to stand with Moses and Aaron in their government of the people; and consequently could not regularly be brought under sentence of the judges, who were inferior to him. And this must have been the foundation for the insolence of his behaviour. He brought unto his brethren a Midianitish woman in the sight of Moses, and in the sight of all the congregation of the children of Israel, who were weeping before the door of the tabernacle.⁷ He was so far from paying regard to what Moses had ordered, that he acted in open defiance of it; and instead of appointing the judges of his tribe to punish those who were under their jurisdiction, as God had commanded, he openly, and in the face of the congregation, abetted by his own practice what he ought to have used his authority to correct and suppress. Therefore something extraordinary was here necessary to be done, to punish a crime, which appeared too daring to be corrected, in the practice of a person, who seemed too great to be called to account for it. And indeed, 3. We do not read, that the judges did at all exert themselves in executing the orders, which Moses had given them. Moses had required them to slay every one his man, who were joined unto Baal-peor;⁸ but we hear of none who fell for this wickedness, except this Zimri and those who died of the

² The Hebrew words, Numb. xxv, 14, are,

זמרי בן סלוא נשיא בית—אב לשמעון
sui Simeonis patris domus princeps Salua filius Zimri.

³ See Numb. i, 4, 16. In this sense Josephus took the words. He styles him Ζαμβρις ο τρις Συμεωνος φυλης ηγεμενος. Antiq. lib. iv, c. 6, sec. 10.

⁴ Numb. xxv, 4.

⁵ Ver. 5.

⁶ Chap. i, 16.

⁷ Chap. xxv, 6.

⁸ Ver. 5.

plague.² The transgression was too universal to be corrected by a judiciary proceeding; and as Moses was once before obliged to summon the Levites in an extraordinary manner to punish a sin, in which great numbers of persons, and high in station and authority, had engaged;¹ so in this case something of a like nature was absolutely necessary to bring the offenders to condign punishment. But, 4. Since *there is no lawful and justifiable power, but of God;*³ since in every government *the powers that have a right to command or to punish, must be ordained of God;*⁴ either by deriving their authority from the constitution of such government (for thus *every ordinance of man*⁵ may have a right of authority, and be the ordinance of God),⁵ or by being appointed by immediate revelation, and an express commission from heaven; and since Phinehas had no authority to punish Zimri from any law or constitution in the Jewish economy, I must confess that, unless he had a divine command for what he did in this matter, I should think his taking vengeance in the manner in which he signalized himself, must want a further justification than what we could offer for it, from the plea of a warm but well-meant zeal to assert the glory of God, and to put a stop to the insolence and wickedness of the people; and he ought certainly, notwithstanding such a plea, to have been called to answer for it before the proper judges, if, 5. God had not, in an extraordinary manner, declared his acceptance and approbation of the death of Zimri. As soon as Zimri was dead, *the Lord spake unto Moses, saying, Phinehas the son of Eleazar, the son of Aaron the priest, hath turned my wrath away from the children of Israel (while he was zealous for my sake among them) that I consumed not the children of Israel in my jealousy. Wherefore say, behold, I give unto him my covenant of peace. And he shall have it, and his seed after him, even the covenant of an everlasting priesthood; because he was zealous for his God, and made an atonement for the children of Israel.*⁶ God declared this to Moses by a special revelation. And that God indeed did reveal it, and that it was not a pretence of Moses to protect Phinehas, was apparent to the congregation, being sufficiently attested by the plague's ceasing as soon as Zimri was dead.⁷ I am sensible that what is already offered is sufficient to vindicate the behaviour of Phinehas. If God himself declared him to be acquitted, who should condemn him? And his example can lay no foundation for a dangerous imitation; for it will in nowise prove, that an illegal action, though proceeding from a most upright heart, zealously affected in a good thing, is ever to be justified, unless God, by an express and well-attested revelation from heaven, declares his patronage and acceptance of it. But, 6. I might add farther, that what Phinehas did was not only the effect of zeal, but rather God revealed himself to him before he attacked Zimri, and required him to cut off that high offender; and consequently Phinehas had as clear and full a commission for what he did, as Moses had for the discharge of the offices unto which God appointed him, though Moses and the congregation were not at first apprised of it. Phinehas is said, by the death of Zimri, to have made an atonement for the children of Israel.⁸ But what merit could there be in the death of Zimri? How could that expiate the sins of the congregation? Or what had Phinehas to do in pretending to make atonement, unless God had appointed him? For no man taketh this honour to himself, nor can perform this office with any effect, but he that is called of God as was Aaron.⁹ Or if Phinehas had been entitled to endeavour to procure a reconciliation of God to his people, he must surely have attempted it in some way which God appointed; and not by a strange service, which God commanded him not,¹ and which must therefore have been more likely to offend than to please him.² But all these difficulties are fully cleared by what Moses was ordered to declare to the Israelites: Wherefore say, Behold I give unto him my covenant of peace.³ The verse is injudiciously translated. The Hebrew words, hinneni nothen lo barithi shalom, signify, behold it was I who gave to him my covenant of peace; and the declaration was intended to inform the congregation, that Phinehas had not done a rash action, moved to it by a mere warmth of heart, but that God had directed him to what he had performed; made him an express covenant upon his performing it; assuring him, that the doing it should obtain pardon for the people; and that upon the death of Zimri and Cozbi, slain by his hand, the wickedness, which had been committed in the camp, should be forgiven. In this view of the fact all is clear, and it is easy to see how a covenant of peace was given to Phinehas; how he was enabled to make atonement for the people; and in what sense the death of the offenders slain by him was such atonement; and what he did stands clear of the objections which can be offered against an irregular zeal; for it was not an instance of such a zeal, but of one more de-

² Numb. xxv, 9.³ Ibid.⁴ Rom. xiii, 2.⁵ Ver. 8.¹ Exod. xxxii, 26.² Αὐθιγὰς ἡμέρας. 1 Pet. ii, 13.³ Numb. xxv, 10, 11, 12, 13.⁴ Rom. xiii, 1.

⁸ Numb. xxv, 13.

⁹ Heb. v, 4.

¹ See Lev. x, 1, &c.

² See the case of Nadab and Abihu, b. xi, p. 115.

³ Numb. xxv, 12.

⁴ The Hebrew text is thus written and pointed:

הנני נתן לו את בריתי שלום

i. e. Ecce me dantem illi pactum meum pacis. Ecce, me, dantem, i. e. Ecce me, qui dabam. The participle is of the imperfect tense as well as of the present.

performance of this promise; for they observe that Eli, who was high-priest in the days of Samuel, was of the family of Ithamar; and that therefore the priesthood went out of the hands of the descendants of Phinehas, when it came to Eli, and that it did not return again to them until, after some successions, it came again to Zadoc in the days of David. But I think this difficulty might be avoided. We need not suppose that the priesthood is here called everlasting, to express a design of a perpetual continuance of it to Phinehas's descendants; but rather the term everlasting is the appellation annexed to the priesthood in its limitation to the family of Aaron;⁹ and suggests no more than that the priesthood of Aaron should descend to them. God made to Phinehas and to his seed after him, not an everlasting grant of the priesthood, as some commentators take it;¹ nor a grant of an everlasting priesthood, as our English version renders the place; but rather a grant of the everlasting priesthood; of the priesthood limited to Aaron and his descendants by that appellation. And this promise would have been fulfilled, if the priesthood had descended only to Eleazar and his son. I am sensible that the Jews before and about our Saviour's time had a notion, that Phinehas had a grant of an everlasting priesthood to him and his posterity. The author of the book of Ecclesiasticus seems to have been of this opinion,² as well as Philo Judæus,³ and others; but in fact there was not such a perpetuity of the possession of the priesthood in this family; no inspired writer has, I think, hinted, that the passage contains such a promise, and the text does not appear to imply it.

Upon the ceasing of the plague, God commanded Moses and Eleazar to take a poll of the Israelites;⁴ at casting up of which the people were found to be six hundred and one thousand, seven hundred and thirty men of twenty years old and upwards, without the Levites;⁵ and the Levites from a month old and upwards were twenty-three thousand.⁶ Now from this poll it appeared, that there was no one person now alive of those whom Moses and Aaron had numbered in the wilderness of Sinai, except Moses himself and Caleb and Joshua.⁷ At this time the daughters of Zelophehad represented the death of their father, and his having left no sons;⁸ and Moses brought their cause before the Lord, and received a law for the settling their inheritance.⁹ And now Moses was ordered ⁹ Exod. xl, 15.

¹ The critics write the text [Barith Kehunnah le Nolah] Pactum Sacerdotii sempiternum, A covenant of the priesthood for ever. Le Clerc says, Fœdus Sacerdotii perpetuum. But they mistake the word in the text. The Hebrew text is Nolah, and not le Nolah, for ever.

² Eccus. xlv, 24.

³ Philo says, there was given to Phinehas, παρακλησας προνοιας αυτου, και τον κληρονομιασ αναπαρεσεν. de Vit. Mosia, lib. i, p. 649.

⁴ Numb. xxvi, 1, 2.

⁵ Ver. 51.

⁶ Ver. 62.

⁷ Ver. 64.

⁸ Chap. xxvii, 1, 2, &c.

⁹ Ver. 5—11.

to arm a thousand out of each tribe, and send them under the command of Phinehas to war against the Midianites,¹ and God delivered into their hand the rulers of Midian; and without the loss of one man they made an absolute conquest of all their territories.² Balaam lived in Midian at this time, and fell by the sword of the Israelites.³

The Israelites were now in possession of a considerable country, part of which the children of Reuben and Gad desired to have for their inheritance; and came to Moses and Eleazar to petition for it.⁴ Moses at first thought their request highly unreasonable, and remonstrated, that for them to desire to be settled, before Canaan was conquered, would be a refusal to serve in the war, unto which God had appointed them as well as other Israelites, and might bring down the divine vengeance upon the congregation, if they should consent to it.⁵ Hereupon the two tribes explained their meaning; that they intended not to desert their brethren, but only to settle their families in these parts; that they designed themselves to march with the camp, and assist in reducing the land of Canaan.⁶ Upon these terms Moses consented, and ordered Eleazar the priest, and Joshua the son of Nun, and the chief fathers of the tribes, to divide to the children of Gad and of Reuben, and to the half tribe of Manasseh, all the land which the Israelites had conquered on the east side of Jordan.⁷ After this he gave directions for dividing the land of Canaan, when they should have conquered it;⁸ charging them to expel the inhabitants, and demolish all the monuments of their idolatries;⁹ declaring, that if they were remiss herein, terrible inconveniences would ensue.¹ Then he described the land, telling them its bounds and extent,² and named the persons who should divide it when conquered.³ He appointed them to allot the Levites their cities,⁴ and to set out the cities of refuge.⁵ He settled an inconvenience arising from the inheritance of daughters, upon a remonstrance brought before him by the sons of Gilead.⁶ And now he was reminded, that he was not to go into the Land of Promise.⁷ He prayed God to permit him to go into it; but his prayer was not accepted.⁸ He was ordered to go up to Mount Abarim or Pisgah, and from thence to take a view of the land; but he was expressly told, that he should not go over Jordan.⁹ Hereupon he begged of God to name a person to lead the people; and God directed him to appoint Joshua.¹ And at this time I suppose the laws mentioned in the xxviiith, xxixth, and xxxth chapters of Numbers were given.

¹ Numb. xxxi, 1—6.

⁴ Chap. xxxii, 1.

⁷ Ver. 33.

¹ Ver. 53, 56.

⁴ Chap. xxxv, 2—8.

⁷ Chap. xxvii, 12.

⁹ Ver. 27; Numb. xxvii, 12, 13.

² Ver. 7—14.

⁵ Ver. 6—15.

⁸ Chap. xxxiii, 54.

² Chap. xxxiv, 1—16.

⁶ Ver. 9—34.

⁹ Deut. iii, 25, 26.

³ Ver. 8.

⁶ Ver. 16—27.

⁹ Ver. 52, 53.

³ Ver. 17—29.

⁶ Chap. xxxvi.

¹ Ver. 16—18.

On the first day of the eleventh month of the fortieth year after the exit out of Egypt,² Moses began to exhort the Israelites, in the words recorded in the first chapter of Deuteronomy; and he continued his exhortation daily; until he had offered to their consideration what we are told in that book he spake to them. Then he called for Joshua, and exhorted him to be of good courage, in leading the people, assuring him of the divine assistance and protection.³ In the next place he delivered the book of the law, which he had written, to the Priests and Levites, and unto all the elders of Israel; and commanded them to have it read once in seven years to the people.⁴ Then he presented himself and Joshua before the LORD in the tabernacle of the congregation; where the LORD appeared in the pillar of the cloud, and revealed to Moses, that the people, after his death, would forsake the law, and bring many evils upon themselves.⁵ In order to warn them against so fatal a perverseness, he was commanded to write the song recorded in the xxxiii chapter of Deuteronomy.⁶ Moses therefore wrote this song, and taught it the children of Israel;⁷ and he added it, and an account of what had passed unto this time, to the book of the law. When he had thus finished the book he ordered the Levites to put it in the side of the ark of the covenant, and there to keep it.⁸ After this he blessed the people,⁹ and then went up from the plains of Moab to the top of Pisgah,¹ the LORD, having from thence given him a prospect of the land, said unto him, This is the land, which I swear unto Abraham, unto Isaac, and unto Jacob, saying, I will give it unto thy seed. I have caused thee to see it with thine eyes, but thou shalt not go over thither.² We do not read that Moses came down the mount any more, but rather died there, whither he went up, as Aaron died in mount Hor.³ He was a hundred and twenty years old when he died; but his eye was not dim, nor his natural force abated.⁴ He died about the end of the eleventh month, A. M. 2553. The Israelites mourned for him one month, or thirty days,⁵ which I suppose concluded the year. He was buried in the valley over against Beth Peor;⁶ but there being no monument erected to distinguish his grave, the particular place of it was forgotten in a few years.⁷

² Deut. i, 3.⁴ Ver. 9—13.⁶ Ver. 19.⁸ Ver. 24, 26; see Prideaux, Connect. vol. i, b. iii.⁹ Deut. xxxiii. Simeon is not mentioned in this chapter; but we must not think that Moses forgot or omitted to bless this tribe. The Alexandrian MS. of the Septuagint reads the sixth verse thus: Let Reuben live and not die, and let the men of Simeon be many, or not few. The word Simeon was written in this verse by Moses; but the copyists have omitted it by mistake in transcribing.¹ Deut. xxxiv, 1.³ Ver. 5.⁵ Ver. 8.³ Chap. xxxi, 7, 8.⁵ Ver. 14, 18.⁷ Ver. 22.² Ver. 4.⁴ Ver. 7.⁶ Ver. 6.

After so large an account as I have given of the several transactions in which Moses was concerned; the reader must greatly anticipate me in what I might attempt to offer upon his conduct and character. He was remarkably eminent in a high station of life; had a great share of power and authority; an absolute command of above six hundred thousand men fit to bear arms, besides their families. He was advanced to this dignity, not from any schemes of his own politics and ambition; not from any accidental success of arms; not from the heats and chances which commonly give rise to and direct a popular choice; but by the special command and appointment of God himself. And herein (to use the hint of Philo)⁸ he acted in a post above any thing of this world, was superior in character to the most exalted of those, who conduct the designs of the greatest princes of the Earth; for he was the immediate minister of ALMIGHTY God to a chosen people, and behaved himself so well in the discharge of the trust committed to him, as to be honoured with this testimony from his great master, that *he was faithful to him that appointed him in all his house.*⁹ If we consider the administration of Moses, we shall, from the manner of it, see all reason to conclude, that no views of his own, but an absolute submission and adherence to the will of God revealed to him, must have directed him in all the several parts of it; for what private advantage either to himself or to his family, did he endeavour to acquire from all his labours? He had two sons, Gershom and Eliezer; but we do not find, that in forming the Jewish polity he made any particular provision for either of them. His sons were of the children of Levi, and as Levites had their appointed courses in the work and service of the tabernacle;¹ but no privilege above other Levites, the priesthood being settled upon the family of Aaron.² As Moses had the supreme direction of the civil magistracy during his life, had ⁷ The Hebrew writers have had many fancies concerning the death and burial of Moses. Vid. Joseph. Antiq. lib. iv, cap 48; Philo Jud. de vit. Mosia, l. iii. And the present text of the xxxivth chapter of Deut. ver. 6, may seem to give some handle for them. It is there written, וַיִּקְבֹּר אֱלֹהִים, vejekabber aotho, i. e. and he buried him, as if Moses was not buried by human hands, but by God himself, and in a place unknown to the Israelites: but the LXX render the place, Καὶ ἐθαψαν αὐτὸν, not he buried him, but they buried him. The ancient original Hebrew text was, I think, undoubtedly, וַיִּקְבֹּר in the plural number, and the transcribers inadvertently dropt the final letter. The Israelites were the persons who buried Moses; and the remark added to the end of the verse only hints, that no monument having been erected over him, the place where he was buried was not certainly known at the time when the xxxivth chapter of Deuteronomy was written.

⁸ Διαφορῶτος τῆς αἰῶνος τοῦ παρὸς, καὶ ἀντιτιμῆς ὡς αὐτὸς τιμῇ δὲ ἀμειψόμενος οὐδὲν ὁφείλει τοῦ πρὸς ἀλλήλους εἶναι. Philo de Vit. Mosia, l. iii.

⁹ Numb. xii, 7.

² Exod. xl, 12—15; see Numb. xvi, 9, 10, 40.

¹ 1 Chron. xxiii, 14.

he conducted his measures by private rules of his own wisdom, is it probable that he would have given away at his death the command of the people, both from his own and from his brother's family, into another tribe, to Joshua the son of Nun of the tribe of Ephraim?³ Where are such instances of resignation to be found in the world? Indeed when Alexander the Great was dying, and was solicited to name his successor, he is said to have made no provision for any of his own family; but declared it to be his will, that the most worthy should have his kingdom.⁴ I cannot but question what is thus reported: for Plutarch, who has been very exact in collecting the circumstances of Alexander's death, informs us, that he was speechless before the persons came to him, to whom, according to others, he made this disposition;⁵ although, if he did not make it, it is obvious that not a disengagement of his private affections to his own family, but a true sense of the temper of his army, and the state of his affairs, might lead him to it. He knew his extensive empire was not so well established, as to be likely to descend to his heirs; but that at his death the generals, who had commanded in his armies, and had a place in his councils, would form parties, and divide his acquisitions,⁶ and he had no time to settle the claims of their several pretensions, but only wish them all well, and the best success to the most deserving. But Moses's affairs were in another situation. If the will of God had not been his direction, he might have appointed himself a successor, and the person recommended by his nomination, would, humanly speaking, have been as unanimously received and submitted to by the people as Joshua himself.

There are many particulars, which to a thinking person must abundantly prove that Moses's conduct in leading the Israelites had been directed by an immediate revelation. It is not likely, that he should of his own head, when he left Egypt, have made the march, which he led the people to the Red Sea;⁷ much less would he, without a divine command, have had a thought of attempting for forty years together such dangers and difficulties as the wilderness exposed him to, and out of which he could foresee no escape, but by miraculous deliverances. The march of Alexander the Great, over the sands of Libya to the temple of Jupiter Ammon, has been variously censured as a very⁸ wild expedition; though certainly

³ Numb. xiii, 8; Deut. xxxi.

⁴ Quint. Curtii Hist. l. x; Arrian de Expedit. Alexand. l. vii; Diodor. Sic.⁹ Hist. l. xvii.

⁵ Vid. Plutarch. in Vit. Alexand. ad fin.

⁶ Cartius says, Quarentibus cui relinqueret regnum, respondit, ei qui esset optimus: ceterum prœvidere jam, ob id certamen, magnos funebres ludos parari sibi. Hist. l. x, c. 5; vid. Arrian. de Expedit. Alex. lib. vii; Diodor. Sic. lib. xvii, c. 117.

⁷ See vol. ii, book ix.

⁸ See Prideaux, Connect. part i, book vi.

such a march, attempted and performed with the greatest dispatch, could be only one single trial at most, of what Moses habituated the Israelites to for forty years together. Besides, Alexander had an aim visibly enough, and political,⁹ to tempt him to his undertaking; but if we set aside the divine command, Moses could have no pretence for harassing and endangering his people with such perpetual extremities. We find many of the princes of the congregation thought Moses's conduct so palpably contradictory to all rules of human prudence, that they remonstrated it to be the greatest blindness for the people to be any farther led on by him.¹

It may perhaps be suggested, that Moses's detaining the people so long in the wilderness, might be to discipline them, and inure them to hardships; to give them various experience, that dangers and difficulties which at first sight seem insuperable, may by patience and good conduct be borne and conquered; and that he marched the Israelites here no longer, than until he had formed them to a competent skill and courage for the conquests of Canaan: that the wilderness was a place well suited for his thus exercising his army, affording him a secure retreat from the attacks of all nations, and opportunities to try the temper and courage of the Israelites daily with the appearances of various dangers, into which he might lead them as far as he thought proper, and retire whenever he thought it expedient to attempt no farther. But what may be thus intimated, cannot possibly be allowed; unless it can be proved, that the Israelites could have subsisted in those deserts, if they had not had the miraculous supply, which God was pleased to give them from Heaven.² The camp which Moses led was, men, women, and children, a body of about two or three millions of people; and a country both of large extent and great plenty, must, at first sight, appear necessary to bear and to maintain them. But the wilderness was a land of drought and of the shadow of death; a land, where a parched turf, and withered shrubs, must, to any one who should enter it, give a perpetual picture of decay and desolation. It was a land, to use the words of the Prophet, which no man passed through, and where no man dwelt.³ And if God had not directed, it is not to be conceived that Moses could have projected to sustain and keep together such a host as he led in so unpromising a country. Besides, if what is above offered was the reason of the encampments in the wilderness, how shall we account for Moses not attempting to

⁹ Illud pene risu dignum fuit, quod Hermolaus postulabat me (says Alexander) ut aversarer Jovem, cujus oraculo cognoscor. An etiam quid Dii respondeant in mea postate est? Obtulit nomen filii mihi, recipere ipsis rebus quas agimus non alienum fuit: utinam Indi quoque me Deum esse credant: fama enim bella constant, et aspe quod falso creditum est, veri vicem obtinuit. Curtius, lib. viii, c. 8.

¹ Numb. xvi, 14.

² Exod. xxi.

³ Jer. ii, 6.

enter Canaan, when he had as promising an opportunity, to all human appearance, as he could ever hope for? When the spies returned from searching the land,⁴ it was the opinion of some that the Israelites were able to conquer it, if they would march with courage and resolution to attack it;⁵ others indeed were of another mind, and were for returning back to Egypt again.⁶ There was great heat and debate in the camp upon this subject;⁷ but at last, after Moses had at large remonstrated to them, they were all willing to make the attempt; nay, and so resolutely bent upon it, that all he could say against it could not prevent their marching.⁸ And now, would not one think the camp spirited up to a temper, such as a wise general would have wished for, and made use of? But we find Moses acted a part directly contrary to what in human prudence might have been expected from him. He assured the people, that no attempt they should now make would be crowned with success; that forty years must pass before they should be able to enter the land.⁹ Will it be here said, that probably Moses judged very wisely of his army; that he knew well that the courage they pretended to was no more than a sudden heat; and that it would not support him through the war which was before him; and that many years discipline was really necessary to form them for greater things, than they were yet capable of, before he could hope to reduce by them so many and such warlike nations as possessed Canaan; and that therefore he assigned them forty years to fit them for it? But surely if this had been his purpose, a shorter respite might have answered his intentions; and above all things, he would never have denounced, that all the men of war, who were then the strength and flower of the camp, must be brought down to their graves before he could hope to be able to attempt what was the design of the expedition. Yet Moses, without any reserve, now declared this to them. *As truly as I live, saith the LORD, your carcasses shall fall in this wilderness; and all that were numbered of you, according to your whole number, from twenty years old and upwards—doubtless you shall not come into the land—your carcasses, they shall fall in this wilderness.*¹ Here now is a view of things for a wise general to pretend to declare to his whole army; to assure almost every man amongst them, capable of bearing arms, that he had now no hope of bringing them to any good end of all their labours; but that the only thing he could pretend to for them, was to carry them about for forty years together, from difficulty to difficulty, and bury them in the desert. God indeed might appoint them this punishment for their disobedience;² and Moses, in confidence of an Almighty support, might securely pronounce their doom to them, and the people, convinced that it was God's appointment, might submit to it; but unless we allow all this, what general would have shocked a whole army in this manner, or have suffered any attempt to have such impressions made upon them? For what could such a view of things naturally produce, but numerous tumults, mutinies, and a total defection?

⁴ Numb. xiii, 25.⁷ Ver. 6—10.⁸ Ver. 28, 29, 30, 32.⁶ Ver. 30.⁵ Ver. 41, 44.² Ibid.⁶ Ver. 31; xiv, 4.⁹ Ver. 33.

Our modern deists are indeed ready to allow Moses the character of a great and wise man; to suppose him far superior in all points of science to any of, or to all the people under his direction; and they suppose that he had given laws to the Israelites, and had formed their commonwealth with great art and address; but had had no more divine assistance towards it, than Minos, Numa, Lycurgus, or other famous legislators of the heathen world. All these were as highly thought of by their followers as Moses by his Israelites;³ and they all pretended to have been favoured with revelations from Heaven, in order to create a reverence of their establishments among their people; and some of them are recorded to have been supported with miracles in their undertakings. They were wise and learned men, and gave every appearance an artful turn, and made the ordinary course of nature seem full of miracles to persons of inferior understandings, for carrying forward their purposes among them. Quintus Curtius informs us, that Alexander the Great erected over his pavilion an artificial signal, to give notice for a decampment of his army; that it was contrived of such materials, as to be conspicuous in the day-time by a great smoke issuing from it, and in the night-time it appeared to be on fire.⁴ A modern writer insinuates that the pillar of the cloud and of fire, which directed the marches of the Israelites,⁵ was a contrivance of Moses of a like nature. Others have intimated, that it was no greater miracle than the pillar of light which conducted Thrasylbulus and his followers from Phyla.⁶ But in answer hereto let us consider,

³ Πῶς οἱ ῥασι πρώτη στρατοῦς νόμος χρησασθαι τὰ πλοῦτα καὶ βῆναι τοὺς Μινυῖ, αὐτὰ καὶ τὴ ψυχὴ μεγάλῃ, καὶ τὰ βῆναι κοινότητα τῶν μνημονευομένων προσποιούμεναι δι' αὐτοῦ τοῦ Ἑρμῆν δίδωσθαι τούτους, ὡς μεγάλων ἀγαθῶν αὐτοῖς ἐφομένους· καὶ ἄλλα παρ' Ἑλλήσι ποικίλῃ φασὶν ὡ μὴ τὴ Κρήτῃ Μινωῇ, παρὰ δὲ Λακεδαιμονίῃς διακρινόν· τοὺ μὴ παρὰ Διὸς, τοὺ δὲ παρ' Ἀπολλωνίου φασάντα τούτους ἀληθεῖς· καὶ παρ' ἑτέροις δὲ πᾶσι οὕτως παραδίδονται τούτο τὸ γένος τῆς ἐπικρατοῦς ὑπαρχῆς, καὶ πολλὰ ἀγαθῶν αὐτοῖς γινώσκον τοὺς πεισθύνοντες παρὰ μὴ γὰρ τοὺς Ἀρμαστῶν Ζαδραῶντι ἑστέροις τοὺ ἀγαθοὺς διὰ μὴν προσπεισασθαι τῆς νόμῳ αὐτῶν δίδωσι, παρὰ δὲ τοῖς οὐμαζόμενοις Γότακ Ζαμωξὴν φασάντας τῇ κατὰ Ἑστίαν, παρὰ δὲ τοὺς Ἰωάνης Μωσὴν τοῦ ἱεροῦ ἀπαλλομένου θεοῦ ὡς θεομαστῆ καὶ θεοῦ οὐλοῦ σῶσαι καὶ κρηναῖας τῇ μελλούσῃ ἀφαιρῶν ἀνέστην πλοῦτος, ὡς καὶ πρὸς τῇ ὑποχρῆν καὶ διπλῆν τῇ κατὰ λόγον τῆς νόμῳ ἀπολύσαντα τῇ οὐχῇ, μάλλον ὑπακούσαντες διαλαβόντες. Diodor. Sic. lib. i, p. 59.

⁴ Tuba, cum castra movere vellet, signum dabat: cujus sonus plerumque tumultuantium fremitu exoriente haud satis exaudiebatur. Ergo perticam, quæ undique conspici posset, supra prætorium statuit, ex qua signum eminebat pariter omnibus conspiciendum. Observabatur ignis noctu, fumus interdium. —Quint. Curt. lib. v, c. 2.

⁵ Exod. xl, 38.

I. That if Moses has recorded nothing but what was real fact, it must be undeniably evident, that the hand of God was most miraculously employed in leading the Israelites out of Egypt, in giving their law, in conducting them through the wilderness, and in bringing them into Canaan. If the miracles were wrought in the land of Egypt, and the judgments executed upon Pharaoh and his people, as Moses has related:⁷ if the Red Sea was really divided before the Israelites, and Pharaoh and his host drowned in it, as Moses has recorded:⁸ if a miraculous supply of food was given daily to the Israelites in the wilderness for forty years together:⁹ if God did indeed speak to them in an audible voice from Heaven:¹ if their laws were given as Moses informs us:² if their tabernacle was directed, and when finished, if a cloud covered the tent, and the glory of the LORD filled the tabernacle and rested upon it in a cloud by day, and in fire by night:³ if this cloud removed visibly to conduct their journeyings:⁴ if the many oppositions of the people were miraculously punished in the several manners related to us,⁵ and the miracles which are recorded were wrought to testify the divine appointments of the institutions enjoined, when the people would have varied from them:⁶ if a prophet even of another nation, corrupt in the inclination of his heart, and tempted by great offers to speak evil of this people, was by very astonishing miracles prevented from declaring any thing about them different from what Moses had represented to be the purpose of God towards them:⁷ if all these, and other things of a like nature, which might be enumerated, were really and truly done, as Moses has related; well might he call Heaven and Earth to witness for him;⁸ well might he observe, that no such things had ever been done for any nation;⁹ and we who read them must conclude, that the power of God did indeed miraculously interest itself in appointing the law and polity of this people, and in conducting them to their settlement in the promised land.

II. That the facts recorded by Moses were really done as he relates them, must be allowed by any one who considers, that Moses wrote his books in the very age in which the things he records were done, to be read by the very persons

⁶ ΑΛΛΑ ΚΑΙ ΘΡΑΣΥΒΟΥΛΟΣ ΤΙΣ ΕΠΙΣΤΟΙΛΑΣ ΑΠΟ ΘΥΛΗΣ ΚΑΤΕΓΧΟΝΤΙ ΚΑΙ ΒΕΛΟΜΕΝΩ ΛΑΒΩΝ, ΕΥΛΟΓΕΣ ΑΓΩΓΗΣ ΓΗΝΕΤΑΙ ΔΙΑ ΤΩΝ ΑΤΡΕΚΕΩΝ ΙΟΥΣΙ ΤΩ ΘΡΑΣΥΒΟΥΛΩ ΝΥΚΤΩΡ, ΑΣΘΕΝΤΙ ΚΑΙ ΔΥΣΧΑΜΩΝΙ ΤΙ ΚΑΤΑΣΤΗΜΑΤΟΣ ΓΕΓΗΝΟΤΟΣ, ΠΥΡ ΙΕΡΑΤΟ ΠΡΑΓΜΑΤΕΩΝ, ΟΠΩΣ ΑΥΤΙΣ ΑΣΤΕΙΛΕΤΑΙ ΠΡΟΤΗΜΕΨΑΙ, ΚΑΤΑ ΤΗ ΜΑΡΤΥΡΙΑ ΕΞΕΛΕΚΤΩ, ΟΘΑ ΤΟΙ Ο ΤΗΣ ΦΙΛΟΣΟΦΙΑΣ ΒΟΛΗΟΣ ΕΣΤΙ. Clem. Alexan. Stromat. lib. i, c. 24, p. 418. Edit. Oxon.

⁷ Exod. vii, viii, ix, x, xi, xii.

⁸ Chap. xvi, 35.

² Exod. ubi sup.; Deut. v, &c.

⁴ Ver. 38.

⁵ Levit. x; Numb. xvi, xvii, &c.

⁶ Deut. xxx, 19.

⁸ Chap. xiv.

¹ Chap. xix, xx; Deut. iv, 12, 33, 36.

³ Exod. xxxv; xl, 34.

⁵ Numb. xi, xii, xiv, xvi, xxi, xxv, &c.

⁷ Chap. xxiii, xxiv.

⁹ Chap. iv, 33, 34.

who had seen and known the facts to be true, which are recorded by him; that they might testify and transmit their sense of the truth of them to their posterity. Now this is a material circumstance, in which the reports we have of the heathen miracles are greatly deficient. Clemens Alexandrinus relates, that Thrasybulus led his company under the guidance of a pillar of light in the Heavens;¹ but Clemens Alexandrinus lived above six hundred years after the time of this supposed fact. Upon what authority he related it we are not told; but we find no such prodigy recorded in the best heathen writers, who, had it been fact, would surely have made mention of it. Xenophon,² Diodorus Siculus,³ Cornelius Nepos,⁴ have related this expedition of Thrasybulus; but none of them mention any such miracle assistant to him; so that we have all reason to think there was none such, but that Clemens Alexandriaus was imposed upon in the account he received of it. And this is generally true of the miracles reported in heathen history: subsequent writers, after large intervals of time, tell us things said to have been done, but without sufficient vouchers to attest the facts related by them. Whereas Moses wrote of the things in which himself had been the chief agent; and required his books to be repeatedly read, and considered over and over⁵ by the very persons who had seen and known the truth of what he wrote as clearly and fully as himself; in order to have the facts recorded by him go down and attested to be true to succeeding generations. Therefore Moses could not falsify the facts related by him, unless the generation he lived in concurred with him in a design to impose upon their descendants in all these matters; or were so over-reached and deceived by his superior skill and management, as to be made believe that they had seen and lived in a most surprising scene of things, which, all the time, were really not done in the manner they were taught to conceive and imagine. But,

III. If we consider the nature and manner of the miracles, which bear testimony to Moses's administration, it is impossible to conceive that the Israelites were deceived in them. They could never have been led on, and for so long a time, in an imaginary belief of such things as Moses had recorded, if either the things were not done, or not done as he has related them. As to the signs and prodigies which the heathen writers mention, to give a sanction to the foundation of their kingdoms, we may generally see, that these very writers, who report them, did not believe them;⁶ and that they were known artifices of their great legislators, calculated only to have weight upon the populace; but in nowise supported against

¹ Stromat. lib. i.

² Diodor. Histor. lib. xiv.

³ Deut. xxxi, 10.

⁴ Vid. Histor. Græc. lib. ii.

⁵ Cornel. Nep. in Vit. Thrasybuli.

⁶ Vid. Liv. Hist. Præfat.

the objections which a thinking person might easily find to offer to them. When Romulus died, the Roman historians tell us, that he was taken up into Heaven;⁷ but we do not find that they ever had such proofs of his assumption, as to prevent a suspicion of his being murdered, in the age when his death happened; or to cause after-ages to give full credit to what they attempted to have believed about it.⁸ In like manner, when he was created king, we are told that a divine approbation, discovering itself by an auspicious lightning, attended his inauguration;⁹ and that it was an institution appointed to be for ever observed among the Romans, that no person should be admitted to command the people, unless the gods by such sign from Heaven should confirm the election:¹ But Dionysius of Halicarnassus is, I think, the only writer, who reports that the Roman magistracies have had the countenance of such a confirmation; and he confesses that their elections in his time had fallen a great deal short of it.² For he tells us, that at their elections a public augur was to declare the expected lightning to have happened, whether any appearance of it had been seen or not;³ Plutarch seems to have thought, that all that was related about these lightnings⁴ had been fabulous. And if we consider how uncertain it is whether Dionysius had any good vouchers to support what he writes to have been the facts in those times,⁵ we shall have just reason to suppose, that the most early elections of the Roman magistrates had no more a divine sanction, than the more modern; and that what Dionysius relates about them was one of those fictions, by which the heathens endeavoured to give a lustre to their ancient institutions.⁶ In like manner when Numa was to form the religion of the Romans, he affected a rural and retired life, was much alone, and pretended to have many conversations with a deity, who instructed him in his institutions;⁷ but it is obvious, that he gave his people no

⁷ Liv. lib. i, c. 16; Dionys. Halic. Antiq. Rom. lib. ii, c. 56; Plutarch. in Romul.

⁸ Fuisse credo tum quoque aliquos, qui discerptum regem patrum manibus taciti arguerent: manavit enim hæc quoque sed perobscura fama. Liv. ubi sup. Dionys Halicar & Plutarch. in Romul. in loc. supra citat.

⁹ Dionys. Halicar. lib. ii, c. 5.

¹ Halicar. lib. ii, c. 6.

² Περαυτί δ' ο τῶν καθ' ἡμᾶς χρόνους πλεονεκτήσας αὐτὴ λατρεία, τῆς ὧν ταύτης ὡς ἡρώων. Id. b.d.

³ Τῶν δὲ παρῶν τῶν ὀρθοσκοπῶν μύθοι καὶ τὴ δημοστὴ φηρομένοι, ἀστραπὴ αὐτοῖς μάλιστα φασὶ καὶ τῶν ἀνθρώπων τῆς ὧ ἡρώων. Id. ibid.

⁴ Ταῦτα μὲν ἐν ταῖς μυθολογίαις καὶ γὰρ οὐκ ἐν τῶν τότε ἀνθρώπων ἀναμνησίαις ἀμνησίου ἀπὸ τοῦ βίου, καὶ οὐδὲν αὐτοῖς πεποισιν. Plut. in Numa, p. 70.

⁵ V.d. Liv. Hist. lib. vi, c. 1.

⁶ Datur hæc venia antiquitati, ut miscendo humana divinis, primordia urbium augustiora faciat. Liv. Præf. ad. Hist. lib. i.

⁷ Vid. Plutarch. in Numa, p. 61, 62. Omnium primum rem ad multitudinem imperitam, et illis seculis efficacissimam, deorum metum injiciendum ratus est: qui quum descendere ad animos sine aliquo commento miraculi non posset, simulat sibi cum Dea Egeria congressus nocturnos esse, ejus se monitu, quæ acceptissima Diis essent sacra instituere. Liv. Hist. l. i, c. 19.

other evidence of his having been assisted by a divine presence, than the testimony of his own saying it.⁸ And in this way we may observe of the Cretan Minos, of the Lycurgus of the Lacedæmonians, of the Arimaspiæ Zathraustes, and of the Getan Zamolxis, compared with Moses by Diodorus.⁹ They were all said to have the will of their gods revealed to them; but there is so little appearance of proof of what is thus said, that Plutarch's observation concerning them must be allowed to be true;¹ they pretended to revelations, in order to be better able to manage their people, though in truth no revelations had been made to them. But we cannot say thus of Moses; for Moses did not, after their manner, pretend to his Jews, as Diodorus expresses it,² that the god Jao gave him his laws; but he made an open appeal to the senses of all the thousands of them, whether they did not all abundantly know it to be so as well as he. *The LORD our God, said he, made a covenant with us in Horeb. The LORD made not this covenant with our fathers, but with us, even us, who are all of us here alive this day. The LORD talked with you face to face in the mount out of the midst of the fire.*³ If Moses had only told his Israelites, that their God had appeared to him in private, and given him the laws which he recommended to them; or if he had only related to them a confused account of some signs and prodigies known only to himself, and believed by them upon his reporting them; Moses and the heathen legislators might indeed be compared to one another; but the circumstances of Moses's administration are of another sort. And as they are so, to say, that Moses could make a camp of above six hundred thousand grown-up men, besides the women and children, believe they heard the voice of God out of the midst of the fire,⁴ if they did not hear it; that he could, day after day, and week after week, for about forty years together, make them all believe that he gave them bread from Heaven, calling the heads of all their families every day to such a particular method of gathering it, as must make them all intimately acquainted with all the circumstances of it;⁵ if all this time he did not really give them bread from Heaven, but only pretended it: to say, that he could in like manner, not once or twice upon an accident, but for the long space of time above mentioned, for near forty years together, upon every movement of the camp, ⁸ Vid. Plut. Liv. Dionys. Halicarn. ubi sup.

⁹ Diodor. Sic. Hist. lib. i, c. 94.

¹ Οὐδὲ γὰρ αὐτὸς λόγος ἔχει τι θαυμάσιον, ὅτι περὶ Διὸς καὶ Νυμφῶν καὶ τούτων ἄλλων ἀνδρῶν λήγουσι, ὡς δυσκλήματα καὶ δυσάρεστα πλεοναχίμων καὶ μεγάλας ἀκρίβειας τὰς πολιτικὰς καποτομίας προτείνουσιν τῇ ἀπὸ τοῦ θεοῦ δόξῃ, αὐτοὺς αἰσῶντες πρὸς ὡς σχηματίζοντο σωτηρίαν ἑσέαι. Plut. in Num. p. 62.

² Προσποινεσθαι τίς νομῆς αὐτῶν δίδοναι παρὰ τοῦ Ἰωδαίου Μωσῆ τοῦ ἱεροῦ ἀπαλλομενοῦ θεοῦ. Diodor. Sic. ubi sup.

³ Deut. v, 2—4.

⁴ Chap. iv, 11—16.

⁵ See Exod. xvi.

make the whole people believe they saw a miraculous pillar of light directing their marches, or abiding in a cloud of glory upon their tabernacle, when they were not to journey;⁶ if all the while no such thing was real, and Moses had only made some artificial beacon, of which the Israelites did not know the contrivance and composition.⁷ To say these and other things of a like nature, in order to insinuate that the miracles, which attended the Israelites in the wilderness, were like the heathen wonders, pretended only but not real, must be to say the most incredible things in the world. If Moses had been an impostor, he would never have attempted such miracles, nor have been so hardy as to venture his artifices in so open a light, and to daily examination, for so many years together, of so many hundreds of thousands of people; or if he could have been so romantic as to hazard the exposing them to so many, such unlimited and repeated trials, he must have been but a weak and rash man, and consequently come off many times detected and defeated; unless we can think that his Israelites had been a camp of the most careless and inconsiderate people, blindly devoted to receive implicitly whatever he told them they saw, without opening their eyes, or making any trial, whether the things he told them were so or not. But this cannot be pretended, for,

IV. If we look into the conduct of the Israelites, where do we find them disposed to any implicit belief of Moses? Did they not rather examine every thing he offered in the strictest manner; and endeavour indefatigably to oppose him in every part of his administration? They were but three days passed the Red Sea, before they murmured against him at Marah;⁸ and though they were here miraculously relieved by him,⁹ yet at Elim they appear to have had but little expectation, that he could lead them any farther.¹ When the manna was given, and the particular injunctions communicated for the method of gathering it; what disposition do we find in the people, either to believe what Moses had told them, or obey what he had directed? They hearkened not unto Moses, but left of the manna until the morning, and it bred worms and stank.² And on the seventh day, some of the people went out to gather manna, but they found none.³ At Re-

⁶ Exod. xl, 34—38.

⁷ A beacon of this sort is said to have been made and set up over the royal tent in Alexander's army. Quint. Curtius in loc. supra citat. And as Alexander's forces were not at most above thirty-five thousand (See Prideaux, Connect. part i, b. vii,) it is conceivable, that such a light might be a useful signal to a camp of that bigness; but the camp of the Israelites consisted of many hundreds of thousands of people, and must have extended itself over many miles of the country, whenever they pitched it; and what one artificial light could have been either formed or managed, consisting of a body of fire of a size sufficient to be seen and recognized in every quarter of so great a nation of people?

⁸ Exod. xv, 22, 24.

⁹ Ver. 20.

¹ Ver. 25.

² Ver. 27.

³ Chap. xvi, 3.

phidim, when they wanted water, they were ready to stone him;⁴ and though at Sinai the wonders, which were seen and heard there, seemed at first to have made a deep impression, yet it was not long before they were led away by their own imaginations into idolatry.⁵ They were dissatisfied at Taberah, even though the miraculous direction of the cloud had led them thither;⁶ and so mutinous at Kibroth-hattaavah, that Moses found himself unequal to the labour of bearing up against their oppressions; and begged to have a number of persons to assist him in endeavouring to promote amongst them a better temper;⁷ a work, so far from having a promising appearance, that two of the persons nominated to it would fain have declined it, had they not been encouraged by a miracle to undertake it.⁸ When the people came to Kadesh, and might have entered Canaan, how averse were they to every thing which Moses would have directed, though they had the most reasonable application in the world made to them, to induce them to hope for success in their undertaking?⁹ But afterwards, when by a most obstinate opposition they had incurred the divine displeasure; and were warned by Moses, that their attempt would surely fail, then nothing could prevent their marching to a defeat from their enemies.¹ In the rebellion of Korah, two hundred and fifty princes of the congregation were engaged;² and the defection was so obstinate, that even the miraculous destruction of Korah and all his company could not quell it; but on the morrow, the congregation appeared in a new ferment, and accused Moses and Aaron of having killed the Lord's people.³ Fourteen thousand were hereupon taken off by a pestilence, before the camp could be brought into any temper;⁴ and another most surprising miracle was wrought before they came to have a due sense of their folly.⁵ And now what opposition could the most enterprising of our modern deists have made to Moses, which his Israelites did not make to him; or what measures were omitted, that could possibly have been taken to make the utmost trial of his strength and authority, in every part of his administration? I might add to all this, we never find that Moses had any considerable human confederacy to abet and support him. In their turns, all tribes and orders of his people were hot in opposing him; and his nearest relations, his brother and sister, Aaron and Miriam, whenever they thought they had a pretence for it, were as ready as any others to withstand and condemn him;⁶ and were so positive in their contradiction to him, that nothing less than a miracle could silence them.⁷ A considerable part of his own tribe headed the fiercest mutiny that was ever raised against him; and can it be thought, after all these things, that if Moses had depended upon artifice, and measures concerted between him and some partizans, to impose upon the people, some or other of these defections would not have brought the secret into open light, and have exposed it to the whole congregation? But instead of this, throughout all his administration, we see an evident series of the clearest miracles openly performed, to give him weight amongst the people; and whenever they either would not attend to him, or conspired to oppose him, then the divine vengeance appeared in support of him, and gave the congregation no other choice, but to obey, or be consumed with dying.⁸

⁴ Exod. xvii, 4.⁵ Numb. xi, 1.⁶ Chap. xiv, 7, 9.⁷ Ver. 41.⁸ Chap. xii.⁶ Chap. xix, xx, xxiv, xxxiii; see book xi, p. 89.⁷ Ver. 14.⁸ Chap. xiv.⁹ Ver. 49.⁷ Ver. 10.⁹ Ver. 26.¹ Chap. xvi.⁵ Chap. xvii, 1—10.

V. Will it be here remarked, that Moses did not finish the writing his books, nor order the reading them, until the generation, with whom he had so much opposition, were all in their graves; that perhaps the children of these men being upon the borders of the land of promise, when Moses delivered his books to them, and warmed with hopes of seeing at last an end of all their labours, might be willing not to begin new contests to embarrass their affairs, but for peace and quiet sake even consent to let him give what account he would of what was past, though they might know that the substance of what he wrote was not transacted in the manner recorded by him? I answer; if this were true, should we not have found the Israelites, when Moses was dead and gone, not over fond of paying, and obliging their posterity for ever to pay, a most sacred regard to all that he had left in writing to be transmitted to them? The account, which Moses left of their journeyings in the wilderness, if it was not true in fact, it was a most provoking libel upon every family, except one or two, of the whole people. For how strongly does it represent to them, that their fathers had all been a stubborn and a rebellious generation; a generation that would not set their hearts aright, nor have their spirit steadfast with God.⁹ At the first entrance upon forming the Jewish polity, the name of every male of twenty years old of the whole people was taken down after their families, by the house of their fathers after their poll.¹ And this was again done almost forty years after in the plains of Moab, when all the persons, except four, whose names had been taken in the former poll, were dead;² so that Moses left them a most clear account, of whom every one of them was descended. And the keeping and filling up their genealogies was necessary in their polity, for ascertaining to each family and member of it the inheritance in the land which was severally to belong to them. Can ⁸ Numb. xvii, 12, 13.

⁹ See Exodus xxxii, 21; Numb. xiv, 28, 29; xx, 10; Deut. i, 35; ii, 14, 15, 16; Psalm lxxviii, 8.

¹ Numb. i, 2.

² Chap. xxvi.

we now think, that under these circumstances they should all agree, to a man, to have Moses record with infamy the immediate father of almost every one of them; that in after-ages, when their posterity should look back unto him who begat them, they might be told they were descended from one, who had been a rebel against their God, and was cut off for his iniquity? The children of Korah were alive when Moses delivered his books; for we have a line of this family continued down from Korah and his son to the times of Solomon.³ And is it to be supposed that this family could have suffered an account, so prodigious in all its circumstances, of the rebellion and destruction of Korah and all his company, as that which Moses has given,⁴ to go down without contradiction to all posterity, if they had not known that the whole and every circumstance of it had been undeniably true, and notorious to the whole congregation? Men are, I might almost say, born with sentiments of more honour and respect for those of whom they are descended; and it is not to be conceived that a man of such excellent temper, as Moses was of,⁵ should offer, or any nation of people receive and adhere to such an account of their ancestors as Moses gave the Israelites, if the truth of what he recorded had not been unquestionably known and confirmed to them all. When Romulus the first king of the Romans became ungracious to his people, and probably fell a sacrifice to some secret conspiracy,⁶ though the unsettled state of their infant constitution was not thought strong enough to have the real sentiments, which the senate had of him, laid open to the people, but it was reputed good policy to have an honourable account of him go down to all posterity;⁷ yet we do not find, that they took care to give an unalterable sanction to his institutions, or affected to have him thought the sole founder of their polity and religion; but rather, the more amiable prince who succeeded him, had the reputation of completing what Romulus had attempted, and of giving a fulness and perfection to every part of their constitution.⁸ Now something of this sort we should have found concerning Moses, if he had died in any disrepute with his people. But instead hereof, after he was gone, the Israelites abundantly testified of him, that his successor was not equal to him.⁹ And the generation to whom he had given his books, took the utmost care to perform every part of what he had enjoined.¹ It was known among their enemies, that his directions were the rule of all treaties;² and they themselves looked at every ³ See 1 Chronic vi, 33—38.

⁴ Numb. xvi.

⁵ Chap. xii, 3.

⁶ Vid. Liv. Hist.; Dionys. Halicarn.; Plutarch. in Romul.

⁷ Deum, Dea natum, Regem, Parentemque urbis Romanæ salvere universi Romulum jubent. Pacem precibus exposcunt, uti volens propitius suam semper sospitet progeniem. Liv. lib. i. c. 16.

⁸ Vid. Liv.; Dionys. Halicarn.; Plutarch in Numa.

⁹ Deut. xxxiv, 10.

¹ Josh. viii, 35.

² Chap. ix, 24.

event of their wars as a completion of what Moses had foretold.³ They fully ratified every thing which he had done,⁴ and paid the utmost deference to any private claims, founded upon any thing which he had said.⁵ They made all their settlements according to what he had prescribed;⁶ and observed of all their acquirements, that they had succeeded in them, according to all that he had recorded.⁷ They also warned their posterity, that, if ever they departed from doing *all that was written in the book of his law, to turn aside therefrom to the right hand or to the left,*⁸ they would surely fall under the displeasure of God, and have all those evils come upon them which he had in such case pronounced against them.⁹ Thus there appears all possible evidence, that the men, to whom Moses delivered what he wrote, were so far from having a disbelief or doubt of what he had recorded, that they took most abundant care to have; as I might say, no part of it fall to the ground. We do not find that in any one thing they added to it;¹ neither did they diminish ought from it;² not even the disadvantageous account he had given of their fathers, as is evident from the appeal of their prophets in succeeding ages to these very facts, recorded by him.³

But I might observe one thing farther respecting Moses: he must have written with a strict regard to truth indeed, when we do not find in him a partiality even to his own character. When the elder Cyrus was about to die, Xenophon represents, that he suggested to his friends the circumstances which had completed the happiness of his life. "I do not remember," says he, "that I have ever aimed at, or attempted, what I did not compass. I have seen my friends made happy by me, and I leave my country in the highest glory, which was heretofore of but little figure in Asia."⁴ How natural is this sentiment? What wise man would not wish to close his day after this manner? And is it not obvious that Moses might, with much truth, have sent his life down to posterity, adorned with many hints of this nature? For how easy had it been for him, to have observed to his people to this purpose: "I was born amongst you, when ye were slaves in the land of Egypt: I brought you forth from the house of bondage: I have for forty years supported you in the great wilderness: I have preserved you in all the heats and intestine divisions we have unhappily had amongst us: I have at last conducted you into a part of the country where you are to settle: I am now old, and cannot hope to be much longer with you: but I think my-

³ Josh. xi, 20.

⁴ Chap. xii, 6, 7; xii.

⁵ Chap. xiv, 5—15.

⁶ Chap. xx, xxi.

⁷ Chap. xxi, 44, 45; xxiii, 14, 15.

⁸ Chap. xxiii, 6.

¹ Deut. iv, 2; xii, 32; Joshua i, 7.

² See Psalm lxxviii; xov, 9, 10; Ezek xx, 10—17.

³ Vid. Xenophon. Cyropæd. lib. viii.

⁹ Ver. 13—16.

² Ibid.

self happy, and can now leave you with joy, having lived to show you, by experience, that you have your settlement in your hands: ye have seen already the success ye may have against your enemies: go on in the way I have opened to you, and ye shall soon triumph over the remainder of them." But, instead of any thing of this sort, Moses records, respecting himself and Aaron, that the Lord had said unto them, *Because ye believed me not, to sanctify me in the eyes of the children of Israel; therefore ye shall not bring this congregation into the land which I have given them.*⁵ He repeats it to them, that he had offended God,⁶ turns their eyes from himself to his successor,⁷ fully acquaints them that not he, but Joshua, was to lead them into the land;⁸ confessing, at the same time, that he had a most passionate desire to conduct their conquests; but that God would not hear him in this matter.⁹ Thus Moses, though they who came after him highly extolled him above any of his successors;¹ though from the general character, which God had given of him,² he might certainly have covered his dishonour in the one only circumstance there ever was to be the cause of it; though surely, if any man ever had whereof to glory, in the many revelations made to him, and the mighty works³ which had been done by him, he might be thought to have had so more abundantly; yet from a most sacred regard to truth, he was after all content to lay himself down numbered with the transgressors. Where now in all history can we find an instance of the like nature? A wise man would not indeed be so vain, as to wish to have a lustre given to his actions, which they will not at all bear; and yet it is natural for an honest man, if he is to be known to those who are to come after him, to wish to be seen in the best light; to desire to have the good, which may be said of him, mentioned as much to his advantage as the cause of truth can fairly admit, and as much of what may be said to his disadvantage not told, as may be admitted concerning him. This was the sentiment of the younger Pliny;⁴ and unquestionably Moses would not have treated his own character with a greater rigour, if he had not made it the great principle of his work, to write with all truth a full account of the proceedings of God's dispensations, rather than his own history.

If Moses had not had the direction of an immediate revelation, I do not think he would have left the Israelites any body of written laws; at least he would never have thought of tying them and their posterity in all ages, whatever changes and chances might happen to their affairs, to so minute and strict an observance of so various and extensive a body of laws,

⁵ Numb. xx, 12.

⁷ Deut. xxxi, 7.

¹ Chap. xxxiv, 10.

² See Numb. xii, 6—8; Deut. xxxiv, 10, 11.

⁴ Vid. Plin. Epist. lib. viii, Ep. 38.

⁶ Numb. xvii, 14, Deut. i, 37; xxxi, 2.

⁸ Ver. 14, &c.

⁹ Chap. iii, 23—27.

³ Numb. xii, 7.

without leaving them at any time a power to add or diminish from them.⁵ Lycurgus reformed the Lacedæmonian state, and pretended that himself had the direction of Apollo;⁶ but he did not venture to give his people a body of written laws for them to live by without variation.⁷ If he had, the shortness and imperfection of human wisdom would, unquestionably, in a few ages, have appeared throughout any such code, in many particulars contained in it. Of this Lycurgus seems to have been well aware; and therefore in one of his Rhetoræ recommended it to his people, not to tie themselves down to written laws at all.⁸ He thought the affairs of all states subject to such a variety of contingencies, that what could be appointed at one time, might be very improper at another; and that therefore a civil polity would be more stable, which was founded only upon general maxims, with a liberty to direct particulars, as occasion should require, than where a set of laws are composed to be inviolably maintained, minutely to prescribe and limit the incidents of political life.⁹ We read of Numa, that whilst he lived, he instructed the Pontifices in all the rites and appointments of his religion, but he was not willing to leave the twelve volumes he had written to the perusal, or for the direction of posterity, but ordered his sacred books to be buried with him.¹ Some ages after, the place where they had been buried was accidentally broken up, and the books taken out of the stone chest, in which they had been reposed; and Petilius, the then Prætor, was appointed to peruse them. But he found them so far from being likely to be of service to the public, that he made oath to the senate, that the contents of them ought not to be divulged; whereupon a public order passed to have them burned.² Philo the Jews remarks, that in all other nations, time and accidents had made many alterations of their laws absolutely necessary; that the Jewish law was the only one on Earth which was not grown obsolete in any of its branches.³ The Medes and Persians indeed affected to have the compliment, which they paid their kings,⁴ thought to be a real perfection of their laws, that they were to live for ever:⁵ but their kings, we find, had a power to make decrees,⁶ which might defeat the effect, which laws, that altered not, and could not be changed, might have ⁵ Deut. iv, 2.

⁶ Diodor. Sic. Hist. lib. i, p. 59.

⁷ Νόμος δὲ γράμματός ἐστι Λυκίῳ καὶ Ἰωνίῳ. Plutarch. in Lycurg. p. 47.

⁸ Plutarch. in Lyourg. p. 47.

⁹ Id. ibid.

¹ Id. in Numa, p. 74.

² Id. ibid.

³ Τα μὲν τῶν ἄλλων νομίματα, καὶ τὰ ἐκ τῶν λόγων, διὰ χρόνου παρασκευῆς κεραισίν, πολέμοις, καὶ τυραννίᾳ, καὶ τῶν ἄλλων ἀπειλοῦσι, καὶ νικητικῶν τύχῃς κατασκευαῖσι· πολλὰς δὲ καὶ τρυφῇ πλεονασσάσα χρόνων καὶ περιουσίας ἀφθονίας, καθύπερ νομῶν, τὰ δὲ λίαν ἀγαθὰ τῶν πολλῶν φανερὰ ὑπερβαίνειν, ἀλλὰ διὰ χρόνον ἀνυψοῦνται. ὅθεν δ' ἀντιστάσει νομῶν τὰ δὲ τότε μόνον βέλτερα, ἀσάλευτα, ἀκατάβλητα, καθάπερ σφραγίσαι εὐσεβίας αὐτῆς συστήματα, μὴτε ἀσέβους ἀφ' ἧς κηφίας ὅραται μέγιστον νυν. Philo de Vita Mosis, lib. i.

⁴ Dan. ii, 4; iii, 9.

⁵ Chap. vi, 8, 15; Esther i, 19.

⁶ See Esther viii, 8; Prideaux, Connect. part i, book v, ad An. 453.

been attended with, whenever an effect not approved of would have been the consequence of any of them. Human foresight cannot at once calculate and provide for all the changes and chances, which must happen in a course of ages to the affairs of a people. And Moses must have been a weak man, too weak to be the author of the laws he has given us, if he did not know enough of human life to cause him to consider, that how well soever he might estimate the then state and views of his people, yet he could never be sure, but that something very different from what he might form for them, might in time be very proper to become their constitution, in order to attain the political prospects which might arise. But *known unto God are all his purposes, from the beginning of the world;*⁷ and he can secure them a full effect, as he pleases, even to the end. Now, if it was indeed the purpose of God to choose, as Moses represents, the house of Jacob, to be *unto himself a peculiar people;*⁸ and to give them a law, by a punctual observance of which they were to be *kept, shut up unto the faith, which should afterwards be revealed;*⁹ we may hence open a view of things which will fully account for Moses, under the immediate direction of a revelation from God, appointing to the Israelites all his institutions, and charging them not to turn therefrom, *to the right hand or to the left;*¹ until the fulness of time should come.³

Some writers inform us that Moses was the first who ever gave written laws to a people,³ and I do not find any thing valid to contradict this opinion; though the abettors of it have made mistakes in their attempts to support it. Justin Martyr cites Diodorus Siculus in favour of it;⁴ but Diodorus evidently speaks not of Moses, but of Mneves an Egyptian;⁵ for Moses is afterwards mentioned by Diodorus in the same passage, and with such different circumstances, as abundantly show, that Diodorus thought Mneves and Moses were not one and the same person.⁶ The learned editor of Diodorus Siculus thinks the word αγραπτοις, in the text should be corrected εγγραφοις, and says, the passage is so worded in Justin Martyr's citation of it.⁷ If this were the true text of Diodorus, we might gather from him that Mneves taught his people to live by writ-

¹ Acts xv, 18.

³ Exod. xix, 5; Deut. vii, 6; xiv, 2; xxvi, 18.

² Galat. iii, 23.

¹ Deut. xviii, 15—18; John i, 45; Acts iii, 22—24; Gal. iv, 4.

² Deut. v, 32; xxviii, 14; Josh. i, 7, 8.

³ Joseph. cont. Ap. lib. ii.

⁴ In Proteptio. p. 8.

⁵ The same passage is cited by St. Cyril, contr. Julian, lib. i. Both Cyril and Justin Martyr cite Diodorus thus: Μένωνος ἀνδρα καὶ τὰ ψυχὰς μνηστῶν, &c. But Diodorus's words are: Μένωνος ἀνδρα καὶ τὰ ψυχὰς μνηστῶν. Vid. Diodor. Hist. lib. i, p. 59.

⁶ Diodorus says of Mneves, Τὸν Μένων προσηγορεύοντες αὐτὸν τοῦ Ἑβραίου διδασκῆναι τῆς τοῦ νόμου. Of Moses he says afterwards, Παρά δὲ τοῖς Ἰουδαίοις Μένων [προσηγορεύοντες τὸν νόμον αὐτοῦ διδοῦναι] τοῦ Ἰωὴ ἀπικαλεῖσθαι θέν. Diodor. ubi sup.

⁷ Vid. Rhodoman. Conjectur. in loc.

ten laws,⁸ which would hint that such laws had been in use centuries before the times of Moses; for Mneves can be no other than Menes, who was Moses's Mizraim, the first planter of Egypt.⁹ Mneves lived in the age next after the gods and heroes;¹ which was the time of Menes, or Mizraim's life.² Mneves had his laws from Hermes or Mercury,³ and Hermes or Mercury was the surname of Thoth or Thyoth, who was secretary to Mizraim or Menes.⁴ In short, Mneves or Menes may reasonably be thought to be the same name, with only a little difference in writing it. Now, if we allow this, and take Diodorus to suggest, that Mneves taught his people to use written laws, since Menes or Mizraim planted Egypt about A. M. 1772,⁵ we shall make written laws to have been in use in Egypt about seven hundred years before the time of Moses; but had they been so, we should unquestionably have found the Greeks forming their states with written laws much earlier than the times when they appear to have had their first notion of them; for the arts and sciences of Egypt found a way into Greece very early;⁶ and yet the inhabitants of this country seem to have had no knowledge of written laws until after Homer's time; for, as Josephus has remarked, we find no word in all his poems which signifies a written law; the word Νομος, having a different sense, wherever it is used by him.⁷ A due consideration of these points must suggest to us, 1. That both Cyril and Justin Martyr mistook the true meaning of Diodorus, in the passage they cite from him. They suppose him to be speaking of Moses; but he was mentioning another person, the first planter and king of Egypt. Accordingly, to accommodate his words to what they thought his intention, they interpolated his text, where he wrote Μνεσην, Mneves, they wrote Μωσην, Moses, and having made this emendation, Moses's law being a written law, forced upon them another, and induced them, where he used the word αγραπτοις, unwritten, to imagine he meant αγγραφτοις, or written, and to cite him, not as he really wrote, but as they falsely judged he had intended. Whereas, 2. Diodorus really meant to remark, that Mneves was the first person who taught the Egyptians the use of laws; but they were νομοι αγραπτοις, unwritten laws. The early kings instructed their people by verbal edicts; and Diodorus, in the passage cited, intimates, that this most ancient Egyptian legislator had formed his people in this manner, before the use of written laws was introduced into the world; and he imagines that he had feigned ⁸ Πάσαι ὅσαι πρῶτον ἀγγραφτοις νομοις χρησασθαι τα πάλαι οὖν Μνεσην.

⁹ See vol. i, b. iv, p. 129.

¹ Vol. i, b. i, p. 47.

² Vol. i, b. iv, p. 134.

³ Ibid. and vol. ii, b. viii.

⁴ Joseph. cont. Apion. l. ii, c. 15; Jos. Barnes, in v, 20; Hymn. ad Apollin.

¹ Diodor. ubi sup.

² Diodor. ubi sup.

³ Ibid. p. 129.

Mercury or Hermes to have given him* what he spake to them, in order to his words having weight among his people;⁹ that they might think a divine sentence to be in the lips of their king,¹ and that his mouth transgressed not in the judgments which he delivered to them.

There are some particulars commanded in the law of Moses, which it is evident that Moses, at the time when he enjoined them, knew might be fatal to the welfare of his people, if God did not interpose, and by an especial providence preserve them from what the obeying such commands tended evidently to bring upon them. Of this sort is the law he gave them; for all their males to appear three times in a year before the LORD;² and the command not to sow or till any of their lands, or dress their vineyards, or gather any fruit of them every seventh year;³ and if, as some of the learned calculate, the year of Jubilee was a different year from the seventh Sabbatical year,⁴ then after seven times seven years, on

* Προσηλαβίας δ' αὐτῷ τῷ Ἑρμῇ δοῦναι τὴν φωνήν. The word δοῦναι here signifies, to dictate to the mind what is to be spoken, as in Mark xiii, 11.

⁹ Πρὸς τὴν ὑποφωτιστὴν καὶ ἀναμνηστὴν τῶν αἰσθητῶν λόγων τῆς νομῆς ἀποβλέψαντα τοὺς οὐλοῦντες μάλιστ' ὑπακούοντες διαλαβόντας. Diodor. ubi sup.

¹ Prov. xvi, 10.

² Exod. xxiii, 17; xxxiv, 23.

³ Obap. xxiii, 10, 11; Levit. xxv, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7.

⁴ The learned have been much divided about the year of Jubilee, whether it was to be kept in the forty-ninth year, which taken inclusively may be called the fiftieth; or whether forty-nine years were to run out, and then the next or fiftieth year was to be the year of Jubilee. Vid. Cleric. Comment. in Levit. xxv; Petav. Rationar. Tempoz. part ii, c. 7. And we have so few, and such imperfect accounts of the practice of the Jews, in their observance of this or their Sabbatical years, that it may be difficult to offer any thing certain upon this subject. The most learned Dean Prideaux thought the text, Levit. xxv, 8—12, to be in favour of the Jubilee year's being the next to the forty-ninth or seventh Sabbatical year. Preface to vol. i, of his Connect. The words of the text are, Thou shalt number seven Sabbaths of years unto thee, seven times seven years; and the space of the seven sabbaths of years shall be unto thee forty and nine years. Then shalt thou cause the trumpet of the Jubilee to sound on the tenth day of the seventh month, in the day of atonement—And ye shall hallow the fiftieth year—A Jubilee shall that fiftieth year be unto you, ye shall not sow, neither reap that which groweth of itself in it. Levit. xxv, 8—11. We may perhaps come at the true meaning of the text, if we take it, 1. to direct the Israelites to observe, at their due intervals, seven Sabbatical years. 2 To remark that a course of seven such years, with the six years of tillage belonging to each of them, duly observed, were to make up the full amount of forty-nine years: the space of the seven sabbaths of years shall be unto thee forty and nine years; or to render the Hebrew text verbatim, the days of the seven sabbaths of years shall be unto thee forty and nine years. The meaning of which remark will appear, if we allow the text, 3. to suggest to them, that they were to begin the Jubilee year on the tenth day of the seventh month of the forty-ninth, or seventh Sabbatical year; thou shalt cause the trumpet of the Jubilee to sound on the tenth day of the seventh month. The observance of each Sabbatical year was, I imagine, to begin as soon as the sixth year's crop could be got off the ground in the beginning of the seventh year; for the harvest in Canaan fell in the first month. See and compare Joshua iii, 15, with 1. Chron. xii. 15. And when the Israelites had counted the seven times seven years, so as to be in observance of their seventh Sabbath year, then on the tenth day of the seventh month they were to begin a year of Jubilee, only remembering that they were not to reckon the Sabbath year they were then keeping to end upon commencing the Jubilee, for every fiftieth year, they were to have their lands and vineyards lie undressed and uncultivated two years together.⁵ The first of these laws obliged them to leave their cities and habitations exposed and without defence to any invaders, who might at such times make incursions upon them; for at these three times in every year all their males were to come up from all parts of the country into the place where the tabernacle was fixed, before the temple was built,⁶ and afterwards to the temple at Jerusalem. The second must, ordinarily speaking, have brought upon them many inconveniences, as it required them to lose at once a whole year's produce of all their country. And if the Jubilee year was to be kept, as is above hinted, and they were not, to sow nor reap in the fiftieth year, when the year immediately foregoing had been a Sabbath year; this, one would think, must have distressed them with the extremities of a famine.⁷ Moses had a full sense, that all these evils might attend the observance of these laws. He was well apprised that, as Canaan was an inland country, and his Israelites were to be surrounded with, and open to many foreign nations, it could never be thought agreeable to good policy, three times a year to draw all the males from the frontiers of the land; for what would this be less, than to give every enemy they had so many remarkable and well known opportunities to enter their coasts without fear of resistance, and to plunder or take possession of them as they pleased? And can it be conceived, that any state or kingdom could be long flourishing, which should be bound by law to expose itself in this manner? But against these fears Moses assured his people, that God would protect them, and sets before them God's promise: I will cast out the nations before thee, and enlarge thy borders; neither shall the seven sabbaths of years were to contain the days of forty-nine years, which they would not have amounted to, if the seventh Sabbath year was to have been thought finished on the tenth day of the seventh month, upon beginning the Jubilee. 4. As, according to this account, the year of Jubilee did not begin and end with the Sabbatical year; but commenced some months later, and extended a like space of time longer; so it was evidently not any one of the years contained in the seven Sabbaths of years, though it was in part concurrent with the last of them. Accordingly, it is properly styled in the text a fiftieth year, as not being any one of the forty-nine before-mentioned. If what has been offered may be admitted, then, 5. Though the Jubilee year began and ended some months later than a Sabbatical year, yet, as the season for seed time did not come on in Canaan before the fifteenth day of the seventh month was over (see Levit. xxiii, 39,) the Jubilee year ending as it began, on the tenth day of this seventh month, did not command a year's neglect of harvest and tillage, other than what the Sabbath-year in part concurrent with it enjoined. Only, perhaps, the year of Jubilee obliged them to defer preparing their lands some months longer than a Sabbatical year, not attended with a Jubilee, required; causing them hereby to end every forty-ninth or seventh Sabbatical year, with, as I might say, a greater solemnity.

⁵ Levit. xxv, 8—12.

⁶ Deut. xvi; 1 Sam. i, 3.

⁷ We find a sore famine in Samaria in Elijah's time, from unseasonable weather for three years together, 1 Kings xvii, xviii.

*any man desire thy land, when thou shalt go up to appear before the LORD thy God thrice in the year.*⁸ So that in obeying this command, the Israelites were three times a year to expose themselves, contrary to all rules of good policy, in confidence of a marvellous protection of God, who had promised to prevent any enemies taking advantage of their so doing. In like manner, Moses answers the objection which would be made to observing the law for the seventh or Sabbatical year. If ye shall say, says he to them in the name and words of God, *What shall we eat the seventh year? Behold, we shall not sow nor gather in our increase: then I will command my blessing upon you in the sixth year, and it shall bring forth fruit for three years;*⁹ a most extraordinary produce was promised all over the land, at all times, the year before they were to begin their neglect of harvest and tillage. Now can any one imagine that Moses could ever have thought of obliging the Israelites to such laws as these, if God had not really given a particular command about them? Or would the Israelites have been so weak as to obey such pernicious injunctions, if they had not had a sufficient evidence that the commands were of God, and that he would indeed protect them in their observance of them? Or had they been so romantic, as to have gone into an obedience to keep such institutions as these, if they had not been of God, and without an especial providence to protect and preserve them from the consequences which would naturally arise from them? would not a few years trial have brought home to them a dear bought experience of so great a folly? Their enemies would, unquestionably, have many times taken advantage of the opportunities they gave them to enter their country. And a sixth year's crop, no better than ordinary, must have perpetually convinced them the observance of the Sabbatical year was a mere idle fancy, not supported by such a blessing from God as they had been told was annexed to it. The Israelites fell indeed into a great neglect of observing their Sabbatical years some centuries before their captivity.¹ But it is remarkable, that they thought they had so little colour for this breach of their duty, from any failure of God's promise to them, that they looked upon the number of years which their land was to be desolate, when they were carried to Babylon, to be a particular judgment upon them, designed by God to answer to the number of the Sabbatical years, ⁸ Exod. xxxiv, 24.

⁹ The meaning of the expression for three years is explained by what follows, Levit. xxv, 22. And ye shall sow the eighth year, and eat yet of the old fruit until the ninth year; until the fruits come in, ye shall eat of the old store. The promise did not mean that the sixth year's produce should last the term of three complete years; but that it should suffice for the seventh year, for the eighth year, and for a part of the ninth year, namely, until the harvest, in the beginning of the ninth year, should bring in the fruits of the eighth year's tillage.

¹ Prideaux, Pref. to Connect, part i.

which they had not observed.² After the captivity, the Jews were more observant of this injunction; as we find them keeping their Sabbath years in the times of Alexander the Great; for, upon account of their not tilling their lands in those years, they petitioned him for a remission of every seventh year's tribute.³ As to the command for appearing three times in the year before the LORD, we find it practised by the Jews to their very latest times. When Cestius the Roman came against Lydda, he found no men in the city, for they were all gone to Jerusalem, to the feast of tabernacles;⁴ and afterwards, when Titus laid siege to Jerusalem, he shut up in it, as it were, the whole Jewish nation, for they were then assembled there to keep the feast of unleavened bread:⁵ Josephus, indeed, remarks, that the keeping this feast at the time when Titus came to besiege Jerusalem greatly conduced to conclude the fate of his country;⁶ but we should observe, that this did not happen until after our Saviour's time, until the Jews were given up by God, and their city and polity were to be trodden down of the Gentiles.⁷

Upon the death of Moses, A. M. 2554, at the beginning of the year, Joshua took the command of the Israelites; and when the days of mourning for Moses were over, he prepared, according to directions which God had given him, to remove the camp, and enter Canaan.⁸ But before he began to march, he sent two spies to Jericho, a city over against the camp, on the other side the river Jordan.⁹ The spies, when they came to Jericho, went to the house of a woman named Rahab, and lodged there.¹ She concealed them from the search which the king of Jericho made for them, and after three days they came back to Joshua, and reported what terror the inhabitants of Canaan² were in upon account of the Israelites. The behaviour of Rahab to the spies was indeed extraordinary, and must at first sight appear liable to objections; for upon what principle could she receive into her house the known enemies of her country, conceal them from the searchers, and dismiss them in safety, contrary to her duty to the public, and allegiance to the king of Jericho? We are told, that she professed herself to know, that the God of the Israelites was God in Heaven above, and in Earth beneath,³ and that the Lord had given them the land.⁴ But we are not informed by the writer of the book of Joshua, whether she collected these things only from having heard, what she mentioned to the spies, how the waters of the Red Sea were dried up, and the kings of the ² 2 Chron. xxxvi, 21.

³ Joseph. Antiq. lib. xi, c. 8. Thus they kept their Sabbatical years in the times of the Maccabees. 1 Macc. vi, 49, 53.

⁴ Joseph. de Bello Judiac. lib. ii, c. 19.

⁵ Id. ibid.

⁷ Luke xxi, 24.

⁹ Chap. ii, 1; Numb. xxii, 1.

² Ver. 2—24.

³ Ver. 11.

⁵ Id. lib. vi, c. 19.

⁶ Josh. i.

¹ Josh. ii, 1.

⁴ Ver. 9.

Amorites on the other side of Jordan were conquered and destroyed;⁵ or whether God had been pleased to give her any special direction to entertain the spies, in obeying which she was to save her family from ruin. However, the book of Joshua is but a short account of what the Israelites did, and of what happened to them whilst they were under the command of their leader of that name; and we may suppose, that many circumstances, attending some facts recorded in it, were perhaps registered by some other hands, and afterwards related more at large in other books which are now lost.⁶ The writer of the Epistle to the Hebrews says of Rahab, that, *By faith she perished not with them that believed not, when she had received the spies with peace.*⁷ And if we compare what she did with the actions of other persons mentioned with her by the sacred writer, as influenced by a like faith, we must judge of her, that she had received some command from God, and that she acted in obedience to it. *By faith Noah being warned of God of things not seen as yet, moved with fear,⁸ prepared an ark to the saving of his house.*⁹ He received an express revelation, that the world was to perish by water, and was instructed by God how he might save himself and family.¹ He believed what God revealed to him, made an ark in obedience to the orders which were given him, and by thus believing, and acting according to his belief, he saved himself and family from perishing. In like manner, Rahab undoubtedly was informed of God's will, by some revelation, and acted in obedience to it, or she could not have been an instance of that faith which the inspired writer treats of, in the chapter where she is mentioned. Had she proceeded upon a general report, or had she inquired and been assured, upon the best information, that the people who were about invading her country, had been wonderfully raised up and preserved by the miraculous power of God, and that they were likely to conquer and destroy all who would not submit to them; and been hence induced to think, that it would be prudent for her to ingratiate herself with them, if possibly she might thereby save herself and family from ruin; all this, I think, would not have justified her conduct, but her concealing the spies upon these motives would have been a treachery to her country, and might at last have proved a vain, as well as wicked action; for unless she certainly knew that God designed to give the Israelites possession of Jericho, his having hitherto protected them could be no argument, that they would be enabled to destroy every city which they might have a mind to attack and depopulate. But if the design of God towards the inhabitants of Canaan had been made known to the king and people of Jericho, and he and they had been sufficiently warned to save themselves from the destruction which was coming upon them, if they would not obey, but upon their refusal, if Rahab believed, and obediently acted according to what was required of her, her whole behaviour will stand clear of every imputation. Now this appears to me to have been her case; Rahab perished not with them that believed not; ² the Greek words are, not σὺν ἀπιστοῖς, with the unbelievers, but σὺν ἀπειθήσασιν, that is, with them who were disobedient.³ But how can the inhabitants of Jericho be said to have been disobedient, if God had required nothing of them? Some sufficient information both they and Rahab must particularly have had, or they could not have been condemned as disobedient, refusing to obey what they were directed to; nor could she have been an instance of one who was saved by her faith, i. e. by believing and acting according to the will of God, made known to her. The writer of the Epistle to the Hebrews suggests nothing which contradicts any fact recorded in Joshua; but by mentioning Rahab's case, it is evident, that there were some circumstances attending it, which in Joshua are not recounted. Admit these circumstances, and her behaviour is clear of every appearance of a crime, nay, it is just and commendable; and the writer of the Epistle to the Hebrews needed not to have made Rahab an instance of the faith he was treating of, if he had not sufficient grounds for what he intimates about her; especially when he had so many illustrious patterns in his mind, as not to have room particularly to treat about many of them.⁴ Thus, after all, what our modern reasoners think they have to insinuate against Rahab, as guilty of a treachery to her country, is but an unjust accusation, founded upon a partial view of the circumstances attending what she did, and the motives she had to do it.

⁵ Joshua ii, 10.⁶ Chap. x, 13.⁷ Heb. xi, 31.⁸ Ver. 7. The word is anachos.⁹ Ibid.¹ Gen. vi, 13, 14, &c.

The day after the return of the spies from Jericho, early in the morning, Joshua removed the camp to the banks of Jordan,⁵ where they halted for three days.⁶ After these three days the proper officers instructed the people how they were to pass the river, according to the directions which God had given;⁷ and on the next day the waters of Jordan were miraculously divided; so that the Israelites marched through the channel on dry ground.⁸ They were near a whole day in their march through the river, and made their passage through it on the tenth day⁹ of the first month of the year; and it is easy to adjust the particular transactions, mentioned from the beginning of the month unto this tenth day, to the several days to which they belonged. On the first day of the

² Heb. ubi sup.

⁵ Joshua iii, 1.

⁶ Ver. 16, &c.

³ 1 Pet. iii, 20.

⁶ Ver. 2.

⁹ Chap. iv, 19.

⁴ Heb. xi, 32.

⁷ Ver. 3, &c.

month Joshua sent spies to Jericho, and the king of Jericho ordered a search for them the very night they came thither.¹ Rahab, before they went to sleep, conferred with them, and let them down out of the city from the window of her house.² They hid themselves in the mountain for three days,³ and therefore came to Joshua on the evening of the fourth day. On the fifth day of the month the camp removed from Shittim to Jordan.⁴ After three days, or on the ninth day, the officers went through the host⁵ to instruct the people for going over the river, and on the morrow they were to see the wonders which the Lord designed to do among them;⁶ and accordingly, on the tenth day of the month, the waters were divided and they passed over Jordan.

*When all the people were clean passed over Jordan, God commanded Joshua to send twelve men, one out of each tribe, back to the place, where the priests who bare the ark stood in the midst of the river,⁷ and to order each man to take upon his shoulders a stone out of the river, and bring it on shore with him;⁸ and on the next day Joshua pitched these stones in Gilgal,⁹ for a monument, to perpetuate to future generations a remembrance of the waters of Jordan being miraculously divided for the Israelites marching through the river into Canaan.¹ The ninth verse of this chapter seems to intimate, that besides the twelve stones which were pitched in Gilgal, Joshua set up also twelve other stones in the midst of the river. The LXX² and the Chaldee Paraphrast took the text in this sense;³ but the Syriac⁴ and Arabic translators⁵ thought otherwise; and Josephus seems to have had no notion of any more than one monument set up on this occasion.⁶ We read of no command given to Joshua to erect any in the midst of the river; and if he really designed any thing of this nature, what would twelve stones, no bigger than such as a man could carry, have signified, if they had been laid upon one another in the channel? *When the waters of Jordan returned to their place, and flowed over all his banks, as they did before,⁷ such a monument would have been washed away by them. The Hebrew words do indeed imply, that Joshua set up twelve stones in the midst of Jordan, in the place where the feet of the priests, which bare the ark of the cove- nant, stood;⁸ but I would submit it to the judgment of the learned, whether a small mistake of ancient copyists may not be supposed to have happened in this passage; בתוך הירדן be tok ha Jarden, does indeed signify in the midst of Jordan; but if the text was originally written, not בתוך be tok, but מִתּוֹךְ mittok, the place will have quite a contrary meaning. The mistake of one single letter, the writing נ instead of כ before the word תוך tok, might happen, and escape the correction of the transcribers. And if we make this little emendation, the verse will run thus: and Joshua set up twelve stones from out of the midst of Jordan, from under the station of the feet of the priests who carried the ark;⁹ and hints only what is repeated more fully towards the close of the chapter, that Joshua set up in Gilgal those twelve stones which were taken up out of Jordan. The words which end this ninth verse, and they are there unto this day, were originally no part of the text of Joshua, but rather a remark made in some later age in a MS. of this book. We find several of these in the sacred pages,¹ which, having not been duly kept distinct, are handed down to us as if they were indeed part of the text in the places where they are added.

¹ Joshua ii, 2.² Ver. 8.³ Ver. 22.⁴ Chap. iii, 1.⁵ Ver. 2.⁶ Ver. 5.⁷ Chap. iv, 1—3.⁸ Ver. 5.⁹ Ver. 8, 20.¹ Ver. 7, 21—24.² Εἰσὶ δὲ ἰσχυροὶ καὶ ἄλλοι δώδεκα λίθοι πρὸς αὐτὰς τὰς Ἰορδάνην, &c. Versio LXX. Græc.³ Vid. Targ. Jonathan. in loc.⁴ Lapides, inquam, duodecim erexerunt, quos tulerunt e medio Jordanis desub penibus sacerdotum. Versio Syriac. in loc.⁵ The Arabic version leaves out the ninth verse.⁶ Vid. Joseph. Antiq. Jud. lib. i, c. 4.⁷ Joshua iv, 18.

Some modern writers mention the river Jordan as a stream of no very considerable breadth or depth; and from their notion, it may be thought that a miracle could not be much wanted to enable the Israelites to get over it. Sandys says, that it is "not navigably deep, nor above eight fathoms broad, nor (except by accident) heady."² But I would observe: 1. That the sacred books do constantly represent this river as not fordable, except at some particular places, made probably by art, that the countries on each side the water might have a communication. Thus the spies, who were sent by Joshua to Jericho, when pursued by the searchers, are not represented to have found any way to return to the camp but by the fords of Jordan.³ In like manner when Ehud and the Israelites had taken the fords of Jordan, not a man of the Moabites could pass the river.⁴ And thus the Gileadites entrapped the Ephraimites. They took the passages of Jordan, and then the fugitives of Ephraim, having no way to get over the river, fell into their hands.⁵ Elijah passed over Jordan with Elisha, near the place where the Israelites entered Canaan,⁶ and Elisha repassed it when Elijah was taken from ⁸ The Hebrew words of the text are, Josh. v. 9.

וַיָּשֻׁם יְהוֹשֻׁעַ אֲבָנִים חֲמִשָּׁה בְּתוֹךְ הַיַּרְדֵּן מִכַּף רִגְלֵי הַכֹּהֲנִים נֹשְׂאֵי אֲרוֹן הַבְּרִית.

⁹ If the learned reader thinks the prefix ס necessary before the word תוך, we may reasonably suppose that the copyist, having made the mistake above mentioned, here dropped this letter.

¹ See Prideaux's Connect. vol. i, book v.

² Sandys's Travels, book iii, p. 141.

³ Judges iii, 28.

⁴ 2 Kings ii, 4, 5, 7, 8, 13, 15.

⁵ Joshua ii, 2.

⁶ Chap. xii, 5.

him; but a miracle was wrought by both of them in order to their getting over,⁷ which undoubtedly they neither would have attempted, nor would God have enabled them to perform, if they could have passed over in that place without it. But, 2. We have modern testimonies sufficient to refute any one who should imagine that the river Jordan had been an inconsiderable stream, easily forded in any part of it. Sandys took his view of it at a place where, in length of time, the channel was landed up, and the flow of water nothing so great as it had been in former ages.⁸ Thevenot went to or near the place where the Israelites passed over, and describes it to be "deep, half as broad as the Seine at Paris, and very rapid;"⁹ and, according to Maundrell, the river is hereabouts "twenty yards over within its channel, deeper than a man's height, and runs with a current, that there is no swimming against it."¹⁰ But whatever be the now state of the river Jordan, how obvious is it, 3. That all the parts of our globe are liable to great alterations, and the course of rivers admit of many changes in the revolutions of ages. Jordan was a much larger river than it now is, when the Israelites came into Canaan. In Pliny's time it filled a larger channel than it now runs in;¹¹ and when Strabo wrote, vessels of burden were navigated in it.¹² But, 4. *Jordan overfloweth all his banks all the time of harvest;*¹³ and the time of harvest was in this first month, when the Israelites entered Canaan.¹⁴ Maundrell observes, that upon this flow of Jordan, the waters had anciently covered a large strand, and washed up to an outer bank about a furlong from the common channel.¹⁵ At this time there could be no passing it, and therefore the Israelites being now able to get over was very extraordinary; and it is no wonder, that when the kings of the Amorites, on the west side of Jordan, and all the kings of the Canaanites by the sea, heard how the waters were dried up from before the children of Israel, their heart melted, and there was no spirit in them;¹⁶ because, whatever might have been attempted when the river ran in its ordinary channel, the passage of the Israelites was at the time of a known and annual flood, when the waters flowed to a great height, and an attempt to get over them was, naturally speaking, impossible.

After the Israelites were over the river, Joshua encamped at Gilgal, on the east side of Jericho, where God directed him to revive the rite of circumcision;¹⁷ for the Israelites had ⁷ 2 Kings ii, 4, 5, 7, 8, 13, 15.

⁸ Sandys's Travels, p. 197.

⁹ Thevenot's Travels, p. 193.

¹⁰ Journey from Aleppo, p. 83.

¹¹ Amnis, quatenus patitur locorum situs, ambitiosus. Plin. Nat. Hist. lib. v, c. 19.

¹² Vid. Strab. Geogr. lib. xvi, p. 755.

¹³ Joshua iii, 15; 1 Chron. xii, 15; Eccclus. xxiv, 26.

¹⁴ See 1 Chron. xii, 15.

¹⁵ Maundrell's Journey from Aleppo, ubi sup.

¹⁶ Joshua v, 1.

¹⁷ Ver. 2.

circumcised none of their children who were born after the exit out of Egypt, until this time.⁹ What occasioned this neglect is not said expressly, but it is easy to guess. The covenant which the Israelites made with God in Horeb, was to do and observe all the things which the Lord should command them,¹ and they were to be strictly careful not make any thing a rite of their religion, which the Lord commanded them not.² Therefore, though God had ordered Abraham to circumcise himself and children, and to enjoin his posterity to use this rite, yet when God was giving the Israelites a new law, in the manner which he now did by the hand of Moses, I think they could not warrantably take any rite, how ancient or usual soever, as a part of it, unless God himself gave them a command for it. God indeed had given them a command for circumcision; for we find it among the laws given after the death³ of Nadab and Abihu, the sons of Aaron, who were killed by fire from the Lord, for offering incense in a manner which he commanded them not.⁴ This incident must have admonished the whole camp to be careful to obey God's voice, and not mingle their own fancies in the performance of any of his institutions; and the vengeance, which had so lately fallen upon the two sons of Aaron, seems to have given them a due caution in this matter. Though the Passover was a feast, which they were commanded to keep to the Lord throughout their generations, by an ordinance for ever;⁵ yet we see they did not attempt their second celebration of it, without an express command from God for it,⁶ nor venture to proceed in a case of doubt, which arose about the men who were defiled by the dead body of a man, but stood still, until Moses heard what the Lord would command concerning them.⁷ In like manner, as the law for circumcision required the males to be circumcised at eight days old;⁸ and was not given until within the second year of the exit, when there must have been in the camp great numbers of children uncircumcised, who were past the day of age, at which this rite was appointed to be performed, great matter of doubt must have arisen, when or how these were to be put under the law; and the Israelites not receiving directions from God how to proceed herein, was, I think, the reason that they stood still in this matter. The critics and annotators abound in assigning reasons for the omission of circumcision, in which the Israelites had lived hitherto,⁹ but I think they are not happy in assigning the true one. We find no fault imputed to the Israelites for their neglect of it; and God

⁹ Joshua v, 5, 7.

¹ Exod. xix, 8; xxiv, 3, 7; Deut. v, 27; xxvi, 17.

² See book xi, p. 165.

³ Exod. xii, 14.

⁴ Levit. xii, 3.

⁵ Levit. xii, 3.

⁶ Numb. ix, 1, 2, 3.

⁷ Vid. Pool. Synops. Critic. in loc.

⁸ Chap. x, 1.

⁹ Ver. 6, 7, 8.

now rolled away the reproach of Egypt from off them; ¹ so that the Israelites had long esteemed it a reproach to them, that they did not practise this rite; but their misfortune was, God had not yet given them orders how or when to begin it, and therefore they were forced to live in an omission of it. Some writers misunderstand the expression here made use of. A state of uncircumcision is called the reproach of Egypt; that is, say they, the Egyptians thought it a reproach to them who lived in it. It is indeed necessary to take the words in this sense, if we would infer from them, that circumcision was originally an Egyptian rite, and that the Hebrews learned from them the use of it. This is indeed a favourite point with these writers, but I have already proved that it had no foundation; ² and I would here observe, that the true meaning of the expression, the reproach of Egypt, is directly contrary to the sense which these writers would give to it. My reproach, my shame, my dishonour, ³ do all signify, not what I may have to impute to others, but what others may object to me. In like manner, reproach of Egypt, or Egyptian reproach, signifies not what the Egyptians might think a disrepute to others, but what other nations esteemed a blemish and defect in them. We find an expression of like import thus used by one of the most elegant classics. The swallow is said to be, unhappy bird,

. Cecropiz domus
Æternum opprobrium, ⁴

the everlasting reproach of the house of Cecrops, not as hinting any thing, for which the descendants of Cecrops might reproach others; but on account of facts, which were a lasting dishonour to this family. Not the Egyptians, therefore, at this time, but the Israelites, thought uncircumcision a disreputable thing, and accounted all nations profane, who did not use this institution; and the Egyptians at this time not observing this rite, this, in the esteem of the Israelites, was their reproach, was a thing opprobrious, or a disgrace to them. Therefore, when God here appointed the Israelites to be circumcised, he rolled away the reproach of Egypt from off them; he removed from them that state of uncircumcision, which they thought an infamous defect in the Egyptians. It may be here queried, whether the Egyptians could at this time be an uncircumcised nation, if, as I have formerly supposed, they received the rite of circumcision very near as early as the times of Abraham. ⁵ But I think an answer hereto is not difficult. The Pastors over-ran Egypt some time before the birth of Moses, and overturned the ancient

¹ Joshua v, 9.

² Gen. xxx, 23; 2 Sam. xiii, 13; Psal. lxix, 19.

⁴ Hor, Carm. lib. iv, ode xii.

² See vol. i, book v, p. 189.

⁵ See vol. i, book v, p. 189.

establishment in those parts which they conquered;⁶ and many points, both of the policy and religion of Egypt, were neglected by them. These Pastors were, I think, the Horites, who fled from the children of Esau out of the land of Edom.⁷ They were an uncircumcised people: and as they took all methods they could think proper, when they had got possession of the land, to oppress the ancient inhabitants, and to establish themselves, it is not likely they should pay so much regard to the institutions of the Egyptian religion, as once to think of submitting to a rite, the operation of which would for a time disable them for war, and give the Egyptians an opportunity to attack and destroy them.⁸ Here, therefore, we may suppose a neglect of circumcision introduced among the Egyptians. The Israelites were in Egypt before these Pastors invaded the land, and though they suffered great oppressions from their tyranny,⁹ yet they did not, in compliance with these their new masters, part with this rite of their religion, and it might, in their opinion, be a matter of particular reproach to the Egyptians, that they had not only fallen under the power of foreign conquerors, but in compliance to them had altered and corrupted their religion. There are two points to be remarked upon the revival of circumcision by Joshua. The one, that the Israelites must hereupon have a convincing demonstration, that all their fathers were to a man dead, against whom God had denounced, that their carcases should fall in the wilderness;¹ for upon this renewal of circumcision, none having been circumcised from the time of the exit until now,² it became evident how many of the camp had been in Egypt, and by computing the age of those who had been there, it would appear, that there were no persons then alive, except Galeb and Joshua, who were twenty years old, when the poll was taken in the year after the exit.³ The other point is, that as the Israelites were now in an enemy's country, in the neighbourhood of a powerful and populous city, and could not be secure any one day, that the Canaanites might not attempt to march against them; if God had not required it, Joshua could never have thought this a proper time to disable⁴ any part of the camp by circumcising them, and therefore that he most certainly had a command from God for what he did in this matter.

On the fourteenth day of the month at even, the Israelites kept the Passover in the plains of Jericho,⁵ and on the fifteenth day, they began the feast of unleavened bread,⁶ according to ⁶ Vol. ii. book vii, p. 153, ad fin. 5, in Just.

⁷ Vol. ii, book vii, p. 155.

⁸ The Shechemites were destroyed by the sons of Jacob, when they were sore, after having been circumcised. Gen. xxxiv, 25.

⁹ Vol. ii, book vii, p. 156.

¹ Numb. xiv.

² Joshua v, 5.

³ Numb. xxvi, 64, 65.

⁴ See Gen. xxxiv, 25.

⁵ Joshua v, 10.

⁶ Ver. 11.

the orders they had received for keeping it.⁷ As it was now wheat harvest in the land of Canaan, they reaped of the corn, which was ripe in the fields, and made their unleavened cakes with it,⁸ and God having now brought them into the country where provisions were plentiful, the miraculous food, which he had hitherto given them, ceased; for on the sixteenth day, and from thence forwards, there fell no manna.⁹ The commentators suggest a difficulty in determining what produce of the land the Israelites made use of. They remark, that the sheaf of the first fruits of the harvest was to be waved before the Lord, and a day set apart for the waving it, and performing the offerings which were to attend it, before it was lawful to eat of the fruits of the ground,¹ and the Israelites not having performed this injunction, they contend that they used in their feast of unleavened bread, not of the corn then growing and ripe in the fields, but rather of corn of a former year's produce.² Our translators favour this opinion, and render the place, They did eat of the old corn of the land: and Drusus and Bonfrerius thought they could conjecture, how a sufficient supply of such old corn might be had for them.³ Drusus imagines, that they found corn dealers to buy it of; Bonfrerius, that they seized upon stores of corn laid up by the Canaanites. But, 1. It seems far more reasonable to imagine, that the Israelites reaped the crop, which the fields before them afforded, than that they should either find stores sufficient in the plains of Jericho, or merchants, who either could or would produce enough for the occasions of such a numerous hostile army. 2. It does not appear, that the observance of the wave-sheaf offering, was to commence immediately upon their entrance into the land. I rather think they began this performance upon the first harvest from their own tillage; which seems to have been Josephus's opinion, for, 3. He expressly asserts, that the Israelites had reaped and used the crop they found ripe and standing in the fields of Canaan.⁴ 4. None of the ancient versions favour what our translators hint, that the Israelites used here the old corn of the land. Nor, 5. do the words of Joshua at all suggest it. It is indeed a common remark of the critics, that the Hebrew word מנביר menabur, here used, being derived from the verb, nabar, to pass, must necessarily signify the crop, not of the present, but of the past year; but as this word occurs, I think, nowhere in the Bible, but in the passage before us, it is not so easy to be certain of its signification. The verb nabar not only signifies to pass, but in the conjugation pihel, to cause to be big

⁷ See Levit. xxiii, 6.

⁸ Joshua v, 11.

⁹ Ver. 12.

¹ Levit. xxiii, 10.

² Vid. Pool. Synops. in loc.

³ Ibid.

⁴ Josephus's words are: Και την θυσιαν ωρταζον εν αλωτοις το χωρον, παρτα, αν αυτοις προτερον συνβηαι σπανιζον, τότε ραδως αποκριτας, του τε γαρ σπουδαισιν αμαρτοτα ηδη καταταλαιν εδωκεν. Antiq. lib. v, cap. iv.

with young. It is thus used in the book of Job;⁵ and by a metaphor authorized by Tully⁶ in a Latin word of this signification, [nibber] may express to cause the Earth to be impregnated or loaden with corn, and menabur may be a noun derived from the participle of this conjugation, and signify the burden or crop upon the ground; and the suggestion of the Israelites using old corn of a year's growth, will thus appear to have no foundation in the Hebrew text at all.

Upon the Israelites encamping on the plains of Jericho, the inhabitants of that city shut up their gates, and kept close within their walls.⁷ The cities of the Canaanites were encompassed with walls so high, as to be said to be fenced up to Heaven;⁸ and men had not yet invented proper engines of war for the assaulting such towns, so as to get possession of them. We shall find, ages after these times, cities impregnable to the greatest armies, by the strength and height of their walls. The city of Troy could never have been taken by the Greeks without a stratagem, and Joshua was obliged to invent an artifice, in order to gain entrance into Ai.⁹ The men of Jericho, having shut up their city, might reasonably think themselves secure from the Israelites; and Joshua and his army could have no hopes of reducing them, except by starving them into a surrender, unless they could allure them to make sallies, and thereby get an opportunity of beating back their forces to the city, and entering with them. But here the LORD appeared unto Joshua, in the form of a man, with a drawn sword in his hand.¹ The person, who now appeared, called himself the prince, or leader, or captain of the host of the LORD,² a very proper appellation for that divine person, who had frequently appeared unto Abraham, Isaac, Jacob, and Moses; for the LORD of Hosts is his name,³ is one of his titles. That the person, who at this time appeared to Joshua, was not an angel, but this God of Israel, seems evident from the worship which Joshua paid him,⁴ and from his requiring the same regard to be had to his presence, as he before demanded from Moses, when he called himself the God of Abraham, the God of Isaac, and the God of Jacob.⁵ Accordingly, Joshua gives him the incommunicable⁶ name of God, calling him JEHOVAH, in his relation of what he said to him.⁷ He told Joshua, that he had given Jericho into his hand, and the king thereof, and the mighty men of valour;⁸ he instructed ⁵ Job xxi, 10.

⁶ Tully thus uses the word gravidata. He says, Quod si ea, quæ a terra stirpibus continentur, arte naturæ vivunt et vigent; profecto ipsa terra eadem vi continetur et arte naturæ, quippe quæ, gravidata seminibus, omnia pariat, et fundat ex sese. De Nat. Deorum, lib. ii, c. 33.

⁷ Joshua vi, 1.

⁸ Deut. ix, 1.

⁹ Joshua viii.

¹ Chap. v, 13.

² Ver. 14.

³ See Jer. x. 16.

⁴ Joshua v, 14.

⁵ Ibid, 15; Exod. iii, 5, 6.

⁶ See vol. ii, book ix; Isaiah xiii, 8.

⁷ Joshua vi, 2.

⁸ Ibid.

him what he required of the Israelites, to express their reliance on his promise.⁹ When they had for seven days marched round Jericho in the manner which the Lord had directed, the walls of Jericho, without any assault, fell down flat upon the ground; then they entered the town and sacked it, and put all the inhabitants, man, woman, and child, to the sword, except Rahab and her family, and destroyed all the cattle, and burnt the city; only the silver and gold, and the vessels of brass and iron, they reserved, according to the directions which had been given them.¹ Joshua then pronounced that man to be accursed, who should ever attempt to rebuild Jericho, and prophesied, that he should *lay the foundation thereof in the first-born, and in its youngest son set up its gates.*² This prophecy was remarkably fulfilled above five hundred years after in the days of Ahab; for in his days Hiel the Bethelite built Jericho, and his eldest son Abiram died, when he laid the foundation, and his youngest son Segub died at his setting up the gates.³ The taking of Jericho was much noised throughout all the country,⁴ and the Israelites prepared to attack Ai, a neighbouring city, but the detachments appointed for this service were entirely routed.⁵ Whereupon Joshua and the elders of Israel consulted God, and were informed, that a transgression had been committed in the sacking of Jericho, for which they suffered this punishment;⁶ and upon inquiry, Achan the son of Carmi, of the tribe of Judah, was found to be the transgressor, and he and his family were condemned to death, and his substance burned in the valley of Achor. After this exemplary punishment of Achan's transgression, the Israelites soon took Ai, and destroyed all the inhabitants of it, and took the cattle and spoil of the city for a prey unto themselves, according to the word of the Lord, which he commanded Joshua.⁷

Moses had enjoined, that when they should have passed over Jordan, they should set up on Mount Ebal great stones, and plaster them with plaster, and write the law upon them;⁸ and they were to build an altar there unto the Lord their God, and to offer burnt-offerings and peace-offerings, and to celebrate a feast unto the Lord.⁹ They were also to divide the people, and to place six of the tribes on Gerizim, a mountain opposite to Ebal, and six on Mount Ebal; and then the Levites from Mount Ebal were to read, with a loud voice, the curses set down by Moses for the transgressions of the law,¹ unto each of which the people were to answer Amen.² Then the blessings promised to the observance of the law were to be pronounced from Mount Gerizim;³ and hereby

⁹ Joshua vi, 3, 4, 5.⁶ 1 Kings xvii, 34.⁶ Ver. 6—11.⁶ Deut. xxvii, 2, 3, 4.² Ver. 14, &c.¹ Ver. 16—25.⁴ Joshua vi, 27.⁷ Joshua vii, 11—26; viii, 1—29.⁹ Ver. 5, 6, 7.³ Chap. xxviii.² Ver. 26.⁵ Chap. vii, 5.¹ Ver. 12, 13.

the Israelites were to acknowledge their covenant with the Lord their God, and their obligation to keep his commandments.⁴ Joshua being now come to the place where these two mountains were situate, took care to have every part of what God had commanded herein punctually performed.⁵

It may not seem at first sight easy to determine, what it was that Joshua here wrote upon the stones, which he set up on Mount Ebal. The Samaritans, indeed, if what they assert might be admitted, determine the question very clearly; for in their Pentateuch, in the xxth chapter of Exodus, after the tenth commandment, they add these with other words; And it shall be when the Lord thy God shall cause thee to enter the land of the Canaanites, which thou goest unto, to possess it, that thou shalt set up great stones, and shalt plaster them with plaster, and shalt write upon the stones all the words of this law, &c. According to this account, the command for what was here to be done, was originally given in an audible voice by God himself, from Mount Sinai to all the people; and what Moses directed about it afterwards, must be understood with reference, and agreeably to what God himself here first commanded about it. Accordingly, the command here given being, that the Israelites should write upon the stones all the words of this law, namely, of the law just then published (for there had then been no other as yet given,) it will follow, that the Decalogue, or Ten Commandments, was what they were to inscribe upon the stones to be erected. This would unquestionably be the fact, if what the Samaritans here insert in their Pentateuch ought to be admitted; but that it ought not is most evident; for Moses himself expressly testifies, that when God spake the Ten Commandments out of the midst of the fire⁶ from Mount Sinai unto the assembly of the Israelites, he spake only the Ten Commandments, and added no more; and consequently, all that the Samaritans add here is a manifest interpolation. And it is a known imputation, which the Jews have ever charged them with, that they have tampered with this place, as well as changed the names of the two mountains, Ebal and Gerizim, putting Gerizim where Moses wrote Ebal, and Ebal where Moses wrote Gerizim,⁷ in order to procure such a veneration to Mount Gerizim, as might favour their choosing it in opposition to the Jews for their place of worship. Thus we have no information from the Samaritan Pentateuch, about what Joshua inscribed, or was directed to inscribe, upon the stones set up on Mount Ebal. The Jewish writers abound in fictions upon this point; some of whom say, that Joshua inscribed the whole five books of Moses; nay, they add, that he did it seventy times over, in seventy different languages,

⁴ Deut. xxvii, 9, 10.

⁵ Deut. v, 22.

⁶ Josh. viii, 30—35.

⁷ See Prideaux's Connect. part i, b. vi.

in order to leave such monuments as might instruct all the nations upon Earth in the law, and that in their own tongue. Thus these writers were so far from seeing any difficulty in the query, which to others has seemed considerable; namely, whether Joshua could find either stones to contain, or had time enough to inscribe so large a transcript, as a copy of the whole five books of Moses, that they show evidently, that nothing can be so marvellous but their imagination can surmount it. If seven hundred, or seven thousand, had been as favourite a number with them as seventy, they would have had no scruple of multiplying the copies up to their humour. But seventy being the number of the elders of Israel chosen by Moses, and appointed by God to assist in the government of his people,⁸ they hence imagined that there were originally, from the dispersion of mankind, but seventy nations, and seventy different languages in the world; though considering that Moses and the high-priest, joined with the seventy, made two more, they should have made seventy-two their darling number, as it was afterwards, when Aristæus's fiction about the Septuagint translation of the Hebrew Scriptures obtained amongst them.⁹ Moses with the elders of Israel commanded the people, saying, keep all the commandments which I command you this day; and it shall be on the day, when ye shall pass over Jordan . . . , that thou shalt set thee up great stones, and plaster them with plaster, and thou shalt write upon them all the words of this law— This was the command which Moses gave about what they were to do at Mount Ebal; and I have often thought, that all the words of this law might be the words of the law which he at that time gave them; namely, the words which Moses has set down in the xxviith and xxviiith chapters of Deuteronomy, beginning at the 15th verse of the xxviith chapter, cursed be the man, and so on to the end of the xxviiith chapter. That this was what Joshua wrote, and consequently what Moses had enjoined to be written, seems evident to me from the account we have of Joshua's performance¹ of this commandment. Joshua built an altar unto the LORD God of Israel, in Mount Ebal . . . an altar of whole stones . . . , and he wrote there, upon the stones, in the presence² of the people (mishnah torath Moseh,) i. e. a copy of the law of Moses, certainly not a copy of all the statutes of the Jewish law; for the stones of the altar could not be sufficient to contain such a large body of institutions: rather he wrote the several curses and bless-

⁸ Numbers xi.

⁹ See Prideaux's Connect. part ii, book i.

¹ The Hebrew text is,

¹ Josh. viii, 30—32.

וַיִּכְתֹּב יְהוֹשֻׁעַ עַל-הַאֲבָנִים אֶת-כָּל-דִּבְרֵי תּוֹרַת מֹשֶׁה אֲשֶׁר-לִפְנֵי בְנֵי יִשְׂרָאֵל

i. e. And he wrote these upon the stones a copy of the law of Moses, which he (i. e. Joshua) wrote (we should say in English, and he wrote it) before the faces (in the presence) of the children of Israel.

ings which Moses had charged to be here pronounced to the people.³ This appears to have been the fact from the 34th verse. Joshua, after he had written the law, read what he had written, all the words of the law: and what he read was only, the blessings and cursings, according to all that is written in the book of the law;⁴ so that he transcribed only the several blessings and curses which Moses had recorded; these he copied out from the book of the law, and wrote upon the stones mishneh, a copy or duplicate of them. As to the opinion of some writers, that Joshua might perhaps inscribe, not indeed all the law of Moses, but an abstract or compendium of it (the heads or titles say others,) the account we have of what Joshua wrote does not favour any such conjectures. He copied from the book of the law the several blessings and cursings, which were here to be pronounced. The transcript of these is said to be a copy of the law of Moses; and so it was, as far as the particular case in which they were here concerned obliged them to take a copy of it.

The success of the Israelites against Jericho and Ai alarmed the neighbouring nations of Canaan, and caused them to form a confederate army for their common safety;⁵ but the Gibeonites, who were a people of the Hivites,⁶ declined the association, and sent ambassadors to Joshua, and by a stratagem obtained a league with Israel.⁷ Joshua and the elders of Israel appear to have treated unadvisedly with this people, for they asked not counsel about them at the mouth of the Lord.⁸ And it may be questioned whether the treaty with them was not directly contrary to what God had commanded; for with some particular nations, of one of which these Gibeonites were a people,⁹ God had strictly commanded them, to smite them, and utterly destroy them, and make no covenant with them, nor show mercy unto them.¹ In like manner there are doubts to be raised concerning the Israelites' performance of what they had promised. When they came unto the cities of this people, they smote them not, because of the princes of the congregation had sworn unto them by the Lord God of Israel.² They apprehended that they might not touch them, because of the oath which they had sworn unto them;³ and yet one would think, that they did not truly keep the public faith which they had given; for though they did indeed let the Gibeonites live, yet they did not perform this promise in the public sense in which they seem to have treated with this people. They took from them the very being of a nation; reduced them to a state of servitude, which a brave and valiant people would probably have died a thousand ³ Deut. xxvii, 11, &c.

⁵ Chap. ix, 1, 2.

⁷ Ver. 4—15.

⁸ Exod. xxxiv, 12, &c.

² Josh. ix, 18.

⁴ Josh. viii, 34.

⁶ Chap. xi, 19.

⁸ Ver. 14.

¹ Deut. vii, 2.

³ Ver. 20.

deaths rather than have submitted to.⁴ These and other reflections, which naturally arise from what the book of Joshua offers us upon this affair, would induce us to inquire, whether the Israelites were absolutely commanded utterly to destroy all the inhabitants of the seven nations of Canaan; whether they could upon no terms enter into a league with any of them; whether what the Israelites granted to the Gibeonites upon their embassy, was contrary to what God had commanded; and how they at last acquitted themselves of the league they had made with them.

I. Were the Israelites absolutely commanded to destroy all the inhabitants of the nations, whose lands God had given them for an inheritance? I answer, no. The direction to the Israelites was this: *when thou comest nigh unto a city to fight against it, then proclaim peace unto it: and it shall be, if it make thee an answer of peace, and open to thee, then it shall be that all the people that is found therein, shall be tributaries unto thee, and shall serve thee.*⁵ Thus the Israelites were to behave unto all cities; unto the cities of the Hittites, of the Amorites, of the Canaanites, of the Perizzites, of the Hivites, of the Jebusites, and of the Gargashites;⁶ as well as unto the cities of other nations, as is intimated from what follows. *If, says Moses, it will make no peace with thee, but will make war against thee, then thou shalt besiege it; and when the LORD thy God hath delivered it into thy hands, thou shalt smite every male thereof with the edge of the sword. But the women and the little ones, and the cattle, and all that is in the city, even all the spoil thereof, thou shalt take unto thyself—Thus shalt thou do unto all the cities which are very far off from thee, which are not of the cities of these nations. But of the cities of these people, which the LORD thy God doth give thee for an inheritance, thou shalt save alive nothing that breatheth. But thou shalt utterly destroy them, namely, the Hittites, and the Amorites, the Canaanites, and the Perizzites, the Hivites, and the Jebusites, as the LORD thy God hath commanded thee.*⁷ In these verses Moses directs the Israelites ⁴ Libertatem (says Caius Manlius in Sallust. lib. de bello Catilinar.) quam nemo bonus nisi cum vita simul amittit.

⁵ Deut. xx. 10, 11.

⁶ Trinus (says Rabbi Samuel Ben Nachman) præmisit Josua epistolas in terram Israeliticam, seu potius litteris tria proposuit; qui fugam mallent, aufugerent; qui pacem in fœdus venirent; qui bellum, arma susciperent. Unde Girgeszi credentes in Deum O. M. aufugerunt, in Africam se conferentes—Gibeonitz in fœdus veniebant, adeoque terræ Israeliticæ incolæ manebant, reges triginta ac unus bellum susceperunt, et ceciderat. Gem. Hierosolym., vid. Selden de Jure Nat. et Gentium, juxta disciplin. Hebræor. lib. vi, c. 13, p. 736.

⁷ Deut. xx. 12—17. Our present Hebrew copies seem to have omitted the Gargashites, who were one of the seven nations that were to be destroyed; see Deut. vii. The Samaritan text supplies this defect in this place, and gives us the seven nations in this order, the Canaanites, and the Amorites, and the Hittites, and the Gargashites, and the Perizzites, and the Hivites, and the Jebusites.

how they were to behave towards the cities of their enemies, which should attempt to hold out against them. And they were ordered to use a severity towards the nations of the land of their inheritance, if they refused peace, greater than towards the cities of other nations for the like obstinacy; which there had been no room to enjoin, if these nations were to have been utterly destroyed, without any offers of peace to be made to them. But the Israelites were to proclaim peace to all the cities of their enemies, and whatever city accepted the offer, the inhabitants of it were to become their servants. But if the peace thus offered was refused, then, if the city which rejected it was not one of the land of their inheritance, the Israelites, as soon as they had reduced it, were to put all the men to the sword, and to spare the women and little ones and cattle, and to take the spoil. Or, if it was a city of the land of their inheritance which had rejected their offers, then, as soon as they could reduce it, they were utterly to destroy all the inhabitants, and to save alive nothing that breathed belonging to it. That this is indeed the true meaning of what Moses directs is confirmed from a remark of Joshua, who observes, that as God had purposed utterly to destroy the nations of Canaan,² so he did not dispose any of them to accept of peace from the Israelites, in order to their preservation. *There was not, says he, a city that made peace with the children of Israel, save the Hivites the inhabitants of Gibeon; all other they took in battle, for it was of the LORD,³ to harden their hearts,¹ that they should come against Israel in battle, that he might destroy them utterly, and that they might have no favour, but that he might destroy them, as the LORD commanded Moses.*² Cunnæus comments upon this text very justly to this purpose: "It is plain;" says he, "from hence, that these nations were therefore extirpated, because they chose rather the chance of war, than to accept the terms which the Israelites could offer them. But, if they would have surrendered when summoned, undoubtedly they had not been destroyed."³

There is a passage in the book of Deuteronomy, which may seem to intimate that these nations of Canaan were absolutely to be destroyed by the Israelites, without any terms

² See Wisdom xii, 3.

³ I cannot but observe how closely the reflection of Joshua here is copied by Homer. In all the evils that came upon the Greeks from the difference between Achilles and Agamemnon, Homer says, Διὸς δ' ὀρέσαστο βουλὴ II. i.

¹ I have formerly observed in the case of Pharaoh, what is the true meaning of the Scripture expression, of the LORD's hardening any one's heart. See vol. ii, book ix.

² Joshua xi, 19, 20.

³ Enimvero illud hi po efficitur, deletas propterea eas Gentes esse, quia belli fortunam tentare, quam conficere pacem in Israelitarum leges maluerunt. Quod si fecialibus auscultassent, utique jam salus eorum nequiquam in dubio fuisset. Cunnæus de Repub. Hebræor. lib. ii, c. 20.

of favour or mercy. *When the LORD thy God, says Moses, shall bring thee into the land, whither thou goest to possess it, and hath cast out many nations before thee, the Hittites and the Girgashites, and the Amorites, and the Canaanites, and the Perizzites, and the Hivites, and the Jebusites, seven nations greater and mightier than thou. And when the LORD thy God shall deliver them before thee, thou shalt smite them and utterly destroy them, thou shalt make no covenant with them, nor show mercy unto them But, thus shall ye deal with them: Ye shall destroy their altars, and break down their images, and burn their graven images with fire And thou shalt consume all the people which the LORD thy God shall deliver thee, thine eye shall have no pity upon them.*⁴ I would observe upon this text, that it is a direction to the Israelites, what they were to do to these nations, after they had attacked them and subdued them; but it gave them no charge to destroy any people who should choose to submit and surrender, without engaging in a war against them. The directions given in this text were to be executed, when the LORD had brought the Israelites into the lands of these nations,⁵ and had cast out the inhabitants before them.⁶ When the LORD had given the people of these nations into the hands of the Israelites,⁷ and had discomfited them, and caused them to flee;⁸ then indeed the Israelites were to have no pity upon them, but to smite and utterly destroy them, to consume and make an end of them.⁹ This vengeance the Israelites had in charge to execute upon all these nations, after they had entered into a war with them, and obtained a conquest over them. But nothing in the text intimates that they were to have proceeded with this severity against any nation which chose to surrender, before they had tried the issue of war, and determined their fate by it. If any of them had not come out against the Israelites in battle,¹ but had delivered up their cities upon summons,² before the LORD had defeated and discomfited them, they might have had terms to save their lives.³ But let us inquire what terms the Israelites could give them, and whether,

II. They could make a covenant or enter into a league with ⁴ Deut. vii, 1, 2, 5, 16, &c.

⁵ Ver. 1.

⁶ Ibid.

⁷ Ver. 2.

⁸ None of the translators of the Bible have, I think, carefully attended to the Hebrew text in rendering the words in the 2d verse, which we translate, Thou shalt smite them. The Hebrew word is מַחֲרִיב, which I take to be not in the second person מַחֲרִיב, but the third person of the preterit hiphil of the verb חָרַב; and that the LORD thy God going before, is the nominative case to it. I imagine that the word מַחֲרִיב should be referred to this verb, and would render the place thus: And when the LORD thy God shall have given them up, and smote them before thee, thou shalt utterly destroy them, &c.

⁹ Deut. vii, 2.

¹ According to Joshua xi, 19, 20.

² Deut. xx, 10, 11.

³ Ibid, et Josh. ubi sup.

them. Now this point may be clearly determined, if we consider distinctly the several injunctions laid upon them. And here, 1. They were evidently commanded not to tolerate the worship of the idols of Canaan, in any part of the land. Where-soever they could carry their victorious arms, they were to take care not to bow down to the gods of these nations, but were *utterly to overthrow them, to break down their images,*⁴ *to destroy their altars, and cut down their groves;*⁵ or, as it is expressed in another place, they were utterly to destroy all the places wherein these nations had served their gods, upon the high mountains, and upon the hills, and under every green tree. They were to *overthrow their altars, break their pillars, burn their groves with fire, hew down the graven images of their gods, and destroy the names of them out of the place.*⁶ Thus they were entirely to abolish the religion which was embraced in these nations; and it is hard to be imagined, that they could make a league with any of their states, whilst they were so doing. For, as a league between two nations implies, in the very notion of it, their having upon some terms given their mutual faith to each other, to observe punctually what had been stipulated between them; and as such public faith was, according to the custom of these times, generally given and taken at a public sacrifice, where the parties to the treaty sware solemnly to each other by their respective gods;⁷ so it is hard to say how the Israelites, who were in nowise to allow the idols of Canaan to be gods, could take this public faith from the worshippers of them. And this, I think, is hinted in the command given them. *Thou shalt make no covenant with them and their gods.*⁸ According to the forms of these times, a covenant could hardly be made with a people, without admitting their gods into it, to be their witnesses, and avengers of those who should break it. But the Israelites could not so far recognize the false objects of the worship of these nations, and therefore could not thus enter into covenant with them. But, 2. The Israelites were not only to demolish and destroy the idols of Canaan, but were to take away from the people both their place and nation. All the lands and cities of the several nations which inhabited Canaan, were to be divided by lot among the tribes of the children of Israel, to every family of each tribe a suitable part and portion of them;⁹ and in order hereto the Israelites were, as God should enable them, to dis-

⁴ Exod. xxiii, 24.

⁵ Chap. xxiv, 13.

⁶ Deut. xii, 2, 3.

⁷ See and compare Genesis xxvi, 28—31, with xxxi, 44—55; and in this manner the heathen nations made truces and leagues with one another, as might be proved from many places in Homer and other ancient writers.

⁸ Exod. xxiii, 32. Our English version of the text is injudicious, and not strictly agreeable to the Hebrew particle. One thing only is here forbidden, the making or confirming a league with them, for the doing of which it was necessary to proceed according to the religious rites used for that purpose.

⁹ See Numb. xxxiii, 50, and xxvi, 1—53.

possess the inhabitants, and take possession of them. God had indeed determined not to drive out all the Canaanites before the Israelites in one year, immediately upon the Israelites entering into their land, because such a procedure would have had its inconveniences.¹ But the Israelites were, as they increased, to be enabled by little and little to subdue them,² and were strictly commanded, as they grew able, to take from them their possessions, and not suffer any of them to retain wherewith to live as a people among them.³ From the xxth of Deuteronomy, it may, perhaps, at first sight seem as if the Israelites had power, when they summoned the cities of these nations, if they had an answer of peace from them, to let the inhabitants hold their cities upon condition of paying tribute for them,⁴ but the text, duly considered, gave no such liberty. If a city opened unto them, then it was to be, that all the people who were found therein, were to be tributaries, and to serve them.⁵ It is not said, that the Israelites were to put such cities under tribute, which would have been the expression, if they were to have treated them as political bodies, and to have continued them in that capacity, only raising a tax or tribute upon them;⁶ but all the people found therein were to be tributaries and servants. The terms to be given were, not to a city or people in their collective capacity, but to the individuals, to the several persons who had composed it; and they were to become tributaries and servants, in the manner that Solomon afterwards dealt with their children in some particular cities, where he found them.⁷ He made them pay tribute,⁸ or, as it is otherwise expressed in the book of Kings, he levied a tribute of bond service upon them,⁹ the nature of which is sufficiently explained by what follows. *Of the children of Israel did Solomon make no bondmen, but they were his men of war, and his servants, and his princes, and his captains, and bare rule over the people, that wrought in the work;*¹ consequently, those tributaries, who paid him the tribute of bond-service, were, under the direction of these Israelites, obliged to perform the work and service which was required of them. Now that this was the true intent of the direction to the Israelites, in the text above cited,² is evident from what appears to have been the failure, when afterwards they did not execute what had been given in charge to them. Thus, after the death of Joshua, the children of Benjamin did not drive out the Jebusites from Jerusalem;² the children of Manasseh did not dispossess the inhabitants of Beth-shean, and several other towns, of their respective cities.⁴ Ephraim was faulty in like manner, with regard to the Canaanites of Gezer,⁵ Zebulon to the inhabitants of Kitron and Nahalol,⁶ Asher and Naphtali to several other cities;⁷ though in all these cases, as the several tribes grew strong enough, they reduced these communities so far, as to compel them to pay tribute for their possessions.⁸ But because herein they came to terms with them, contrary to what God had commanded, to make no league with them;⁹ therefore what Joshua had before threatened¹ was now denounced against them, that God would not drive these nations out from before them, but that they should be as thorns in their sides, and their gods a snare unto them.² This, I think, is a true representation of what the Israelites were enjoined, with regard to the treatment which the inhabitants of these nations were to have from them; and from all this, I think, it evidently appears, that the Israelites could enter into no alliance, could make no league,³ no covenant with them. They had indeed liberty to give them quarter, and grant them their lives, upon condition they would become their servants; but this, I think, cannot properly be called making a league, covenant, or alliance with them; for a league is one thing, and servitude quite another.⁴ The word league is indeed used in a large sense by the Civilians. The Romans admitted that it signified a grant of any favours to conquered nations;⁵ and Diodorus Siculus uses a word of like import, where a conqueror had reduced the persons he had subdued to accept such terms as he thought fit to give them.⁶ In like manner the men of Jabesh-Gilead were offered a league with the Ammonite, by which they were to submit to serve him, and to have all their right eyes thrust out, in order to be made a reproach to all Israel.⁷ And in both these cases, as the people treated with were to be continued a people, what was granted might ² Judges i, 21.⁴ Ver. 27.⁵ Ver. 29.⁶ Ver. 30.⁷ Ver. 32, 33.⁸ Judges i, 30, 33, 35.⁹ Exod. xxiii, 32; Deut. vii, 2.¹ Josh. xxiii, 13.² Judges ii, 2.³ Exod. and Deut. ubi sup.

¹ Exod. xxiii, 29.² Ver. 30.³ Exod. xxxiii, 33; Deut. vii, 22, 23; Josh. xxiii, 5, 7, 11, 12, 13.⁴ Deut. xx, 11.⁵ Id. *ibid.*⁶ When Pharaoh Necho, after the death of Josiah, sent for Jehoahaz, whom the people had made king at Jerusalem, and sent him prisoner to Egypt, and set up Jehoikim king in his stead; as he did not take away from the Jews their being a people, though he raised a tax or tribute upon them, so it is not said, that all the people became tributaries unto him and served him, but that he put the land to a tribute. 2 Kings xxiii, 32.⁷ 2 Chron. viii, 7, 8.⁸ *ibid.*⁹ 1 Kings ix, 21.¹ Ver. 22, 23.² Deut. xx, 11.

⁴ Dediti non proprie in fœdere, sed in ditione esse dicuntur, unde illud Latinorum de Campanis apud Livium; Campanorum aliam conditionem esse, qui non fœdere, sed per ditionem in fidem venissent. Item de Apulis, ita in societatem eos esse acceptos, ut non æquo fœdere, sed ut in ditione populi Romani essent. Vid. Calvin. Lexic. Jurid. in verbo Fœdus.

⁵ Esse autem tria genera fœderum; unum, cum bello victis dicerentur leges: ubi enim omnia ei, qui armis plus potest, dedita essent, quæ ex iis habere victos, quibus mulctari eos velit, ipsius jus atque arbitrium esse. Livii Hist. lib. xxxiv, c. 57.

⁶ Ταυταμοι και τις μετ' αυτη καταπληξαμος, και σπονδας οικς εδωκετο ειναι παρασημασματος εδωκε χαρηαι και πολλη η παροικηση. Diodor. Sic. Ecl. p. 839, edit. Rhodoman.

⁷ 1 Sam. xi, 2.

be styled a league or covenant made with them. But the Israelites were not to suffer the nations of Canaan any longer to have a being: their cities, country, and possessions, were to be taken from them, and their persons to become the property of the new possessors of their lands and estates. And under these circumstances, whatever favour each Canaanite might meet with in his private capacity, from the several Israelites into whose hands he might fall, yet no league or covenant could be lawfully concluded with any nation or community of them, because the Israelites were not at liberty to permit any such body politic of them to remain in being, to receive and enjoy what by such league might be granted to them. Let us now inquire,

III. Whether the league concluded between Israel and the Gibeonites was contrary to what God had enjoined: and I think it certainly was; for unquestionably the peace and the league made by Joshua with this people was of a public nature. It was confirmed to their ambassadors, who appeared to treat no otherwise than in their public character; as agents not stipulating to save the lives of a few or of any number of private men, but as negotiating for the public, for the health and safety of the community which employed them. Now to take occasion from the words which tell us the nature of the league, which Joshua made with this people, to say, that he had only promised to let them live,^a and consequently that the Israelites had fully performed what they had engaged, inasmuch as they did not put the men, women, and children of Gibeon and its cities to the sword, would be, I think, a lower quibble than the Romans were guilty of to the Carthaginians, when having granted by a public decree of the senate, that Carthage should be a free state, enjoy its own laws, and possess its domains in Africa, if they immediately delivered hostages, and performed what the consuls had in charge to require of them,^b they explained to them, that they thought the people, not the city, was the state of Carthage,^c and demanded of them to raze their city, and build themselves another in a situation higher up in their country.^d The Israelites were undoubtedly obliged by their treaty to stop the war, when they came to the cities of Gibeon; they had disarmed themselves, and were not at liberty to touch or to smite this people, because of the oath they had sworn unto them. And

^a Josh. ix, 15.

^b Εἰς τὰς ἐπὶ ταῖς τριακοσίαις τῆς ἀνδραγαθίας οὐκ ἀνδρῶν ἀλλὰ παρασχῶσι. καὶ τ' ἄλλα κατακτείνουσι αὐτοὺς, ἔτι Καρχηδόνα ἀνδραγαθίᾳ καὶ αὐτοῖσιν, καὶ γὰρ οὐκ ἔχουσιν ἢ Λιβύη. Appian. de Bello Punic, p. 43.

^c Καρχηδόνα γὰρ ἡμᾶς, ἢ τὸ ἔθνος, ὑπελάμβανον. Id. p. 52. In voce, liberam relinquit Carthaginem, manifesta erat captio: frustra vocem Carthaginis urgebant Romani, dicentes civium multitudinem, non urbem significari. Grot. de Jure Belli et Pac. lib. ii, c. 16, sec. 15.

^d Εἰσὶν τῆς Καρχηδόνης ἡμῶν, καὶ ἀποκτείνουσι οὐκ ἀνδρῶν, τῆς πόλεως, οὐδὲν ἄλλα συνδύει ἀπὸ θαλάσσης εἰσὶν γὰρ ἡμῶν ἡ πόλις κατασκευασμένη. Appian. p. 46.

as the saving alive the inhabitants, but demolishing or taking from them their cities and inheritance, would have been not keeping, but evading the public league, which was made with this nation; so in this the Israelites had unadvisedly brought themselves into a great strait, having solemnly granted what they could not perform, without a manifest neglect and violation of what God had in the strictest manner required of them. It will,

IV. Be asked, how then did the Israelites acquit themselves in this matter? To this, I think, the answer is obvious: they remonstrated to the Gibeonites the fraud of which they had been guilty, to obtain the treaty; and proposed as an expedient, upon what terms they could give them their lives. The Gibeonites consented to accept the offer made to them, and their consenting hereto was what set the Israelites free from the embarrassments they were under in this matter. Joshua said unto the Gibeonites, *Wherefore have ye beguiled us, saying, we are far from you, when ye dwell among us?*³ The Israelites had fully explained to this people, that they should be under difficulties in making a league with them, if they dwelt among them;⁴ and therefore Joshua had the highest reason to resent and expostulate the inexcusable baseness of their behaviour in the treaty. However, as the Israelites had power to receive any of these nations, if the people of them would become their bondsmen to serve them;⁵ upon these terms Joshua made them an offer of their lives.⁶ The Gibeonites embraced the proposal which he made to them; acknowledged that they expected that all their lands must be taken from them, and that they aimed at nothing more, in what they had done, than barely to save their lives,⁷ and that they entirely acquiesced in his disposal of them in any manner which he could contrive.⁸ Accordingly, upon this second treaty or accommodation, *Joshua made them hewers of wood and drawers of water for the congregation, and for the altar.*⁹ Had the Gibeonites been unwilling to comply with what was thus proposed to them, I imagine that Joshua would have brought their cause before the Lord,¹ and would have asked the special direction of God, before he and the elders of Israel would have thought themselves at liberty to proceed in it. Two things may be observed upon the manner of finishing this affair. 1. Joshua did not dissipate this people by allotting them to be servants to the families of the Israelites. He kept them together, as much a nation as he had power to allow them to be, a public body of servants for the occasions of the congregation. 2. He seems to have punished their perfidy, by appointing them and their posterity to a per-

³ Josh. ix, 22.

⁴ Josh. ix, 23.

⁵ Ver. 26, 27.

⁶ Ver. 7.

⁷ Ver. 24.

⁸ See Numb. xxvii, 5; ix, 8.

⁹ Vid. quæ sup.

¹⁰ Ver. 25.

petual bondage. This, I think, he expressed to them, when he said, *Now therefore ye are accursed, and there shall none of you be freed from being bondmen.*² Had the Gibeonites treated openly and uprightly with the Israelites, I suppose, there was nothing in the law to prevent their being received upon such terms, as that, after some generations, their children might have come into the congregation, and been free in Israel.³

When the Canaanites heard that the inhabitants of Gibeon were gone over to the Israelites, they were uneasy at it. Such a defection from their common cause gave them new fears, for Gibeon was a large and powerful city.⁴ However, they resolved to take measures to deter other towns from following this example, and to defeat Joshua of the additional strength which the Gibeonites might be to him. For this end they immediately marched their forces, under the command of five of their kings, against the Gibeonites,⁵ who sent unto Gilgal to Joshua, for succour.⁶ Joshua with his army soon came to their relief, and obtained an entire victory over the five kings, took them all prisoners, and put them to death.⁷ Two very great miracles attended the battle, fought this day between the Canaanites and the Israelites. One, that God was pleased by a storm of hailstones to kill more of the enemy⁸ than fell by the sword of the Israelites; the other, that at the word of Joshua, the Sun and Moon were seen to stand still, for near a whole day, to afford the Israelites a continuance of day-light⁹ to pursue their victory. It is obvious how remarkably pertinent both these miracles were to the circumstances of the persons concerned in them. The elements, and the Sun, Moon and lights of Heaven, were the deities at this time worshipped by the inhabitants of Canaan;¹ but the Israelites were the servants of a truer God, by whose command, and under whose protection, they were to war against these nations and against their gods. Now what greater demonstration could be given of the power of their God to support them, or of the inability of the false deities of the Canaanites to assist their worshippers, than to see, that the God of Israel could cause these to contribute to, instead of preventing, the ruin which was coming upon those who served them? We cannot imagine, that Joshua should, without a special intimation from Heaven, have addressed unto God the prayer, concerning the Sun and Moon, which he is recorded to have made in the sight of Israel;² for of what an extravagance had he appeared guilty, as if an effect had not been given to what he asked for? or how could he be so wild as to think of an accomplishment of so strange an expectation as this would have been, had it been only a thought of his own heart to wish for it? But unquestionably the same LORD, who spake unto him before the battle, who bade him not fear the armies of the Canaanites, who assured him that they should not be able to stand before him, directed him to ask for this wonderful miracle, and in granting what he had asked for, gave a full testimony, both to the Israelites and their enemies, that the gods of the heathen were but idols, and that it is the LORD that made, and that ruleth in the heavens.³ But there are some farther observations, that ought to be made upon this extraordinary miracle; for,

² Josh. ix, 23.³ Ver. 3, 4, 5.⁴ Ver. 11.⁵ See vol. i, b. v, p. 195.⁶ See Deut xxiii.⁷ Ver. 6.⁸ Ver. 13.⁹ Josh. x, 1, 2.¹ Ver. 7.² Josh. x, 12.

It is remarkable, that what Joshua desired, and what was said to be done upon this occasion, is recorded in the sacred history in words not agreeable to what are now abundantly known to be the motions of the bodies, that compose the mundane system; Joshua desired that the Sun might stand still upon Gibeon, and the Moon in the valley of Ajalon;⁴ and the event said to be the effect of this his prayer unto the LORD,⁵ is thus related, and the Sun stood still, and the Moon stayed, until the people had avenged themselves upon their enemies. So the Sun stood still in the midst of Heaven, and hasted not to go down about a whole day;⁶ and there was no day like that before it or after it. The thing, which Joshua here prayed for, was to have the day lengthened, and the manner in which he desired to have this his prayer accomplished was by having the Sun and Moon stopped in their motions; and agreeably to his request the text tells us, that the Sun and Moon were stopped, and did not move forward for about a whole day. But it is now sufficiently known, that day and night are not caused by any motion of the Sun and Moon, but rather by the Earth's rotation upon its own axis; and consequently the sacred pages state this fact absolutely wrong, as to the circumstances which caused it; and if so, can we think they were dictated by God, who cannot err in this, or in any matter? I answer, 1. Though the succession of day and night is indeed caused by a real motion of the Earth; and not of the Sun and Moon, as our modern astronomers can abundantly demonstrate, yet to appearance, not the Earth, but the Sun and Moon seem to have those motions which are vulgarly ascribed to them, as to a mariner at sea, sailing within view of a distant coast, not the ship he sails in, but the land he sees at a distance, seems to be in motion, as he passes by it. 2. In the early ages, both before and long after the days of Joshua, the most learned astronomers had no notion of the improvements which our modern professors have since attained to, but conceived that the Sun and Moon had their respective courses, according to what common ap-

³ Psalms xcvi, 5.

⁶ Ibid.

⁴ Joshua x, 12.

⁶ Ver. 13.

pearance enabled them to judge and think of them, and agreeably hereto they formed their schemes, and thought themselves able to solve and account for all appearances by them. Consequently, 3. Had God enabled Joshua to form his desire of the longer day in a manner more agreeable to our new and more accurate astronomy, and dictated to him to record the miracle in terms suitable and agreeable to it, Joshua must have appeared both to have wished a thing, and expressed it to have been effected, in a manner directly contrary to all rules of science then known; and his account of what had happened would have been decried, in the times when he lived, as false in astronomy, and no great regard would have been paid to it. It would have appeared rather a wild fancy, or gross blunder of his own, than a true account of a real miracle, and so have been but little attended to by the persons for whom, and in the ages which succeeded that in which it was written. 4. We do not read in the sacred text, that God declared that the Sun and Moon stood still upon this occasion. We may suppose that God might intimate to Joshua that he would grant him a miraculous prolongation of the day, if he would, at the head of his army, ask publicly for it; hereupon Joshua made his request in such terms, as, according to his own conceptions, were proper to be used to ask such a miracle. "May the Sun," said he, "stand still upon Gibeon, and the Moon in the valley of Ajalon." This he thought must have been caused, if such a length of day as he was ordered to require was to be given to him. God heard his request, and gave him the thing he was to ask for, a day of near twice the length of any other. The historians of the times recorded the fact according to what it appeared to be to them, and agreeably to what was then thought to be true astronomy; and accordingly, the Sun and Moon appearing, and being thought for several hours together, not to have moved forward in their courses, both the author of the book of Jasher,⁷ afterwards, and Joshua now in his history, relate to us, that the Sun stood still, and the Moon stayed—and hasted not to go down about a whole day. And, 5. We may reasonably suppose, that though Joshua wrote his history under the direction of a divine assistance, yet that God would not interpose to prevent his recording this fact in this manner. For, though all Scripture is given by inspiration of God, yet certainly it is given no farther than is necessary to make it *profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for correction, and for instruction in righteousness.*⁸ Now the narration of Joshua might fully answer this great end of Scripture, might teach the Israelites the power of their God, to direct and govern the Heavens as he pleased, might reprove the idolaters of their vain worship of the Sun and Moon, whom they fondly called the king and queen of Heaven,¹ notwithstanding that it did not relate the fact exactly according to what might be the true astronomical manner in which God effected it. The most judicious writers have agreed, that "the sacred historians were not usually inspired with the things themselves, which they related, nor with the very words by which they express what they have recorded."² Their histories were written, not to satisfy our curiosity, but to be a standing proof of a providence to after-ages; to show us the care which God always takes of good people, and the punishments he inflicts upon the wicked, to give us examples of piety and virtue, and, lastly, to inform us of matters of fact which tend to confirm our faith.³ And so far God was unquestionably pleased to direct and assist the composers of them, as to prevent their inserting in any of their narrations, through human frailty, any thing which might contradict or disserve those purposes for which he incited them to draw up their compositions. Thus far Joshua appears in every part of his history to have had the benefit of a divine inspiration, though we have no reason to suppose that God dictated to him the very words he was to write, or prompted him to record the miracle we are treating of, otherwise than his own natural conceptions disposed him to relate it, and that, probably, amongst others, for this great reason: if God had inspired him to relate this fact in a manner more agreeable to true astronomy, unless he had also inspired the world with a like astronomy to receive it, it would rather have tended to raise amongst those, who read and heard of it, disputes and oppositions of science falsely so called, than have promoted the great ends of religion intended by it.

⁷ Joshua x. 12.⁸ Ver. 13.⁹ 2 Timothy iii, 16.

It may be asked, if the miracle recorded by Joshua was indeed fact, and one day was hereby made as long as two,⁴ could so remarkable a thing have happened without being observed by the astronomers of all nations? Such a variation of the Sun's setting, as was hereby occasioned in the land of Canaan, must have made a longer day or a longer night than was natural in every other part of the habitable world: a longer day, wherever the Sun was visible at the time of Joshua's making his request, and a longer night in every part of the opposite hemisphere. Astronomy was studied in these times with great application in many nations;⁵ and observations of the Heavens were taken and recorded with as much exactness as the professors of that science were capable of attaining; and it is probable, that if so remarkable an alteration of the course

¹ See vol. i, b. v, p. 193; Jer. vii, 18; xlv, 17—25.

² Lowth's Vindicat. of the Divine Authority and Inspiration of the Old and New Testament, p. 220.

³ Ibid. p. 221; Five Letters concerning the Inspiration of the Holy Scriptures, p. 28.

⁴ Eccles. xlv, 4.

⁵ See vol. i, b. v, p. 192; vol. ii, b. vi, p. 76; b. viii, p. 162.

of day and night, as this was, had really happened, we should not find some hint or remain of some heathen writer to concur with, and bear testimony to the truth of what the sacred historian relates about it? But in answer hereto let us observe, 1. That it is highly improbable, I might say, morally impossible, that Joshua should attempt to record such a miracle as this, if it had not been done, for every one of his Israelites, as well as all their enemies, must have known and rejected the falsity of his narration; and he could never think of making the world believe a thing so conspicuously false, if it had not happened. 2. This fact might be recorded not only by Joshua, and afterwards in the book of Jasher,⁶ but also by divers other writers of other nations, and yet what they had registered about it may easily be conceived not to have come down to us. The most ancient heathen chronicles were very short and concise, and in a few ages were disfigured by mythology and false learning,⁷ so as to go down to succeeding times in a shape and sense quite different from what was at first the design of them. And the original accounts hereby becoming not suitable to the taste which succeeded, were soon neglected, and in time lost. But, 3. If we could unravel the ancient fables, we should find, that the fact of there having been one day in which the course of the Sun had been irregular, had been indeed conveyed down in the memoirs of the heathen literature. Statius had heard of it, and supposed that it happened about the time of the Theban war, when Atreus made an inhuman banquet of Thyestes's children.⁸ Other writers supposed that it had been in the days of Phaeton; and Ovid has beautified the fable told of him, that it was he who occasioned it, by having obtained leave to guide the chariot of the Sun for that day, which he was in nowise able to manage. Thus the heathen poets and mythologists dressed up and disfigured the hints which they found in ancient records. Atreus was father of Agamemnon, and lived but a generation before the Trojan war; therefore the Sun's standing still in the days of Joshua could not have happened in his time; so that Statius, or any writer from whom he took the hint, were not true in their chronology. But Phaeton lived much earlier: he was son of Tithonus,⁹ who was the son of Cephalus,¹ the son of Mercury,² who was born of Maia the daughter of Atlas.³ Atlas lived about A. M. 2385; his daughter Maia might have Mercury by Jupiter about A. M. 2441, about the twentieth

⁶ Joshua x, 13.

⁷ See vol. ii, book viii. Θατα εν α μυθολογισιν—δη των προσημειων μυθικων, και μηδεν αποδαι ταυτων λεγασθαι γεγραπτος εστι και παρρησιαστικον. Plut. de Isid. et Osirid.

⁸ Stat. in Thebaid. lib. i, ver. 325; lib. iv, ver. 307.

⁹ Apollodor. lib. iii, c. 13.

¹ Id. lib. eod, c. 10.

² Ibid.

³ Ibid.

⁴ See vol. ii, book viii, p. 181.

year of Jupiter's age.⁵ Mercury at twenty-five years old might beget Cephalus, about A. M. 2466. Cephalus at thirty begat Tithonus, A. M. 2496. Tithonus at thirty-four begat Phaeton, who would thus be born about A. M. 2530. The Sun stood still in the days of Joshua⁶ A. M. 2554. Phaeton was then about twenty-four years old, a young man, not of age to guide the chariot of the Sun. Thus the time of Phaeton's life may synchronize with the year of the Sun's standing still in the days of Joshua, and the fable told of him might have its first rise from a fact recorded to have happened in his youth, dressed up and diversified with the various fictions of succeeding mythologists, until it was brought to what Ovid left it. But, 4. If we go into China, we may there find something more truly historical, relating to the fact before us. The Chinese Records report, that in the reign of their emperor Yao the Sun did not set for ten days together, and that they feared the world would be set on fire.⁷ Yao, according to Martinus, was the seventh emperor of China, Fohi being the first. And, as he computes, from the first year of Fohi's reign to Yao's, are five hundred and eighty-seven years; for Fohi reigned one hundred and fifteen years,⁸ after him Xinnun one hundred and forty,⁹ Hoang-ti one hundred,¹ Xao-haon eighty-four,² Chuen-hio seventy-eight,³ Cou seventy,⁴ and next to him succeeded Yao.⁵ The first year of Fohi's reign in China was A. M. 1891;⁶ from hence count down five hundred and eighty-seven years, and the first year of Yao will be A. M. 2479. Yao reigned ninety years,⁷ to A. M. 2569. The year in which the Sun stood still, in the days of Joshua, was A. M. 2554, in about the seventy-fifth year of Yao's reign. Thus, what is recorded in the Chinese annals synchronizes with the fact related in Joshua. The Chinese records are said to report, that the Sun did not set for ten days; but I suspect our European writers have not here exactly hit the meaning of the Chinese annals, and that the word they have translated days may perhaps rather signify a space of time little more than one of our hours. If so, the sacred historian and the Chinese annalist agree minutely in their ⁵ Jupiter was born A. M. 2421. See book x, p. 66.

⁶ Clemens Alexandrinus supposes that Phaeton lived about the times of Crotopus; Stromat. lib. i, p. 138: and so does Tatian. Orat. ad Græc. p. 133. Crotopus was the eighth king of Argos. Castor. Euseb. Chron. Crotopus, I think, died about A. M. 2525; so that Clemens Alexand. and Tatian seem to place Phaeton about thirty years earlier than Joshua's commanding the Israelites: but thirty years is no great variation in the chronology of these times.

⁷ Per hæc tempora diebus decem non occidere solem, orbemque conflagratum mortales timuisse scribunt. Martinii Histor. Sinic. lib. i, p. 37.

⁸ Id. page 21.

⁹ Id. 32.

¹ Id. 36.

² Martin. ubi sup.

³ Id. 24.

⁴ Id. 33.

⁵ See vol. ii, b. vi, p. 79.

⁶ Id. 25.

⁷ Id. 35.

time of the duration of this miracle.⁸ If the Sun's not setting at this time was thus observed in China, we may guess about what time of day Joshua desired this miracle; and we may be sure it was not towards the evening, as some writers have supposed;⁹ for had the day been almost over in Canaan, the Sun would have been set in China before the miracle happened, and therefore could not have been there observed at all.¹ It was therefore a little before noon in Canaan when Joshua desired the Sun might be stopped, and about this time the Sun might be seen by Joshua, in such a position as to seem to stand over Gibeon,² or as it is expressed in the next verse, in the midst of Heaven,³ and it would be afternoon in China at this time of day in Canaan. If the Chinese saw and observed this miracle, then the light of day, with which the Israelites were favoured, was occasioned by the Sun's really not going down as usual, and not from a vapour or Aurora shining in the air, as Le Clerc and some others have supposed.⁴ For such a vapour would not have been seen from Canaan to China, and could not possibly have appeared near the time of Sun-set in both countries; nor would it have occasioned the heat which was felt in divers parts of the world, during the time of the miracle. The Chinese annals intimate, that it was feared the Earth would have been set on fire. The mythologists relate, that a conflagration had really happened; and Ovid paints a poetical scene of it, as his fancy prompted him;⁵ and unquestionably the continuance of the Sun in one position in the Heavens, for about ten hours together, must affect with a very intense heat, even places not under his meridian height all that time. The Israelites would probably have been greatly incommoded with the warmth of such a day, if God had not been pleased to give a temperature to the air, proper to relieve them, and perhaps suitable to the producing that prodigious hail, which he caused at this time to afflict the Canaanites.⁶ I am sensible, that such a suspension or retardation of the motion of the Earth, Moon, and perhaps of the other heavenly bodies, which have relation to them, as is necessary to cause this miracle in the manner I suppose it to have been effected, may be calculated to be naturally productive of consequences fatal to our system. But then I think it is easy to answer in this matter, that if we have sufficient reason to induce us to believe, that God really wrought this miracle, it is not hard to conceive, that the ⁸ Josh. x, 13. The Sun hasted not to go down about a whole day. One day was as long as two, Ecclus. xlii, 4, i. e. the Sun was stopped about ten or twelve hours, the space of about a natural day.

⁹ Cleric. Comment. in loc.

¹ Geographers know that the day begins and ends four or five hours earlier in China than in Canaan.

² Joshua x, 12.

³ Ver. 13.

⁴ Comment. in lib. Jos. in loc.

⁵ Ovid. Metam.

⁶ Josh. x, 11.

great Ruler of the universe is not only able to direct, beyond what we can imagine, but also as abundantly able so to uphold, all things by the word of his power,⁷ during the time of it, as to have no other effect follow than what he proposed to have done in the world. One design of the mighty works, which God was pleased to perform before his chosen people, was, if men would have paid a due attention and regard to them, to produce a reasonable conviction, that the Earth is filled with the glory and knowledge of the Lord.⁸ What they might have *known of God, even his eternal power and godhead, he had at divers times, and in various manners, before showed unto them by the things which he had done*⁹ from the creation of the world.¹ But as these things had, prior to this age, lost their influence in almost all nations, and the world was departed from the living God, to go after the Sun, Moon, and Stars, to serve them, what could have been done more remarkably worthy of God's infinite power, to show himself to be a God above all gods, than to have the Sun and Moon made to stand still in favour of his declared will, to support a people chosen to be distinguished by his worship? The time of day in Canaan when this miracle happened was such, that the sight of it must go forth through all the then known nations of the Earth, so that there could be no speech nor language,² where, had a due inquiry been made into it, the voice of it would not have been heard, powerfully proclaiming, that however the world had been falsely amused with the beauty, or astonished at the imagined power of the lights of Heaven,³ yet that there was a Being who ruleth in the Heavens, higher than them all, and who could over-rule and dispose of any of them as he pleased.

After the defeat of the army of the five kings, Joshua reduced the nations of the south parts of Canaan, and having broken every opposition which could here make head against him; he marched his victorious forces back to Gilgal.⁴

Upon Joshua's return to Gilgal, Jabin king of Hazor, a city of great figure and command in the north parts of Canaan,⁵ sent unto the kings of the nations round about him, and proposed to unite their forces, in order to act with their whole strength against the Israelites.⁶ These kings agreed to his proposal, made their levies, and came together a numerous and well-appointed army.⁷ They rendezvoused at the waters of Merom.⁸ Joshua, on the other hand, led the Israelites against them, under a special promise of God's assistance and protection,⁹ and gave them battle, and obtained a great victory.¹ After having given them this defeat, he turned back, ⁷ Heb. i, 3.

¹ Rom. i, 19, 20,

⁴ Joshua x, 28—43.

⁷ Ver. 4.

¹ Ver. 7, 8, 9.

⁸ Numb, xiv, 21.

² Psalm xix, 4.

⁵ Chap. xi, 10.

⁶ Ver. 5.

⁹ Τοις πασι.

³ Wisdom xiii, 3, 4.

⁸ Ver. 1, 2, 3.

⁹ Ver. 6.

took the city Hazor, and burned it to the ground.² From Hazor Joshua marched against the cities of the other kings, and in time became master of all this country,³ but it was the work of some years for him to reduce these nations.⁴ In about five years he entirely subdued them,⁵ and having now triumphed over, in all, one and thirty kings,⁶ and obtained for the Israelites full room to settle their families in all parts of the land, he was ordered to put an end to the war.⁷ Caleb, the son of Jephunneh, was forty years old when Moses sent him as one of the spies into the land of Canaan;⁸ the spies were sent into Canaan after the tabernacle was erected, in the second year of the exit,⁹ A. M. 2514. Caleb was now at the finishing of the war eighty-five;¹ so that the war was finished A. M. 2559, I suppose towards the end of the year. Joshua passed over Jordan on the tenth day of the first² month A. M. 2554, and began the war by the siege of Jericho a few days after. From this time to about the end of the year 2559 are near six years, and so long was Joshua engaged in his wars against the Canaanites. Almost one year was employed in his first campaign in the south parts of Canaan,³ the other five were spent against the king of Hazor and his confederates.⁴

Upon giving over the war, Joshua was directed by God to apply himself to divide the land of Canaan among the Israelites.⁵ Moses, before he died, had fixed the inheritance of two tribes and a half tribe on the other side Jordan.⁶ There remained nine tribes and a half to be now settled.⁷ And unto these Joshua and Eleazar the priest, and the heads of the tribes, were preparing to set out their inheritance. But before they began to make a division of the land, the children of Judah came to them, and Caleb, who was of this tribe, represented that Moses had made him a solemn promise, which might determine the place of his particular inheritance.⁸ When the spies were sent by Moses into Canaan, they went to Hebron, where Ahiman, Sheshai, and Talmai, the children of Anak were,⁹ and at their return they took occasion, from the largeness of the stature of these men, to fill the camp with fears, that the Israelites would never be able to make their way into the country:¹ but Caleb endeavoured to animate the people with better hopes;² whereupon, when God pronounced against the congregation, that the men who had seen his miracles and glory should not come into the land, but should die in the wilderness,³ he was pleased to promise, that Caleb should be brought (el ha aretz, asher ba shammah) into the land, to the very place he went to,⁴ and that his seed should possess it.⁵ Now Hebron was the particular place where they went, and from whence they brought home the fears which had so disturbed the camp,⁶ for faithfully endeavouring to quell which, Caleb had this particular promise made to him;⁷ and upon this account Caleb argued, that this was the place, at which God had promised that he should be settled, adding withal, that though the very men were then in possession of it, who had so terrified his companions, yet that he should not at all doubt, but be enabled to eject them.⁸ Joshua admitted the plea of Caleb, and appointed his inheritance at Hebron;⁹ and then allotted the tribe of Judah the country from Hebron to Kadesh-barnea, as described in the xvth chapter of the book of Joshua. Next after Judah, the children of Joseph were allotted their inheritance;¹ and we have in the xvth and xviith chapters of Joshua a particular account of the boundaries of the lands assigned to them; namely, to the tribe of Ephraim, and to the half tribe of Manasseh, which was to inherit on this side Jordan.² The families of this tribe and half tribe were settled on the north side of the country, wherein the camp of the Israelites, which was formed at Gilgal, rested, as the tribe of Judah was settled on the south of it; so that the camp was, as it were, secured on either side from any sudden irruption; and having proceeded thus far, the whole congregation assembled at Shiloh, within the confines of the tribe of Ephraim,³ and there set up the tabernacle.⁴

¹ Josh. xi, 10, 11.² Joseph. Antiq. lib. v. c. 1.³ Chap. xiv. 7.⁴ Chap. iv, 19.⁵ Chap. xi.⁶ Ver. 8, 32; Numb. xxxii;⁷ Chap. xiv, 6—9.⁸ Ver. 30; xiv, 6.⁹ Ver. 12—17.¹ Josh. xii, 24.² See book xi, p. 121.³ Chap. vi, vii, viii, ix, x.⁴ Chap. xii.⁵ Deut. iii, 12—17.⁶ Num. xiii, 22.⁷ Ver. 22, 23.⁸ Ver. 18.⁹ Chap. xiii, 1—7.¹ Josh. xiv, 10.² Josh. xiii, 7.³ Ver. 33.

Josephus seems to represent that the tabernacle had been erected before they began to divide the land.⁵ But this, I think, is a mistake; for when they began to divide the land, there were nine tribes and a half tribe, which had no inheritance.⁶ But at the time of erecting the tabernacle, seven tribes only were not provided for.⁷ Two tribes and a half tribe, besides those who were to inherit on the other side Jordan, had had their countries assigned to them according to what is above represented, as the book of Joshua very plainly intimates. Thus far therefore the Israelites had proceeded; but

⁴ Ver. 24. The Hebrew words are,

והביאתו	אל-הארץ	אשר	בא	שמה
et introducam eum	in terram	quam	adint	illuc
illam			ad ipsum	locum

⁶ Numb. xiv, 24.

⁵ Vid loc. supra citat.

⁷ Numb. xiv, 24.

⁸ Josh. xiv. 12.

⁹ We must here remark, that the city of Hebron was not the property and inheritance of Caleb; for Hebron was one of the Levitical cities. Caleb's inheritance consisted of some fields near adjoining to this town. See Joshua xxi. 11, 12.

¹ Josh. xvi, 1, &c.

² Chap. xvii, 5.

³ See Judges xxi, 19.

⁴ Josh. xviii, 1.

⁵ Joseph. Antiq. lib. v, c. 1.

⁶ Josh. xiv, 2; xiii, 7.

⁷ Chap. xviii, 2.

they began to find difficulties in the method they were taking. To Judah they had given too large a country,⁸ and Ephraim and the half tribe of Manasseh were not satisfied with what was allotted to them.⁹ And for this reason, I suppose, they now set up the tabernacle. Their enemies were so far subdued, and the place where they were to fix it so surrounded with the settlements already made, that they had no reason to fear any sudden invasion, to oblige them to take it down again.¹ And by having the tabernacle erected, they would have power to apply to God for his immediate direction in all difficulties,² so as both to prevent mistakes in their division of the land, and to leave no pretence for any tribe's being dissatisfied at the lot which should be assigned to them.

The directions, which God had given for the division of the land, were these, 1. They were to divide the land by lot;³ and each tribe was to have that portion of it, which by lot should fall to him.⁴ 2. When the lot of a tribe was fallen, the land so allotted to that tribe was to be divided among the several families of it;⁵ which, I think, was to be done partly by the lot,⁶ and only in part. When they began to set out the particular inheritances of the families, they threw the lot, which family they should settle first, which next, and so on. And thus every man's inheritance would be in the place where his lot fell;⁷ but the place of it being thus fixed, they did not cast the lot for the quantity to be assigned to a family; for they were to set out more or less land to each family, according to the number of the names of the persons belonging to it.⁸ 3. Every private person was to have his inheritance within the bounds of the country assigned to the tribe⁹ to which he belonged. 4. To prevent disputes or uneasiness in or from the choice of the persons who were to manage and direct the division, God had expressly named who should divide the land unto the children of Israel;¹ and, 5. He had also set them bounds, described how far every way the land reached, which was to be divided² by them. We may now examine, what method Joshua and the princes of the congregation took, when they began to execute the commission herein given them.

Now, I imagine, in the first place, that they cast lots to know what tribe they should begin with in making the division; and the lot came out for the tribe of Judah. The next question that could arise, must be where they should settle this tribe; and here Caleb offered his claim to have his inheritance at Hebron;³ the admitting of which, seems to have rendered all farther inquiry about the situation of the country to be assigned to this tribe superfluous; and also to have led the Israelites to set out a tract of land for them, more at random, perhaps, than they would otherwise have done. The journey of the spies, upon which Caleb's claim was founded,⁴ began from Kadesh-barnea. Caleb's claim did not aim at any thing higher up into the country than Hebron. If Caleb was fixed here, the tribe to which he belonged was to be settled contiguous to him. The tribe of Judah was the most numerous of all the tribes; it mustered 76,000 men of twenty years old and upwards, when the sum of the congregation was taken in the plains of Moab,⁵ and consequently a pretty large country would be necessary for it. Now these considerations seem to have induced them to set out at adventure for this tribe all the land between Kadesh-barnea and Hebron, according to the description and bounds which are given of it.⁶ Having thus fixed the tribe of Judah their country, they proceeded to allot each family a proper share and portion in it; but when they had done this, they found, that *the part of the children of Judah was too much for them.*⁷ After each family of the tribe had received an inheritance as large as they could be conceived to have occasion for, there remained a tract of the country to spare, and undisposed of. This must suggest to the dividers, that if they did not go into some stricter method for setting out the assignments to the several tribes, they might in time be brought into difficulties. They might set out to the tribes, which were first provided for, too much of the land, and not leave enough for those whose lot might come up to be last settled. Accordingly in their next appointment they appear to have a little altered their method of proceeding: for,

⁸ Josh. xix, 9.⁹ Chap. xvii, 14.¹ Chap. xviii, 1.² See Exod. xxix, 42, 43.² Numb. xxxiii, 54; xxvi, 55.⁴ Ibid.⁵ Ibid.⁶ Chap. xxvi, 56.⁷ Chap. xxxii, 54.⁸ Ibid.⁹ Ibid.¹ Numb. xxxiv, 17—29. ² Ver. 3—12.³ Josh. xiv, 6.

Here, I think, they first set out such a quantity of the land, as they thought the country of Canaan might afford for a tribe. Then for the eight tribes and a half they made eight lots, assigning but one lot to the tribe of Ephraim and half tribe of Manasseh, considering them under one appellation, namely, as the children of Joseph.⁸ After this they cast the lots to determine who should have the inheritance put up to be disposed of, and the lot of the children of Joseph came out for it.⁹ That but one lot was here made for the sons of Joseph, appears evidently from their complaint to Joshua: *The children of Joseph spake unto Joshua, saying, Why hast thou given me but one lot, and one portion to inherit?*¹ The children of Joseph, here concerned, were more than a tribe: they were a tribe and a half tribe, and in all respects a flourishing people;² and they ought not to have been put thus together, and ⁴ Numb. xxxii, 8; Josh. xiv, 7.

⁵ Chap. xv.

⁶ Ibid: ver. 1, 2, 3, 4.

⁷ Chap. xix, 9.

¹ Chap. xvii, 14.

⁶ Josh. xxvi, 22.

⁸ Chap. xvi, 1.

² Ver. 15, 17.

represented only in one lot; when, if they had been a tribe only, one lot would have been assigned to them. This complaint of the sons of Joseph intimates also, that the quantity of land, for which the lots were cast, was settled, and the bounds of it agreed upon, before the lots were cast for it, otherwise the complaint would have been groundless; for if this had not been the case, where would have been the hardship of the sons of Joseph being represented by only one lot, when the dividers of the land might, upon finding them to be the persons to be provided for, have set them out as much land, and half as much land, as they would have portioned out to a tribe, if the lot of a single tribe had come up upon this occasion? But herein the sons of Joseph argued the inequality of procedure. A tract of land was set out for the inheritance of a tribe. In the lots they were represented but as a tribe, and hereby they received not a portion and a half portion, to which they might think they had a just claim, but one single portion only;³ for any other single tribe, if their lot had come up for it, would have had all the country which was assigned to them. After it was determined what country the sons of Joseph were thus to have, it remained to consider how to divide it between their families. Herein the lot was to be used;⁴ and the dividers, having perhaps fixed where they would begin to set out the lands, might cast the lots to know whether they should settle the families of Ephraim first, or of Manasseh. They began, I think, in the parts nearest the camp, with the families of Ephraim,⁵ and having provided for them in order as their lot directed,⁶ and given each family a greater or a lesser inheritance, as the number of persons belonging to it required,⁷ there remained the portion to be divided to the half tribe of Manasseh,⁸ which they distributed to them in like manner;⁹ adding to them, over and besides the residue of what was first allotted, some tracts of land taken from the coasts, which were afterwards assigned to the tribes of Asher and Issachar;¹ for, upon their repeated remonstrances,² Joshua did indeed confess, that they were a great people, and that one lot only was not altogether enough for them.³

There were seven tribes to be still provided for,⁴ but before they proceeded any farther, the whole congregation assembled at Shiloh, and set up the tabernacle.⁵ Then Joshua proposed to the people to name to him seven men, one out of each tribe, that he might send them out to survey the country which remained still to be divided.⁶ What was already done he was for having ratified and confirmed; that Judah should abide in their coasts on the south, and the house of Joseph in *their coasts on the north;*⁷ each of these were to keep what had been assigned to them. And the persons appointed to make the survey of the lands not yet disposed of, were to cast their survey into seven parts, and to bring their accounts of it in a book to Shiloh, where Joshua purposed to have the lots thrown before the Lord, at the tabernacle, to determine for each tribe his part of it.⁸ The proposal was received with universal approbation. The men were appointed, and brought in their survey; and Joshua cast the lots in Shiloh, *before the Lord;*⁹ *and divided the land according to their divisions;*¹ that is, he made no alteration in any of the seven parts, which the men who took the survey had agreed upon, but each tribe, as their lot came up, had the country for which the lot was drawn, as the surveyors had described it.

³ Josh. xvii, 14.⁶ Vid. quæ sup.⁵ Ver. 7, &c.⁴ Ver. 17.⁶ Ver. 4.⁴ Vid. quæ sup.⁷ Numb. xxxiii, 54.¹ Ver. 11.² Chap. xviii, 2.⁵ Josh. xvi, 5.⁶ Josh xvii, 2.⁷ Ver. 14, 16.⁸ Ibid. 1.

From the account we have in the book of Joshua, of the order and part of the country, in which each of these seven tribes were settled,² we may easily apprehend in what manner the lots were drawn for them. First, it was agreed to draw for the land, which lay between Judah and the sons of Joseph; the countries where the camp had been so long at Gilgal, and this fell to the tribe of Benjamin.³ The second lot was cast for the land, which remained over and above what was occupied by the tribe of Judah, and this fell to the tribe of Simeon.⁴ The third lot was bounded by the Sea of Tiberias, and this fell to the tribe of Zebulun.⁵ Fourthly, they drew for the land between Zebulun and the sons of Joseph, and this fell to the tribe of Issachar.⁶ The fifth lot gave to Asher the country next to the north extent of the land to be divided.⁷ The sixth lot assigned to Naphtali a country east to Asher.⁸ And the last lot remained for Dan, and placed him upon the border of the Philistines.⁹ It is remarked, that *the coast of the children of Dan went out too little for them;*¹ an observation probably not made by Joshua. The words following it hint the expedition which the Danites made afterwards against Leshem. *Therefore the children of Dan went up to fight against Leshem, and took it, and smote it with the edge of the sword, and possessed it, and dwelt therein, and called it Dan, after the name of Dan their father.*² These words cannot be supposed to have been written by Joshua, for they speak of an expedition not made until after his death;³ therefore I think that this whole verse is an addition to the sacred pages, made in the manner of some others, which I have observed to be of a like nature.⁴ The children of Dan were indeed a large people; they mustered 64,400 men of twenty years old and upwards, when the poll was taken in the plains of Moab.⁵ Judah only was a bigger tribe. But I do not imagine, that the surveyors of the land had made their assignments so injudiciously, as to have any very remarkable disproportion appear in any of them. *The coast of Dan was too little for them;*⁶ probably not that the country assigned them was not in itself large enough to receive, and produce an abundant provision for all their families, but because *all their inheritance did not fall unto them.*⁷ The Philistines were in their full strength;⁸ part of whose territories was in this country;⁹ and the Amorites possessed other, the most fruitful parts of it;¹ so that the children of Dan had, comparatively speaking, possession of only a small part of what was intended to be their inheritance. And we do not find, that they enlarged themselves;² therefore as their families increased, they must have been in straits in a country, of which they had so imperfect a tenure. Otherwise, from the fruits,³ and pasturage of this part of Canaan,⁴ not to mention that they had undoubtedly corn fields, as well as their neighbours, on their very borders,⁵ not to suggest how many of the tribe of Dan might abide in ships,⁶ and have the advantages of employment in a sea-life, we may judge, that had a full possession of their whole allotment fallen to them, a mighty and a great people might have flourished and increased in it.

¹ Josh. xviii, 5.² Ver. 10.³ Chap. xviii, 11.⁴ Ver. 17.⁵ Ver. 40.⁶ Judg. xviii.⁷ Ver. 6.⁸ Ibid. ver. 11, to ver. 48 of chap. xix.⁹ Chap. xix, 1.¹ Ver. 24.² Ver. 47.³ See Prideaux's Connect. part i, b. v, p. 492.⁴ Ver. 9.⁵ Ver. 10.⁶ Ver. 32.⁷ Ibid.

The sacred writer has given us a very particular account of the bounds and extent of the country assigned to each tribe;⁷ but we cannot hope to be able to trace out their borders with the same exactness. Canaan must have been too much altered from what it was in the days of Joshua; for perhaps the Jews themselves, in their later days, have found the face of things different from what it appeared in these times. Ten of the twelve tribes of Israel were lost in the captivity.⁸ Two tribes only, Benjamin and Judah, with some few families of the other tribes incorporated with them, returned from Babylon.⁹ And the number which returned was comparatively so small,¹ that, if all Canaan had been restored to them, they would in nowise have been sufficient to enter upon a full possession of what had been the inheritance of the twelve tribes in their several divisions of it. Judea alone was a country more than large enough for them, and they were obliged to contrive means, that Jerusalem itself should not want people.² In this state of things, the country of the ten tribes might not be much inquired after. Other nations of people were become the possessors³ of it, and the bounds of the inheritances which had formerly been known in it might be, in a few ages, not to be ascertained with great exactness, even before the times of a very late posterity. Accordingly, I think, we find not only Adrichomius, and other modern chorographers, giving us, in many particulars, very confused and unscriptural accounts of the situation of divers of the ancient towns of these countries,⁴ but even Josephus himself rather able to say at large, whereabouts each tribe had been placed, than to describe with exactness the borders of their situations. He represents that Zebulun had his country from the Lake Gennesaret to Mount Carmel; and to the sea;⁵ but we cannot, I think, conceive, that this tribe had this situation. That the country of Zebulun touched upon Gennesaret is indeed confirmed by St. Matthew;⁶ but how shall we extend it from thence to Carmel, and to the sea? Asher reached to Carmel westward;⁷ Ephraim and Manasseh met together in Asher on the north.⁸ The only point, where these two tribes could thus meet, must be at the sea of Carmel;⁹ but they could not meet in this point, if the land of Zebulun lay there between them. I might observe farther; Zebulun's inheritance, according to what Jacob had prophesied of him, was to reach, not unto Carmel; but unto Zidon;¹ and undoubtedly, according to this account of what was to be his border, his portion was in due time assigned to him. We must therefore suppose, that the inheritance of this tribe had been extended from Gennesaret, between the lands of Asher and Naphtali; up to the northern extent of Canaan; and in this manner the border of Zebulun might indeed be unto Zidon. Zidon was a town perhaps not of Zebulun, but of Asher;² Zebulun's country then reached only to the borders of it.³

⁵ Numb. xxvi, 43.⁶ Josh. xix, 47.⁷ See Judg. xviii, 2.⁸ Josh. xix, 2.⁹ Compare Josh. xix, 43, with xiii, 3; 1 Sam. v, 10; vi, 16, 17.¹ Judg. i, 35.² Ver. 34, 35.³ See Numb. xiii, 24.⁴ Gen. xxxviii, 13.⁵ Judg. xv, 5.⁶ Chap. v, 17.⁷ Josh. xiii, xv, xvii, xviii, xix.⁸ Prideaux, Connect, part i, b. ii.⁹ Id. b. iii.¹ Id. ibid.² Nehem. xi.

When Joshua and the persons in commission with him had made an end of dividing the land for inheritance by their coasts;⁴ the children of Israel gave an inheritance to Joshua. They gave him the city which he asked, even Timnath-Serah in Mount Ephraim, and he built the city, and dwelt therein.⁵ What he asked for was in a situation not occupied by any to whom inheritances had been given; for it was in Mount Ephraim, probably in that part of ³ Prideaux. ubi sup.

⁴ Walton. in Prolegom. ad Bib. Polyglot.

⁵ Ζεβουλωνταις δὲ πρὸς μίχην Γεννησαρετὶς, καὶ ἄνωγον δὲ πρὸς Καρμυλὸν καὶ θάλασσαν ἐλαχόν. Joseph. Antiq. lib. v, c. 1.

⁶ Mat. iv, 13.

⁷ Josh. xix, 26.

⁸ Chap. xvi, 10.

⁹ Any map of the country will present this to view.

¹ Gen. xlix, 13.

² See Josh. xix, 27, 28.

³ I might observe, that the giving Zebulun this situation agrees with another hint of Joshua; that Zebulun lay east, or to the sun-rising of Asher. Josh. xix, 27.

⁴ Josh. xix, 49, 50.

⁵ Ibid.

the hill, of which Joshua had observed to his people, that it was a wood, and that they might cut it down, and open to themselves an enlargement of their borders in the outgoings of it.⁶ If Timnath-Serah was a town before Joshua built it, it might perhaps be an old ruined village, which had been long evacuated in this wild and overgrown country; so that Joshua asked a property, such as might give him an opportunity of being an example to his tribe for improving their inheritance, to instruct them how to make their allotment commodious for them. Joshua built the city, and dwelt therein: in so commanding a situation, we may conceive that he formed, as it were, a new and beautiful country round about him; and planted himself not inelegantly, and agreeably to a taste, which the ancients of almost all countries were not strangers to in their early times.⁷

The inheritances being fixed, the Israelites appointed the six cities of refuge, and agreed upon the cities to be set out in every tribe for the Levites to dwell in.⁸ All things being now hereby settled for the Israelites to enjoy their respective possessions in every part of the land, Joshua called together the Reubenites, Gadites, and the half tribe of Manasseh, whose inheritances were on the other side Jordan, and having made a public acknowledgment of their assistance to their brethren, and of their having now punctually fulfilled all that Moses had required of them, he strictly charged them to resolve most stedfastly to keep the law. He likewise ordered them their share of the spoil of the conquered nations, and dismissed them, in order to their going home to their own possessions.⁹ The two tribes and a half drew off from the congregation, and began their march towards their own country.¹ When they were come to Jordan, before they passed the river, they built a very large altar, near the place where the Israelites had formerly come over into Canaan;² intending to leave here a lasting monument to all future ages, that they acknowledged themselves to belong to the tribes in Canaan, and that they had no separate altar in their own country, but that the altar at which they were to sacrifice was on the other side the river, before the tabernacle of the Lord their God.³ A rumour of what they were doing soon came to Shiloh, at which the congregation there were greatly alarmed.⁴ The Israelites in Canaan, not knowing their intention, were afraid they were setting up an altar for themselves; and that they intended to fall off from the worship, which the law commanded, and resolved upon a war against them, rather than suffer an innovation, which they apprehended would bring down the divine

⁶ Josh. xvii, 18.

⁷ Πῶς οὖν πόλιν μίαν καὶ οὐρανὸν ἐπὶ τοῖς ὄρεσιν, ὥστε καὶ τοῖς παλαιῶν χρόνοις ἁγίον οὐρανόν. Dionys. Halicar. lib. i, c. 12.

⁸ Josh. xi, xxi.

⁹ Chap. xxii, 1—8.

¹ Ver. 9.

² Josh. xxii, 11.

³ Ver. 21—29.

⁴ Ver. 11—20.

vengeance upon all Israel.⁶ Hereupon they sent an embassy.⁶ The two tribes and the half tribe explained their intention to the princes who were sent to them,⁷ so that they returned with an account which gave great satisfaction to the congregation,⁸ who thereupon blessed God, that their brethren were not guilty of the defection from his worship, which they had imputed to them.⁹ Thus with great joy they laid aside the preparations which they were making for a war.¹

As the sword of Joshua had been fatal to the Canaanites, wherever he had marched against them; for we read of all the nations conquered by him, that he utterly depopulated them, as the LORD God of Israel had commanded;² so it is supposed, that many companies fled before him out of every country, and escaped into foreign lands. Procopius, who flourished in the time of Justinian, mentions some pillars near the place where Tangier is now situate, with an inscription upon them in old Phœnician letters to this purpose, WE ARE THE FUGITIVES FROM THE FACE OF JOSHUA, THE ROBBER, THE SON OF NUN;³ and the Hebrew writers tell us, that the whole nation of the Gîrgashites escaped into this country.⁴ But the sacred historian intimates the contrary; for the Gîrgashites were one of the nations that fought with the Israelites.⁵ It is not indeed probable, that in the battles fought by Joshua every person of every nation subdued by him fell by the sword. Some remains of every kingdom might escape, as Æneas and a few Trojans did in a succeeding age from the ruin of Troy. And if any little companies in this manner took their flight in Joshua's first campaign, when he overthrew the kings of South Canaan, they might make their route by way of Egypt into these parts of Africa, or they might fly into the land of the Philistines, which was not yet conquered;⁶ and from towns on these coasts, of repute for shipping in these days,⁷ they might sail for foreign lands, and a voyage from these parts to Africa was suitable to the skill of these times in the art of sailing, it fell naturally down along the coast from Canaan to Egypt, to Lybia, and without a necessity of going a great distance out of sight of shore. Such a voyage Dido made afterwards from Tyre to Carthage. When Alexander the Great was to make his entry into Babylon, there were embassies attending him from divers nations, who had employed their agents to give him a state of their several interests and affairs, and to beg he would accept an ⁶ Josh. xxii, 11—20.

⁶ Ibid.

⁷ Ver. 21—29.

⁸ Ver. 33.

⁹ Ibid.

¹ Ver. 33.

² Chap. x, 40.

³ Procop. in Vandalicia: Bochart Præf. in lib. de Colon. et Sermon. Phœnic.

⁴ Rab. S. B. Nachman. Gem. Hierosol.; vid. Selden. de Jur. Nat. et Gentium, lib. vi, c. 13.

⁵ Josh. xxiv, 11.

⁶ Chap. xiii, 3.

⁷ See Judges v, 17.

arbitration of their differences.⁸ Arrian mentions that ambassadors from Africa waited upon him at this time;⁹ and the Talmudical writers say that the Canaanites abovementioned, who had fled into Africa, were the people who made him this compliment; and that their deputies were instructed to lay before Alexander, how the Israelites had expelled their ancestors, and to entreat him to restore them back to their old country again.¹ But whether this was not a mere fancy of these writers, and whether Procopius had a sufficient information of what he related, I cannot determine.

Other writers tell us that Canaan sent out many colonies into divers parts of the world in these times,² and Bochart hints that the states of Lesser Asia, of Greece, and the isles in the Ægean Sea, received many companies of Canaanites who fled from their own country. But whoever will duly examine the labours of this writer, will find that his whole work upon this subject shows rather a very learned appearance of argument, than true and real argument to support his opinion. The foreigners who might come from, or pass through Canaan into these countries, came earlier than the times of Joshua; of which Bochart himself could not but feel a conviction in many particulars. There were no revolutions in Greece, or its neighbour islands, which happened after the days of Joshua, but what may be accounted for without any migrations from Canaan into these countries. In like manner, the states in Lesser Asia, which were of figure in the succeeding times, and particularly the kingdom of Troy, which grew to be the mistress of these parts, were formed and growing up in their own strength, before Canaan was in trouble. And the wars of Joshua seem to have been so far from having had any effect which extended itself towards these countries, that we find nations through, or nigh unto which great routes of exiles must have passed, if any considerable migrations had been made out of Canaan into Lesser Asia, in these days, open and unguarded against incursions, careless, quiet, and secure, under no apprehensions that any neighbouring people might want settlements and be tempted to dispossess them,³ of which they could not have been insensible, if many troops had passed their borders in their flight to foreign lands. The Israelites had indeed reduced many kingdoms of Canaan, and divided their countries, to each tribe their share; but they had not so entirely dispersed and destroyed the inhabitants, but that in a little time they got together again, formed themselves to a new strength, and were able to dispute with their conquerors, whether they should have the towns, which, when pressed by ⁸ Arrian. de Expedit. Alexand. lib. vii, p. 476.

⁹ Id. ibid.

¹ Vid. Gemar. Babylon. ad Tit. Sanhed, c. 11, f. 91; Selden de Jure Natural. et Gent. lib. vii, c. 8.

² Vid. Bochart. de Colonia. et Serm. Phœnic.

³ See Judges xviii, 7.

Joshua to a precipitate flight, they seemed to have evacuated and given up.⁴ I must add to all this, that there were many states and cities of Canaan that stood still in their strength, unattacked by the Israelites,⁵ who were able afterwards to bring into the field numerous armies.⁶ To these the scattered remains of the nations which were reduced did undoubtedly fly; and it is reasonable to suppose, that the cities to which they fled might be willing to receive and provide for them, in order to strengthen themselves by an addition of people, rather than to have them desert the country and leave Canaan. It is very probable, an increase of people in this manner was what raised the strength of the Philistines in a few ages, so as to make them more than a match for all Israel.⁷

Joshua lived several years, after he had fixed the Israelites in their settlements in the land,⁸ and had the satisfaction to see them happy in a scene of great peace and quiet all the rest of his days. He was now old and stricken in years.⁹ and as he did not expect to be much longer with them, he summoned a congregation of all Israel,¹ represented the great things which God had done for them, observed to them how he had been enabled to assign them their inheritance,² and assured them, that if they would truly and strictly keep the law, and not associate themselves contrary to it, with the nations, which as yet were not expelled the land, that God would certainly, in due time, entirely drive them out, and give the Israelites full possession of all Canaan.³ But, said he, on the other hand, if ye do not persevere, but shall incline unto the remnant of the nations which are left, and make marriages and alliances with them, then God will not drive them out, but the nations with whom ye shall have thus engaged yourselves; shall be snares and traps, scourges and thorns to you,⁴ shall in various ways seduce and incommode, bring distress and calamities upon you, until ye shall perish from off this good land, which the LORD your God hath given you.⁵ I, in a little time, shall die and leave you; but suffer me to remind you, how punctually hitherto every good thing has befallen you, which God promised; and let me tell you, that every evil, which God has threatened, will as exactly come upon you, if ye transgress the covenant of the LORD your God.⁶

Some time after, he summoned the tribes to Shechem,⁷ and sent thither for the elders of Israel, and for their heads, and for their judges, and for their officers to attend him before the LORD,⁸ where he repeated to them all the mercies

⁴ Judges i, 1, compared with Josh. xii, 15.

⁵ See Josh. xiii, 2—6.

⁶ Josh. xxiii, 1.

⁷ Ver. 3, 4.

⁸ Ver. 15.

⁹ Judges i, 4.

¹ Ibid.

² Ver. 5—11.

³ Ver. 14—16.

⁷ Vid. lib. Samuel.

¹ Ver. 2.

⁴ Ver. 13.

⁷ Chap. xxiv, 1.

⁸ Some copies of the LXX read Shiloh and not Shechem in this place, and as Joshua and the elders are said to have presented themselves before God, i. e. at which God had vouchsafed to their fathers and to them, from the calling of Abraham down to that day;⁹ then he desired them to consider and resolve whether they would indeed faithfully serve God, or whether they would choose to fall away to idolatry.¹ Upon their assuring him that they would not forsake the LORD to serve other gods,² Joshua reminded them, that to serve their God was a thing not so easy to be done as said,³ for that God would be strict in demanding from them a punctual performance of what he had required, and that if they should be remiss, or unmindful of it, that his vengeance would most certainly fall upon them.⁴ Hereupon they repeated their resolution to serve the LORD.⁵ Well then, said Joshua, if, after all this, ye will not do it, let your own declarations this day testify against you;⁶ unto which the people readily assented.⁷ Thus did Joshua summon them to a most strict engagement, never to vary or depart from the law which God had given them.⁸ And that a lasting sense of what they had in so solemn a manner agreed to, might remain upon them, he wrote what had passed in the book of the law,⁹ and set up a pillar of remembrance of it,¹ and then dismissed the people. Not long after, Joshua, being a hundred and ten years old, died, and was buried on the north side of the hill of Gaash, in the border of his inheritance in Timnath-Serah.³ Josephus informs us that Joshua governed the Israelites twenty-five years after the death of Moses,³ accordingly we must fix the time of his death about A. M. 2578.

the Tabernacle, agreeably to which sense of the expression it appears, ver. 26, that they were, at their holding their meeting, by or at the sanctuary of the LORD; and as the tabernacle was set up, not at Shechem, but at Shiloh, chap. xviii, 1, it may be thought, that here is some mistake, and that Shiloh not Shechem was the place to which Joshua convened the tribes of Israel. Some of the critics thought the ark and tabernacle were removed to Shechem against the holding of this convention, but we have no hints of the fact having been so, nor occasion to suppose it. Shechem and Shiloh were about twelve miles distant from one another. Joshua lived at Timnath-Serah, a place almost in the mid-way between them. He summoned the tribes to meet in the fields of Shechem; and from thence he called the heads of the tribes and officers to attend him to Shiloh to present themselves before God. All the tribes of Israel were gathered to Shechem; but not all the tribes, rather the heads, judges and officers only, presented themselves before God. A meeting of all the tribes must form a camp, not to be accommodated, but in a large and open country. Shechem had in its borders fields enough for the reception of all the people. See Gen. xxxiii, 19. Here therefore they met, and from hence made such detachments to Shiloh, a place in the neighbourhood, as the purposes for which they were convened required. Take the fact to have been thus, and the difficulties, which some commentators surmise in this passage, do all vanish.

⁹ Josh. xxiv, 2—13.

² Ver. 16, 17, 18.

⁴ Ver. 20.

⁵ Ver. 22.

⁶ Ver. 25.

¹ Ver. 27.

³ Joseph. Antiq. lib. v, c. 1.

¹ Ver. 14, 15.

² Ver. 19.

⁵ Ver. 21.

⁷ Ibid.

⁹ Ver. 26.

² Ver. 29, 30.

It has been a matter of dispute among the learned, whether Joshua was himself the author of the book which is called by his name.⁴ But, 1. It is obvious, that the book of Joshua seems to hint, that a person, one of the Israelites, who made the miraculous passage over Jordan, was the writer of it. This the first verse of the fifth chapter intimates: When all the kings of the Amorites . . . heard, that the LORD had dried up the waters of Jordan from before the children of Israel, until we were passed over . . .; the writer would not have here used the first person, WE were passed over, if himself had not been one of the persons who had passed the river:⁵ 2. It is evident that this book was written before Rahab died; for we are told, that *Joshua saved Rahab the harlot alive, and her father's household, and all that she had, and she dwelleth in Israel to this day.*⁷ The writer was here willing to record to posterity, that Rahab had not only her life given her, but that she was so well received by the Israelites, as to continue even then to dwell among them; a remark which could not have been made after Rahab was dead; and consequently the book which has it must have been composed whilst Rahab was yet alive.⁸ Rahab was afterwards married to Salmon, the son of Naasson,⁹ the head of the house of Judah;¹ had she been so, when the book of Joshua was composed, I imagine that the author of it, as he appears, by the hint above mentioned, inclined to intimate all the good circumstances of her condition, would not have omitted that, and consequently, by her marriage not being mentioned, we have some reason to think that the book of Joshua had been written, not late in Rahab's life. 3. We are expressly informed, that Joshua did himself write, and add what he wrote to *the book of the law of God.*² 4. The words which inform us of this fact may, if taken in their natural sense, and according to the construction put upon words of the like import, when we find them upon ancient monuments or remains, be supposed to be Joshua's conclusion of his book, designed by him to inform posterity, that himself was the writer of it. Joshua wrote these words in the book

⁴ Vid. Pool. Synop. Critic. Cleric. in Dissert. de Scriptorib. Historic.; Vet. Testam. Carpzov. introduc. ad Libros Hist. Vet. Test.; et al.

⁵ The Hebrew words are, קָרַעוּ

⁶ I ought not to omit, that the marginal reference in the Hebrew Bibles reads the word קָרַעוּ; but the learned allow that the Hebrew Keri and Ketib are not of such authority, that we must be absolutely determined by it. Walton. Bibl. Polyglot. Prolegom. viii, c. 26.

⁷ Joshua vi, 25.

⁸ The remark is not that Rahab's family, descendants, or father's household were then in Israel; but the verb is שָׁמַר, in the third person feminine, and refers to Rahab in particular.

⁹ Matt. i, 5.

¹ Numb. i, 7.

² Joshua xxiv, 26.

of the law, &c. may fairly imply, unless we have good reason to think the fact was otherwise, that all that was found written in the book of the law, from the end of what was penned by the hand of Moses, unto the close of the period, of which these words are a part, was written by Joshua, and this was the opinion of the Talmudists.³ Joshua was the only sacred penman whom we read of that the Israelites had in his age; and after he had finished the division of the land, he had many years of great leisure.⁴ In these he probably applied himself to give account of the death and burial of Moses,⁵ and from thence continued a narrative of what had been transacted under his own direction,⁶ filling it up with a general terrier of the settlements of the tribes,⁷ such as must have been expedient for the Israelites to have on record, to prevent confusion about their inheritances in future ages. After having done this, he summoned the tribes,⁸ gave them his exhortations, and having added, to what he had before prepared, an account of the conventions which he had held, and what had passed at them, he transcribed⁹ the whole into the book of the law, and then dismissed the people.¹ Accordingly, I take the work of Joshua to begin from where Moses ended, at the xxxivth chapter of Deuteronomy, and to end with the 27th verse of the xxivth chapter of Joshua. As Joshua thus added at the end of Deuteronomy the account of Moses's death; so what we find from the 28th verse of the xxivth chapter of Joshua to the end of that book, was unquestionably not written until Joshua and all the elders his contemporaries, who outlived him, were gone off the stage,² and was added to the end of the book of Joshua, by some sacred penman, who was afterwards employed to record the subsequent state of the affairs of Israel.

As to the objections made against Joshua's being the writer of the book so called, they are but inconsiderable. It is remarked, that there are many short hints and intimations in divers parts of the book, which appear evidently of later date than Joshua's time. Of the stones which Joshua set up at Gilgal, it is observed that they were there unto this day, a remark very proper to be made in a distant age, but not likely to be hinted by Joshua, of a monument designed by him, not so much for his own times, as for the information of a late posterity.⁴ Of the Canaanites in divers tribes it is suggested, that the Israelites did not drive them out, but admitted them to live among them, and made them pay tribute;⁵ and

³ Bava Bathra, cap. 1.

⁴ Deut. xxxiv.

⁵ Chap. xii—xxii.

⁶ Chap. xxiv, 26.

⁷ Ver. 31.

⁸ Chap. iv, 21, 22.

⁹ Joshua xxiii, 1.

¹ Joshua i—xii.

² Chap. xxiii, 2.

³ Ver. 28.

⁴ Chap. vii, 26.

⁵ Chap. xiii, 9; xvi, 10.

of the tribe of Dan, that they went up against Leshem.⁶ But this expedition was not taken until after Joshua's death,⁷ nor did the tribes of Israel come to agreement with the inhabitants of Canaan, whilst Joshua was living;⁸ therefore all these observations must have come not from Joshua, but from a later hand. We are told, that what Joshua wrote about the Sun and Moon's standing still was also found in the book of Jasher;⁹ but the book of Jasher was more modern than these times. It contained hints of what David desired the children of Judah might be taught,¹ and therefore was a book probably not in being until David's age. In like manner, a tract of land in the sixth chapter of Joshua is called Cabul,² but this country seems not to have had this name until Hiram called it so in the days of Solomon.³ I might add to these some other observations of a like sort;⁴ but how obvious is it to reply to all of them? 1. That the observation of Rahab's being alive⁵ suggests that the book of Joshua had been composed long before any of these more modern intimations could be given; and consequently, that none of these could be in the original book of Joshua. 2. The learned are abundantly satisfied, that there are many little strictures and observations of this nature now found in divers parts of the sacred books, which were not written by the composers of the books in which they are found.⁶ 3. Dean Prideaux says of them that they were additions made by Ezra, when, upon the return from the captivity, he collected and settled for the Jews a correct copy of their holy Scriptures.⁷ What authority this most learned writer had for this opinion, I cannot say; I suspect it proceeded from a desire to preserve the same regard for these additions and interpolations which is due to the sacred writings; for he says, Ezra was assisted in making these additions by the same Spirit by which the books were at first written.⁸ But, whether Ezra made his copy of the Scriptures from original books of them then extant; or rather, whether he did not make his copy from collecting and comparing such transcribed copies as were in the hands of the Israelites of his time; whether in the copies he consulted, the additions we are speaking of might not stand as marginal hints made by private hands in their copies of the sacred books; whether Ezra could ever design either to add to the sacred books, or to diminish ought from them;⁹ though perhaps finding divers

⁶ Chap. xix, 47.

⁷ Joshua i.

⁸ 2 Sam. i, 18.

⁹ 1 Kings ix, 13.

¹⁰ Vid. Cleric. Dissertat. de Scriptōribus, lib. Histor. Vet. Testam.

¹¹ Joshua vi, 25.

¹² See Prideaux, Connect. Part i, book v.

¹³ Id. ibid.

¹⁴ Ibid.

¹⁵ Judg. xviii.

¹⁶ Chap. x, 13.

¹⁷ Joshua xix, 27.

¹⁸ Proverbs xxx, 6.

of these intimations of use to the reader for illustrating, and comparing one part of the sacred writings with another, or suggesting what might explain an obscure or antiquated name or passage in them, he might take such as he judged thus serviceable into his copy also; but whether he did not insert them in his copy, as marginal hints and observations only; and whether their being made, as we now find them, part of the text, has not been owing to the mistake or carelessness of later transcribers from Ezra's copy; are points which I submit, with all due deference, to the judgment of the learned.

.....
END OF VOL. III.
.....

STRICTURES ON
DR. SHUCKFORD'S ACCOUNT OF THE HEATHEN GODS,
AND EGYPTIAN DYNASTIES BEFORE MENES;

PRECEDED BY A SHORT ACCOUNT OF THE MANNER IN WHICH THE EGYPTIANS BURIED THEIR DEAD;

WHENCE ORIGINATED
THE GRECIAN FABLE OF CHÆRON, HIS BARK, AND THE STYGLIAN LAKE.

BY THE RIGHT REV. DR. R. CLAYTON,
BISHOP OF CLOGHER.

STRICTURES,

&c. &c.

THERE is a remarkable circumstance attending the lake Mœris, which shows the situation of the city of Memphis to have been originally, as described by Herodotus, southward of the Pyramids and the Plain of Mummies, or the burial place of the Egyptians. This circumstance occurs from the name given to this lake, even at this day, by the Arabians; namely, the Birque, or Lake of Charon. As it is acknowledged that the Plain of Mummies, or burying place of the ancient Egyptians, lies to the north of the lake Mœris; therefore in order that the corpses of the Egyptians might be brought by boat to this burial place, it was necessary they should come somewhere from the south. And as Memphis lay, according to Herodotus, on the south-east corner of the lake Mœris; it is more than probable, that it was the custom of transporting the corpses of the ancient inhabitants of Memphis, in Charon's ferry boat, from Memphis to the Plain of Mummies, which first occasioned this denomination to be given to that lake; and also the inventions of the Grecian poets in a great part of the heathen mythology. This is positively asserted by Diodorus Siculus, who mentions it as an Egyptian custom of ancient date, for persons to be appointed at every one's interment to examine their past lives. "Before the body was buried," says he, "the relations of the deceased gave notice both to the judges and friends of the deceased, of the day appointed for the interment, saying, that such a one, naming the deceased by his name, is about to pass the lake. Then the judges, being in number forty, sitting in a place prepared for them in the form of a semicircle, on the other side of the lake, the corpse was brought over in a boat, conducted by a person, who in the Egyptian tongue was called Charon; but before the corpse was suffered to be put into its coffin, every one was permitted to accuse the dead person. If he was found to have lived a wicked life, the judges gave sentence that he should not be allowed to be buried; but if no accuser appeared, or the accuser was convicted of falsehood, then the friends of the deceased made a funeral oration in his favour, and put the corpse into its coffin, and carried it to the place of interment. Those, who were condemned to be unworthy of sepulture, either on account of crimes or debts, were carried home again by their friends, and prohibited from being put even into a coffin. "Orpheus, having observed this custom," says he, "from thence framed the fables of the infernal Deities." In the following chapter he particularly mentions Memphis as the place from whence Orpheus borrowed the scene of the lake Acherusia; and the Elysian fields, "There are," says he, "about Memphis delightful fields and lakes filled with aromatic reeds; and in this place the Egyptians for the most part bury their dead. And these corpses being brought over the lake Acherusia to the burying place of the Egyptians, and there deposited, has given rise to all those fictions which the Grecians have raised concerning the infernal deities." Here it is to be observed, that these aromatic reeds, with which this lake and the adjoining lands abound, are in the original called αχερωεις, acheroes, and therefore it is probable that this lake was from thence denominated Ἀχέρουσα λίμνη, the Acherusian lake: which also shows the absurdity of all those derivations of the word Acheron, that are to be found in the Greek lexicons. And probably these acheroes are the same with those sweet scented reeds, or canes, as they are called in the Hebrew, which are mentioned Exod. xxx, 23, and Jer. vi, 20, which were used by the Israelites in the composition of their perfumes; and are spoken of as being brought from a far country.

This however is manifest from what is before said, that the lake Mœris, or the Acherusian lake, or the Birque of Charon, bordered on the city of Memphis, and lay between that city and the Plain of Mummies, or the burying place of the Egyptians.

We have already seen, that the situation of Memphis, and the custom of the Egyptians in burying their dead, by carrying them to the Plain of Mummies in Charon's ferry boat across the Acherusian lake, first gave origin to the Grecian fiction of the Elysian fields, with the infernal judges Minos, Rhadamanthus, and Æacus, &c. And Herodotus is very positive, that Hesiod and Homer, who lived only about four hundred years before him, were the first who regulated the system of the Grecian theology, assigned names to the several gods, and allotted them their several employments. Dr. Shuckford, however, has undertaken to give us their real history; and in the first volume of his Connection supposes, from Syncellus and Manetho, that the eight demi-gods, and fifteen heroes of the Egyptian dynasties before Menes, were real persons living in Egypt before the Flood. "For,"^a says he, "Manetho rightly conjectures, that they were antediluvians." But if they were such, how could Manetho or any one else come by their history? These eight demi-gods, he says from Diodorus, were Sol, Saturnus, Rhea, Jupiter, Juno, Vulcanus, Vesta, and Mercurius.^b Whereas Herodotus declares, that Juno and Vesta were names utterly unknown in Egypt. And in the third volume of his Connection, Dr. Shuckford gives us the memoirs of the life of Jupiter, and supposes him to have lived in Greece from about the time of Moses to within three or four centuries of the Trojan war. He seems to place the principal scene of his activity about seven or eight generations before the war of Troy; and gives him a most numerous progeny. And because most of the kingdoms in Greece derived the origin of their state at about the distance of seven or eight generations of descent from Jupiter, he therefore concludes, that Jupiter lived about the time of Moses. Whereas the true conclusion to be deduced from thence is, not that Jupiter lived, but that the use of letters was not known in Greece till about seven or eight generations of descent before the war of Troy; about which time Moses lived, and a little after which Cadmus first introduced them into Greece. For^c Cadmus was father to Polydorus, the father of Labdacus, the father of Laius, the father of Oedipus, the father of Polynices, the father of Thyrsander, who was one of the warriors at the siege of Troy. Accordingly Diodorus observes,^d that Semele, the daughter of Cadmus, was the last of mortals with whom Jupiter had any intrigues. Hence, it may be presumed, that, as before that time, when the Grecians were at a loss for the genealogy of their kings or princes, they fathered them upon Jupiter; so now the introduction of letters put an end to his amours. Therefore it is most probable, that there never was any such real person as Jupiter, in Greece, any more than there were such real persons as Chronus, Uranus, or Tellus, in Phœnicia, Assyria, or Egypt. Whereas Dr. Shuckford collects from Diodorus and Apollodorus, that Chronus was the son of Uranus, and that from Uranus and Tythæa, or Tellus, were also born the Centimani and the Cyclops, whom their father Uranus sent to inhabit the land of Tartarus. What or where that country was, which was thus named, he says, may be difficult to determine; but gravely concludes that it can be no part of Crete.

^a Shuckford's Connection, vol. i, p. 44.

^b Ibid. vol. ii, p. 196.

^c Apollod. lib. iii.

Now, if we look into the description of Chronus, given by Sanchoniathon, it will plainly convince us, that the representation was not taken from any real person; but the design of it was only to give us a symbolical description of time, as the name properly imports. For he is described with four eyes, two before, and two behind; two of which were always shut, and two were always open; denoting that time has a reference both to what is past, and what is to come; and is always upon the watch; even when it seems to be at rest. He was also delineated with four wings, two of which were stretched out as in the action of flight, and two were contracted as in repose; denoting that time, even when seemingly stationary passes on, and when flying, is yet seemingly at a stand. Chronus is likewise by Sanchoniathon said to have dispatched his son with his own hand, and cut off the head of his own daughter, &c.; which is only a metaphorical account of time's destroying his own produce. For thus Cicero, speaking of the real opinion which the ancients had of Chronus,^e saith, ^d Diod. lib. iv, c. 2.

^e Cicero de Nat. Deor. lib. ii, 25.

“Saturnum autem eum esse voluerunt, qui cursum et conversionem spatiorum ac temporum contineret, qui deus Græce id ipsum nomen habet: Κρονος, enim dicitur, qui est idem Χρονος, id est, spatium temporis. Saturnus autem est appellatus, quod saturetur annis. Ex se enim natos commesse fingitur solitus, quia consumit ætas temporum spatia, annisque præteritis insaturabiliter expletur.”

Dr. Shuckford also gives us a history of the court of Jupiter upon earth; and supposes that Neptune and Pluto were his brothers, Juno his wife, Vesta and Ceres his sisters; Vulcan, Mars, Apollo, Diana, Mercury, Venus, and Minerva his children: and imagine that they all had been deified after their death, on account of their having so wisely established the government of Crete. But I cannot conceive how he will be able to reconcile this with the eight demi-gods of Manetho; among whom are Jupiter, Juno, Vulcan, Vesta, and Mercury, supposed by him to have reigned in Egypt before the Flood; and who, as he positively asserts in another place, certainly lived before the Flood.^f And again, speaking of the same deities, he says, “the truth is they were their antediluvian ancestors.”^g

Whereas the truth is, they were their postdiluvian ancestors, some of whom were of Egyptian, some of Phœnician, and some of Grecian origin. The Phœnicians and Grecians were they who introduced into Egypt the custom of worshipping gods in the form and figure of men; as appears manifestly even from the famous god Vulcan, to whom a temple was erected by Menes in Memphis. For it is plain from the very form of the statue, as described by Herodotus, that this was one of the Dii Patæci of the Phœnicians, being, as he says, like those Phœnician figures which are placed in the prows of their ships, and called Παρακτοι, not exceeding the figure of a pigmy. And in another place he says, that that quarter of the city of Memphis, where the temple of Vulcan stood, was inhabited by Phœnicians from Tyre; and that all that region was called the Tyrian camp. Herodotus mentions also a temple built to Perseus in the city of Chemis, in the province of Thebes; but at the same time says that gymnastic exercises were ^f Shuckford's Connection, vol. ii, p. 196.

^g Ibid. vol. ii, p. 197.

there instituted, entirely agreeing with those used in Greece. Which plainly shows that the origin of that temple and worship had been Grecian.

Hence it appears, in considering the antiquities of Egypt, how necessary it is to distinguish between the customs, inscriptions, and deities of the original Egyptians, that is, of those who were the aborigines of the country; and those customs, inscriptions, or deities, which were introduced afterwards by the Phœnicians or Grecians, who came in later ages to inhabit there; though they are all equally called Egyptian. Otherwise we shall not be able to reconcile many seeming difficulties, as well in Herodotus as in later writers. Thus, for instance,^b Herodotus affirms, that the custom of predicting future events was derived from the Egyptians. And the account he gives of it is this: the priests of the Theban Jupiter told him that two priestesses were carried out of that country by certain Phœnicians, who afterwards, as they were informed, sold one in Libya, and the other in Greece; from which priestesses the people of those countries learned the art of divination. Whereas, when he is describing the customs of the aborigines Egyptians, he expressly saysⁱ that no woman can act as a priest of any god or goddess; men only being employed in that office.

The Grecians were a people of a lively imagination, and readily took any traditionary hint, given by the Egyptians, and improved it into a regular fable. Of this there is a remarkable instance in the story related by Diodorus and Plutarch of the birth of five gods, when “Rhea being with child by Saturn, was discovered by the Sun, who, upon finding out her baseness, laid a curse upon her, that she should not be delivered in any month or year: that Mercury being in love with the goddess, lay with her also; and then played at dice with the Moon, and won from her the seventy-second part of each day, and made up of these winnings five days, which he added to the year, making the year to consist of three hundred and sixty five days, which before consisted of three hundred and sixty days only; and that in these days Rhea brought forth five children, Osiris, Orus, Typho, Isis, and Nephthe.”

^b Herod. lib. ii.

ⁱ Ibid.

It is a dispute between Dr. Warburton and Dr. Shuckford, whether these five personages were deified before the invention of this mythological story. They both agree indeed that this story could not have been invented before the addition was made of the five days to the year; which they both likewise allow to have been about A. M. 2665, a little after the death of Joshua. But according to Sir Isaac Newton,^k it is much more truly computed to have been about "one hundred and thirty-seven years before the æra of Nabonassar began, in the year of the Julian period three thousand eight hundred and thirty, or ninety-six years after the death of Solomon," which corresponds with A. M. 3066. Dr. Shuckford supposes that this fable was invented in order to celebrate the deification of these five deities: whereas^l Dr. Warburton much more reasonably supposes that this fable was invented to celebrate the addition of the five days to the year.

Dr. Shuckford^m says, that the Egyptians generally ascribe all their sciences to Pathros, whom they called Thyoth. In proof of which he quotes Jamblichus De Mysteriis Ægyptiorum. But I cannot find that Jamblichus, in his whole treatise De Mysteriis, once mentions the name of Pathros.

He speaks indeed of Hermes having written twenty thousand volumes,ⁿ or, as Meneteus says, thirty-six thousand five hundred and twenty-five volumes; and begins this treatise with saying, That the Egyptian writers, thinking Hermes was the inventor of arts and sciences, ascribed all these books to Hermes, who was reputed the god of wisdom and eloquence: That Pythagoras, Plato, Democritus, Eudoxus, and many others went to visit the Egyptian priests: That Pythagoras and Plato learned their philosophy from the pillars of Mercury in Egypt; which pillars, says he, are full of learning. But he nowhere explains who this Hermes was. Dr. Shuckford says also that Pathros, whom he calls "Pathrusium," is supposed to have first invented the use of letters; but Naphtuhim is said to have learnt both them, and several other useful arts from him, and instructed his people in them. In proof of this Dr. Shuckford quotes Syncellus and Sir John Marsham; but unfortunately neither Syn-

^k Newt. Chron. p. 81.

^l Div. Leg. vol. ii, part i, p. 189.

^m Shuckford's Connection, b. iv, p. 134.

ⁿ Jam. de Deo. et Deis.

cellus nor Marsham say one word about Naphtuhim, that I could find.

If we look into Plutarch, we shall see that the inhabitants of Thebais in Upper Egypt were alone of all the Egyptians free from taxes toward supporting the sacred animals, because they worshipped only the god Cneph; whom I suppose to be the same with Neph, as Ham was indifferently called Cham or Ham. And Eusebius^o says, from Philo-Byblius, that that idol, under the figure of a serpent with the head of a hawk, which the Phœnicians called Agathodæmon, or the good dæmon, the Egyptians called Cneph.

And what proves that this Cneph or Neph was not an imaginary idol, but a real man, who had been deified by some of his admirers for his great endowments, is, that Eusebius^p likewise says, the Egyptians worshipped the god Cneph under the image of a king with a girdle about his waist and a sceptre in his hand, and an egg coming out of his mouth; which egg was looked upon as an emblem of the world. And Strabo^a says, that there was in an island adjoining to Syene the temple and nilometre of the god Cneph; whom, according to the Greek termination of the word, he calls Cnuphis. Which nilometre, or machine for measuring the increase of the Nile, shows that this god Cneph, Cnuphis, or Neph, had been some remarkable person living near Syene, who had been famous for the use of characteristic marks in his observations on the rise of the Nile. For, says Strabo, "this nilometre was a canal cut out of one entire stone on the bank of the Nile, in which were engraven several lines to denote the different increases of the Nile; to which were also added several characteristic marks, to denote upon certain days the future increase of the Nile. By observing these persons of skill were capable of forming certain presages of the ensuing season; and could prognosticate, whether it was likely to be fruitful or otherwise."

What confirms this opinion further is the great variety of emblematical figures under which the gods Cnuph and Thoth were characterised; all which seem plainly to have taken their origin from the nilometre of the god

^o Euseb. Præp. lib. i, c. 10.

^p Strabo, p. 817.

^a Id. lib. iii, c. 11.

Cnuphis near Syene. For since, as Strabo expressly says,^c the Egyptian temples had no images in them, that is, none of human form; but only those of some animal, substituted to denote the object of their worship; hence it was, that the various emblematical characters made use of by Cneph in his nilometre furnished those persons, who out of regard to his memory were fond to worship him as a god after his death, with a variety of emblematical representations under which he might be adored. As for example, that of a serpent with a lion's head, of a serpent with a hawk's head, or that of a dog.

As to that famous emblem of a dog, under which this god Cnuphis, or, as Virgil calls him,^d Latrator Anubis, was worshipped, it is certain, that the brilliant star, which is known among Astronomers by the name of the Dog Star, and is one of the brightest in the whole firmament, becomes visible in Egypt in the month of July, about the time of the year when, it is agreed by all writers, the Nile generally begins to overflow its banks. This star is therefore called by Hesiod Σειριος Ἀστηρ, i. e. Sihoris Aster, the star of the river Sihor or the Nile; Sihor being the name by which the river Nile was known in early times, as appears from Josh. xiii, 3, and Jeremiah ii, 18; which name was probably given it on account of the dark colour of its waters at the time of its inundation: being derived from the Hebrew verb שָׁחַר Shachar, niger fuit, denigratus est, whence also it was called by the Greeks, Μελας. And hence Virgil, speaking of this river, says,

Et viridem Ægyptum nigra fecundat arena, where Servius in his notes remarks, nam antea Nilus MELO dicebatur. And therefore this symbol of a dog might have been used by Neph in his nilometre as a characteristic mark to denote the rise of this star, which warned them to prepare their grounds for being flooded by the Nile. Whence probably it obtained the name of the Dog Star; and Neph might himself in after-ages be worshipped under this symbol, and hence also obtain the name of Taautus or Taaud, i. e. the dog.^e ^c Strabo, lib. xviii.

^d Vir. Æn. lib. vii, ver. 698.

^e Hist. du Ciel.

THE SACRED AND PROFANE
HISTORY OF THE WORLD
CONNECTED,

FROM THE CREATION OF THE WORLD
TO
THE DISSOLUTION OF THE ASSYRIAN EMPIRE AT THE DEATH OF SARDANAPALUS, AND TO THE DECLENSION OF THE KING-DOMS OF JUDAH AND ISRAEL, UNDER THE REIGNS
OF AHAZ AND PEKAH: INCLUDING
THE DISSERTATION ON THE CREATION AND FALL OF MAN.

—○○○○—
BY SAMUEL SHUCKFORD, D. D.

CHAPLAIN IN ORDINARY TO HIS MAJESTY, GEORGE THE SECOND.

—
Revised, Corrected, and Greatly Improved,

BY JAMES CREIGHTON, B. A.

FOUR VOLUMES IN TWO.

VOL. IV.

—○○○○—
THE FIRST AMERICAN, FROM THE FIFTH LONDON EDITION.

Illustrated with a New and Correct Set of Maps and Plans, and an Extensive Index.

—
PHILADELPHIA:
PUBLISHED BY WILLIAM W. WOODWARD,
NO. 52, SOUTH SECOND STREET.

1824.

THE DISSERTATION
ON THE CREATION
AND FALL OF MAN.

INTRODUCTION
TO THE ACCOUNT
OF THE
CREATION AND FALL OF MAN.

SECTION I.

The Mosaic Account of the Creation is to be literally understood.—Origin of Mythology, &c.

THE ensuing Treatise is called a Supplement to the Sacred and Profane History of the World Connected; because the subject matter of it ought, and was intended, to have been treated before; but was deferred, as I wished to see what others, who were writing after me,^a would suggest upon a subject so variously thought of by divers able and valuable writers; rather than too hastily offer to the public, sentiments upon it, of which I had a just diffidence, as many of them seemed to be more peculiarly my own.

A supposed impossibility of reconciling a literal interpretation of Moses's account of the Fall of Man, with any reasonable notions of God, and with what must, in truth, be his dispensations towards us,^b is, I believe, what has introduced the notion of explaining some parts at least of his narration into apologue and fable. The shadow of allegory seems to give us some appearance of knowing, what we do not plainly understand; and an unexamined hearsay of eastern sages, their mythology and literature, amuses with a colour of being very ^a The writers of The Universal History soon after began to publish their work; and, after their account of the creation, gave us, as I hoped they would, what they could collect of the Fall of Man. See Preface to vol. i, p. 21.

^b See Middleton's Allegorical and Literal Interpretation.

learned, whilst, perhaps, we really mistake the rise and design of that very literature to which we have recourse, by endeavouring to resolve into it the narration of Moses, which most evidently sets before us particulars absolutely incapable of admitting any allegorical interpretation whatsoever.

That the great point of which Moses informs us is of this sort, absolutely incompatible with allegory, is, I think, evident beyond contradiction. I hope the ensuing pages will clearly show, concerning every part of what he has related upon the subject, that, taken literally as he has recorded it, the whole very pertinently agrees with the great design of all subsequent Scripture; and must show us, that, "in all that happened to our first parents, nothing befel them, improper for their being ensamples unto us;"^a and that the account we have of them, so far from being mythic, or unintelligible, is most plainly written for our admonition; that we may indeed learn from it, in what manner and measure, from the beginning, it was, as it still is, the one thing needful for man, truly and indeed to obey God. All Scripture is given by inspiration of God; and is profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for correction, for instruction in righteousness; that the man of God may be perfect, thoroughly furnished unto all good works.^d If, in explaining Moses's narration of the fall literally, we can show it to bear evidently all these characters of holy writ, as I trust from what is to follow will be seen, we show what must be of more real weight for a literal interpretation, than all that is otherwise suggested against it.

But, though what I have here intimated, and have farther evinced in the ensuing Treatise, will make it evident, that Moses did not here write apologue and fables; whether what I am going to suggest be certain fact or not, yet it may not be disagreeable to the reader to remark, that the relating mythologically physical or moral truths, concerning the origin and nature of things, was not, perhaps, as modern writers too hastily imagine, the customary practice in the age of Moses; but rather began after his time. The poet's rule may be a very good one, to judge even of the style and manner of authors,

^a 1 Cor. x, 11.

^d 2 Tim. iii, 16, 17.

Ætatis cujusque notandi sunt tibi mores.

HOR.

And a few intimations may possibly show us, that a due use of it may not be altogether ineffectual in the inquiry before us.

The wisdom of the east country, and the eastern sages, were in high esteem in the days of Solomon;^a but it is observed at the same time, that the wisdom of Egypt stood in competition with it. There were then western sages, as well as eastern; and how readily soever eastern sages flow from the pen of modern writers, as far as I can find, we must go to the western ones for the rise of mythologic writing. Mythology began in Egypt; where it was new and recent in the times of Sanchoniatho; the νεωπατοι ιερολογων, the priests, who at that time were most modern, had then invented and introduced it.^f Sanchoniatho flourished about A. M. 2760:^g Moscs died A. M. 2553:^h in the interval of these two hundred and seventeen years, we have reason to suppose the rise of mythology.

It is remarkable, that in this interval the correction of the year was made in Egypt, when Aseth was king

^a 1 Kings iv, 30.

^f When Sanchoniatho made his inquiries, we are told that οι μιν πατατα των ιερολογων τα μιν γεγονοτα αφηγηματα εξ αρχης απημψαντο αλληλογρας και μυθου επισημειωσαντε, και τοις κοσμοποις αναδημιουσι συγγρησαι απλασασμενοι μυθρια κατασκευσαι, και πολλων αυτοις επιτροι τυπον, ως μη ραδιος την συντομην τα κατ' αληθειαν γνημμενα. Euseb. Præp. Evang. lib i, c. 9.

^g Sanchoniatho flourished προ των Τρωικων χρονων, και σχεδον τοις Μωυσικον. Euseb. ibid. Troy was taken, according to Usher, A. M. 2820: according to the Arundle Marble, 2796. Agreeably hereto, Sanchoniatho is said to have conversed with Jerombaâl, priest of the god Jewo, in or near Phœnicia: the country of the Jews was often taken as part of Phœnicia. The four letters of the word Jehovah may easily be so pointed as to be pronounced Jehvoh. Gideon, who was called Jerubbaâl, Judges vi, 32, was a prophet, a ruler, a great deliverer of his people under the especial direction of this Gon, whose name was Jehovah, יהוה, Judges vi, vii, viii. With the heathens, and in the most ancient times, the ruler was also priest unto his people; see Connect. vol. ii, book vi, p. 81; so that they might naturally deem Jerubbaâl a priest of the Gon 'Iwa, Jevoh, as they pronounced it, from his having been appointed by Jehovah to rule and govern his people. Mr. Dodwell indeed wrote a treatise to prove that Sanchoniatho was not so ancient: but I cannot apprehend that his endeavours are at all conclusive. Take Jerombaâl to be Gideon, to have ended his war against Midian about A. M. 2760 (see Usher's Annals), about that time Sanchoniatho might have access to him.

^h See Connect. vol. iii, book xii, p. 192.

there.ⁱ Aseth, or Assis, was the sixth pastor king, the second after Apophis, who perished at the exit of the Israelites in the Red Sea, A. M. 2513.^k Assis began to reign at the end of fifty years after the death of Apophis,^l i. e. A. M. 2563.^m The correction of the year was not until after the beginning of his reign; in what time of it, we are not told; he reigned forty years;ⁿ we may well place it towards his death,^o perhaps about A. M. 2600,^p which is about forty-seven years after the death of Moses;^q and twenty-two years after the death of Joshua.^r

The fable, which is handed down to us, with the account of their correction of the year, very significantly points out that their mythology took its rise from this incident. They now found out that there were five days in the year more than they had thought of;^s and they mythologized, that five gods were now born, Osiris, Orus, Typho, Isis, and Nephthe.^t They could not mean that these personages now first began to be; for they had been, ages before, mighty and renowned princes in their country; but they now first ascribed to them a rule and influence over all sublunary things, by supposing each to be the governing power in some star, thought to be animated by them. The dog-star was reputed the orb of Isis;^u to the others were allotted, in like manner, their respective spheres;^x and the philosophy of the Egyptians, at this time, seems to have been exerted in such a lustration of their year, ⁱ Αργυστιαν βασιλευσιν Ἀσθη—του δὲ κοσμοῦ (στῆς) γῆς ὅτος προσέθηκε τον πλανητων τας ἐκταγομενας· και επι αυτη, ὡς φασιν, εὐρηματισιν τῆς ἡμερας Αργυστιανος βασιλεως, τῆς μωσῆος προ τῆς μεταρρυθμισης. Syncellus, p. 123. According to Syncellus, Aseth lived about A. M. 2716. According to Sir John Marsham, we must place him in 2665. But from the years of the Egyptian kings, as I deduce them, his times are from 2563 to 2603.

^k See Connect. vol. iii, b. xi, p. 158, 161.

^l Ibid. p. 158.

^m The reign of Janais, the intermediate king between Apophis and Assis or Aseth, brings us to begin the reign of Assis at this year.

ⁿ Connect. vol. iii, book xi, p. 158.

^o Ibid. vol. ii, b. viii, p. 195.

^p Assis died 2603, vide quæ sup.

^q Moses died 2553.

^r Joshua died A. M. 2578; Connect. vol. iii, b. xii, p. 257.

^s The Egyptian year was now first computed to be three hundred and sixty-five days, being reckoned three hundred and sixty only before. Syncellus ubi sup. Connect. Preface to vol. i, p. 8.

^t Connect. vol. ii, b. viii, p. 195.

^u Upon the pillar of Isis was inscribed, Ἐγὼ αὐτὴ εἰμι καὶ ἡ ἀστὴρ καὶ ἡ κοίτη ἐνταλασσα. Diodor. Sic. lib. i.

^x Connect. vol. ii, b. viii, p. 196.

—ιδεῖσθαι εἰς ἰνίαντον
'Ασπας—

ARATUS.

as to assign ruling influences of the stars over the several parts of it; and to suppose their ruling stars were animated by those who had been the early founders and supporters of their cities and states. What their former theories had been, shall be mentioned presently. What I would here hint is, that they now fell into a way of thinking, which the Roman poet took up afterwards, to make his court to Germanicus Cæsar,

Cæsaris arma canant alii, nos Cæsaris aras,
Et quoscunque sacris addidit ille dies.

OVID, Fast. lib. i.

They consecrated, and placed over their times and seasons, the venerable personages of their most ancient ancestors, who had laid the early foundations of all the Egyptian glory and prosperity: and they hoped, that if they with proper rites worshipped gods so auspicious,

—felix totus ut annus eat,

OVID, ubi sup.

that ages of all national happiness might be renewed to them.

What had been the more ancient Egyptian theology, inquiries of Sanchoniatho declare to us. He having examined their ancient records, and set aside all the mythology that had been brought in, gave us their true ancient dogmata;^x and what he has left us, evinces, that their doctrines were, that the origin of things happened from principles of nature effecting, without choice or intelligence, what blindly by a mechanical event of things arose from them.^y He talks indeed of a το πνευμα, what we might think to call a spirit; tells us that it was in love with its own principles;^z but his spirit was such an one, as a modern author exhibits to us: a spirit, “which, clothed with one set of material organs, is only capable of exerting its intelligence in the performance of ^x 'Ο δὲ συμβάλλων τὰς ἀπὸ τῆς αὐτῆς ὑπόθεσης ἀποκρυφῶς Ἀμμωνίου γραμμασι συγκαταμένους, ἃ δὲ καὶ πᾶσι γινώσκουσιν, τὴν μαθήσειν ἑπαινοῦντα αὐτὸς ποιεῖ καὶ τέλος ἐπιτίθει τῇ πραγματικῇ, τῇ κατ' ἀρχὰς μύθῳ, καὶ τὰς ἀλλοτρίους παροδῶν πομπῆς, ἐκινεῖται τῇ προδοσίᾳ. Euseb. Præp. Evang. lib. i, c. 9.

^y Id. ibid. c. 10.

^z Ἦρασθαι τὸ πνεῦμα τῇ ἰδίᾳ ἀρχῇ. Id. ibid.

attraction or repulsion; and, when jarring elements meet, breaks forth in thunder and lightning, and earthquakes, or any other mechanical operations; but may, when united to a different set of organs of a more exquisite and delicate contexture, be capable of exercising voluntary motion, may be enabled to think and to reason, to operate in love or hatred, and, when provoked by opposition, may be agitated with anger and resentment, and break forth in quarrels, contention, and war.”^a The Egyptian το πνευμα, which generated all things, was an original, like this author’s spirit; unto which, though Sanchoniatho ascribes operating principles, yet he expressly tells us, they were insensate,^b and sometimes caused jarring elements, and broke forth in lightning and thunders;^c and what is very wonderful, he also supposed that these unintelligent operating powers produced some animal beings, which being alive, but having no thought, procreated other beings that had both life and intelligence.^d These latter productions must be surely conceived, like the spirit of our modern writer above cited, to have kindled into cogitation, by having bodies unaccountably formed to strike out this flame, and without which they could have made no collisions of a finer nature, than what might cause the voice of thunder and the flashes of lightning to be heard and seen from them. Such were the ancient dogmata of Egypt,^e and it is not so great a wonder they were so, considering the low state of their rudiments of knowledge; but that any writer should think of offering sentiments of this sort in an age of philosophy, so clear and intelligible, as all, who know philosophy, are now versed in, is, I confess, to me most amazing.

But this, as I have said, was, before the age of Moses, the wisdom of Egypt. Atheistic, sine Deo,^f supposing

^a Essay on Spirit, 24, 25.

^b Ἐγένετο συγχρησικὴ ἢ πλεονεκτήσιον ἡλικίαν ΠΟΘΟΣ· αὐτὸ δὲ ἀρχὴ κτιστικῆς ἀντιπαραστάσεως αὐτοῦ δὲ ἐν ἐργασίᾳ τῇ αὐτῇ κτίσει. If the reader consult the place, he will see, that αὐτο refers to το πνευμα preceding. Euseb. Præp. Evang. c. 10. in principio.

^c Ἐπιδείκνυται δὲ αὐτῇ, καὶ τὴν αὐτὴν ποιεῖ διακρίσιν διὰ τὴν αὐτὴν πύρρην, καὶ πάντα συντηρεῖ καλῶς ἐν αὐτῇ ταῖς δὲ καὶ συγγραφαῖς, βροταὶ τὴν ἀντιπαραστάσιν καὶ ἀσφαλείαν. Euseb. ibid.

^d Ἦν δὲ τὴν ζωὴν ἔχοντα αἰσθησάμενοι, εἰς αὐτὴν ἐγένετο ζωὴ νοῦα. Ib. ibid.

^e Ταῦθ’ αἰρεῖται ἐν τῇ κοσμογονίᾳ γεγραμμένα Ταῦτα. Euseb. Præp. Evang. lib. i, c. 10.

^f See Connect. vol. ii, b. ix, p. 231. It may be thought surprising that it should, but philosophy seems to have begun upon these blind principles in all that the world had been made and governed without a God, by blind and unintelligent principles of nature; their worship and religion was according to it. But Moses, though learned in all the wisdom of the Egyptians,^a was also better instructed, and taught in opposition to the Egyptian literature, that, in the beginning, God created the Heavens and the Earth, and that without him was not any thing made that was made.^b and the God, whom Moses had thus declared, had most amazingly exalted his power against all the gods and religion of Egypt, by bringing his people, a nation, out of the midst of, and from under their subjection to, the Egyptians, by such signs and wonders, by such a mighty hand and stretched out arm; by such amazing miracles, and entire overthrow of all the strength of Egypt, that if it were asked of the days, that were past, since the day that God created man upon the Earth, no such thing as this great thing had ever been, nor any thing heard like it.^c Egypt was destroyed, greatly diminished and brought low; its king and armies overwhelmed and lost in the Red Sea;^k six hundred thousand slaves, besides women and children, had left this country, the Egyptians not being able in the least to oppose it; where now, and what, were the gods of Egypt? Their elementary powers, or sidereal influences? Was it not too plain to be contradicted, that there was a Power, who ruled in the Heavens, far mightier than they, who disposed of them as he pleased, and was able to do by himself whatsoever he pleased to have done in the Earth? Should not the Egyptians, who remained, turn and inquire, and seek after to serve this God? Would not state policy, which always has, and always will try to work its way, notwithstanding religion, have herein prevented them, and offered it to their consideration, whether, if they took this course, the Israelites might not come and take away their place and nation? It seems to have satisfied them countries. It appears to have been the old way of the first world, which perished in the flood; see Job xxii, 15, 16, 17. And in later ages, after the deluge, the Greeks, copying after the first rudiments of Egypt, long philosophized, without supposing that any intelligence had made or governed the world. Anaxagoras is said to have introduced this principle, πρῶτος τῆ ὕλης Νῦν ἔστω. Laert. in Anaxag.

^a Acts vii, 22.

^b Deut. iv, 32—34.

^c Gen. i, 1. See hereafter, ch. i.

^k Exod. x, 7; xii, 29, 30; xiv.

better, to correct their year, and reform their own system: and what more likely reform of their religion might they fall into, than now to consider, that unquestionably they had been wrong in supposing that elements governed the course of nature, without a personal agent ruling in them. But, conceiving that the Israelites had their God, they reputed that every nation had its own;¹ and looking back to their most early progenitors, who had been the glory of their times, and under whom had been laid all the foundation of their public and private happiness; they supposed them, after leaving the Earth, to have taken their orbs, to govern and influence the things below, in some element, star, or sphere above. The Greeks thus reputed that Astræa, after long labouring on Earth to do good to mortals, had at last left the world, to give her light from the constellation called Virgo.^m And we find it an ancient apophthegm of the Egyptians, that their most ancient kings, who had prosperously governed them, were divine;ⁿ and accordingly they now canonized these, and endeavoured to devote and consign themselves to their protection.

That mythology came in, upon this alteration of their theology, is obviously evident: for mingling the history of these men when mortals, with what came to be ascribed to them when gods, would naturally occasion it. And of this sort we naturally find the Mythoi told of them.^o I will go no farther at this time into this topic; although I might much enlarge upon it, by considering how mythology spread from Egypt into Phœnicia, was indeed a little checked by the inquiries of Sanchoniatho, but soon obtained again to be grafted upon his philoso-

¹ See Micah iv, 5; 2 Kings xxiii, 33, 34; 35.

^m Ἐπτα δ' ὑπεραστὶν, ταυτῇ δ' ἄρα βασίτεο χωρῇ.
Ἦχι σφ' ἑννυχὶν ὅτι φανταί ἀνδραγατοῖσι.

Aratus Phœn. ver. 134.

Thus the Egyptian heroes departed: τὰς δὲ ψυχὰς λαμβάνει ἄστρα. Vide Plut. de Iside et Osiri.

ⁿ Λέγεται δὲ καὶ Φαμμώσιος ἐν Αἰγύπτῳ τε φιλοσοφῶν διακρίσας ἀποδείξασθαι μάλιστα τὸν λεχθέντων, ὅτι πάντες ἀνδράποιοι βασιλευσύναι ὑποθῆναι. το γὰρ ἀρχὸν ἐν ἑκάστῳ καὶ πρῶτον θῆκεν ἐστὶν Plutarch. in Alexand.

^o The Egyptians having called their heroes by the names of their sidereal and elementary deities, added to the history of the life and actions of such heroes a mythological account of their philosophical opinions concerning the gods, whose names had also been given to such heroes, &c. See Connect. vol. ii, book viii, p. 203.

phy,² infected even the Israelites, when in their defection from their worship of the true God, they took up the tabernacle of Moloch, and the star of the god Remphan;³ how it travelled into Greece, where new fables were invented, and added to the more ancient ones; and these varied in different ages,⁴ until they grew too gross for philosophy to bear them, and occasioned those who speculated upon them to think many of them were only tales of poets to please and captivate the minds of the vulgar; although they saw in some a deeper and hidden meaning, which they endeavoured

² Ἐως πάλιν οἱ ἐπισημομενοι ἱερὸς χρόνος ὕμνον ἠδύλουν αὐτῇ [i. e. προδύσει beforegoing] ἀπικρυφαί, καὶ ὡς το, μυθῶδες ἀποκατάσταται. Euseb. Præp. Evang. lib. 1, c. 9

³ The Israelites' worship of the calf at Horeb was an imitation of the sacra of the Egyptians: for the Egyptians had consecrated animals to their sidereal and elementary divinities before the Israelites left them. But St. Stephen, Acts vii, 43, does not say that they worshipped Moloch and Remphan in the wilderness; but after the forty years in the wilderness were over, at the expiration of which they came into Canaan, they were again given up to worship these gods, who were hero-gods of some of the countries round about them.

⁴ The Πεδος of Tautus, the blind mechanical principle, so called by the Egyptian naturalists, became the Ἔρος of the mythologists; not meaning, by that word, Cupid, the blind god of love; for this god of love is not named, or is, if mentioned, called Ἴμμος in Homer, never Ἔρος or Ἐρως; and Hesiod also names him Ἴμμος, and describes him as belonging to Venus, and not as Ἔρος. For of Venus, or Cythrea, he says, Τῇ δ' Ἔρος ἁμαρτησὶ καὶ Ἴμμος ἴσπντο καλός.

Hesiod. Theog. v. 201.

Eros himself was not the blind and inconstant boy, unto whom later fables ascribed a precedency

Res solliciti plena timoris amor——

OVID.

over the fickle passion, which admits, as Terence tells us, “neque consilium neque modum,” &c.; but Eros was in the beginning from Chaos and Tellus, like Πεδος in Sanchoniatho; and is described,

— Ἔρος, ὃς καλλίστος ἐν ἀθανάτοισι θεοῖσι, λυσιμῶν, πάντων τε θεῶν, πάντων τ' ἀνθρώπων δαμνῆται ἐν συνθεσὶ νοῦν καὶ ἰσχυρῶτα βάλει.

Hesiod. Theog. v. 120.

Eros, in the natural system called Πεδος, was the principle that brought things into the harmony of order out of chaos or confusion; and the person, feigned by the fabulists to be this deity, was some eminent personage, who had excelled in ability to temper and moderate the minds of men: who had governed himself, and greatly taught others to have peace in themselves, and to live in peace and harmony with other persons. And that love should follow after, wherever such a person is acquainted with Venus, the goddess of all elegance and beauty, is no unreasonable supposition; but whether this mythos was more antique than Hesiod, I am not certain. I think we find nothing like it in Homer; who supposes Venus to be the goddess, who subjected unto love both mortals and immortals. Ἴμμος, whom Hesiod makes a person, is like φαῖος, in Homer, not a proper name, but generally, I think always, a common noun Homer's Iliad, ξ, ver. 197, &c.

to explore and interpret, as their traditions furnished tenets for the solution of them. But having hinted that, in fact, the writings of Egypt, in the age of Moses, were only plain narrations, as they conceived things to have been caused by operations of nature, exerting themselves without any intelligent being creating and directing them; and that Moses, contrary hereto, set forth as plainly, that there was a God, who created all things; that, in opposition hereto, the heathen nations, not acknowledging the one God, and yet compelled to think, that agencies without intelligence could not be the powers that ruled the world, set up many gods; and those such gods, that fable and mythology naturally arose from the institution of them; and consequently had not their rise until the system of Moses was thus opposed, nor until after his days. Although I cannot herein pretend to any certainty of demonstration; yet, I think, I may venture to say, that nothing, so probable as what I have offered, can be collected from any remains of antiquity, to contradict it.

SECTION II.

Drs. Burnet and Middleton's Objections against the Literal Interpretation of the Mosaic Account of the Creation, considered. How the History of Creation might be easily handed down from Adam to Moses.

THE objections, to which I have replied in the ensuing treatise, are taken chiefly from Dr. Burnet, sometime master of the Charter-house, who appears to have given us the substance of what can be offered against the literal interpretation. Other writers only copy after him; and Dr. Middleton, I think, does not improve any point he took from him. One, indeed, he states in a manner something different from Dr. Burnet, which I will here consider as Dr. Middleton represents it.

Dr. Middleton suggests, that it is not possible for any mortal, "to give an historical narration, to describe the particular manner, order, and time, in which, or the materials out of which, this world, and its principal inhabitant, man, were formed: that were any writer to pretend to it, we should apply to him what was said by God to Job, Where wast thou, when I laid the foundations of the Earth? declare, if thou hast understanding." And we should think the same of him, which Job confesseth of himself; that he had uttered what he understood not; things too wonderful for him, which he knew not." We should conclude, at once, that the whole, which the wisest of men could write upon the subject, must be the mere effect of fancy and imagination."—"From the nature of the story itself,

^a Job xxxviii, 4.

^b Chap. xlii, 3.

we should readily conclude, that no writer whatsoever could be so sufficiently informed, as to be able to give an historical narration of it; or could have authority enough to make it pass for such with any judicious reader."^b Dr. Middleton introduces the suggestion, not pretending directly to say, that Moses could not possibly, supposing him an inspired writer, give an authentic account of the facts related by him; but desiring to have the reader weigh and consider, what he would reasonably think of such facts, so related, if the relator was thought not to have a warrant of a real revelation from God, of the matters declared by him.^c What argument can be drawn from what he thus offers, seems to me to be very obscure. The apostle tells us, that through faith we understand that the worlds were framed by the word of God;^d where he evidently refers to the Mosaic history. That the worlds were not eternal, but were made by the power of God, may be demonstrated from the reason and nature of things; but that God spake the word, and they were made; commanded, and they were created;^e that they were not made, without the word spoken by him; not made by the immediate purpose of his will; but that he said, let them be, and they were so.^f as also that things did not instantly, all at once, take their being, as he might design them, but, in six days, were in their several orders framed and fashioned, day by day; such in every day, as he was pleased to appoint, when, before, there were none of them; this we may have no reason to believe,^g

^b See Middleton's Examinat. p. 128; Burnet's Archæol. p. 284.

^c Let us take a review of the story, as if it had been told us by Sanchoniatho. Middleton's Examinat. p. 128.

^d Heb. xi, 3.

^e Psal. cxlviii, 5; see xxxiii, 6, 9.

^f Gen. i, 3, 6, 11, 14, 20, 24, &c.

^g Nothing would give us so clear a view of the apostle's reasoning in the eleventh chapter to the Hebrews, as the carefully observing his distinction and definition of the word faith: faith, he tell us, ver. 1, is the substance of things hoped for, the evidence of things not seen. The word we translate substance is ὑπόστασις; how we came here to render it substance is not easy to say: as derived from ὑπο and στασις, it may signify what the logicians define substance, res subsistens et substantia accidentibus; but faith, an act of the mind, is no such substance. There is a passage in the New Testament, which may lead us to render this place more pertinently. St. Paul tells us, 2 Cor. ix, 4, of the ὑπερηφανία of his boasting—where we render the word, the confidence. The apostle, assuredly believed that his boasting was not groundless: and this assured belief he called ὑπόστασις. In this we have a clear meaning; faith is this assurance, an undoubting persuasion of the things hoped for. The apostle adds, that it is the evidence, ὑποκρίματα, what proves to us things not seen. We are apt but upon the authority of Moses's history. But shall we now ask the question? What if we set aside all consideration of the authority of Moses, and suppose what is written by him, as if written by Sanchoniatho, or any other ancient sage, who wrote uninspired, what he apprehended to be true, agreeably to his own sentiments of things? I answer: it will unquestionably follow, such sage not being infallible, if there be many as possible ways, in which the thing related by him, might have been done, besides the particular one he has adopted, we may have no reason to believe the particular declared by him, exclusive of all others. But I see no point hence gained towards infidelity; because the authority of the inspired writer, not being destroyed, but only, for argument sake, put aside out of the question; the foundation of God remaineth still sure; the authority of the inspired writer, whenever we look back to it, brings its force along with it, to assure us, that what is declared by such writer must be true, and ought to be believed by us. Our disputant, therefore, seems to me contriving rather how to beguile us, than substantially to confute us. To be desired, for argument sake, to lay aside the authority of sacred writ, to examine how far the truth of what is declared is such, that by reason alone, without other authority, we may prove it, is a specious proposal; but if, upon such examination, we find of the matter inquired after, that, had it not been authentically related to have been to be very indistinct in our notions of faith. In common speech we often take faith and knowledge the one for the other: the believing a thing upon good testimony, and the knowing it, are, in a general acceptation, reputed one and the same thing. But the Scriptures show us a real difference between faith and knowledge; which are not the same attainments; for we are exhorted to add the one to the other: add, says St. Peter, to your faith, knowledge; 2 Pet. i. 5. Faith is the believing things not seen, not known to ourselves, but declared to us, and believed upon testimony, that they are true. We are capable of information, without the testimony of others, two ways; by our senses, and by our understanding. Things eternal strike our senses, and we immediately know what impressions we receive of them; and we have an ability of mind to see and compare our thoughts of things, and to form a judgment what to conclude of them. In this sense, divers things, which, literally speaking, are invisible, may, in the language of St. Paul, be said to be clearly seen, being understood: Rom. i. 20. We have a knowledge, an intuition of them in our mind, from our clear reasonings upon them, without information from another: but faith is not of this sort; faith cometh by hearing, Rom. x. 17: it is the belief of what we do not know, of ourselves, but are assured is known by some other, and declared to us. Now if we would accurately distinguish between belief in general, and that faith which is our religious concern; in the one we believe things, which are testified to be known by men to be true; in the other we believe things, that are well testified to have been declared from God.

done in a particular manner, many other ways might be conceived, in which it might as reasonably have been effected; if we will not here re-assume the authority of the relation made to us, to give it its just weight to determine our belief, we cannot be said to be reasoned out of our faith; for we inconsiderately give it up, without any reason for our so doing.

For man to tell how human life began
Is hard; for who himself beginning knew?

MILTON'S Par. Lost. b. viii.

For man to pretend farther to speak of his own actual knowledge of things done and past, before he had any being, is, in the nature of the thing, impossible. But that Adam, during the space of a life of above nine hundred years,^h should recollect all that he had experienced from the time when he had a^k knowledge of his being; should conceive that he had revelations from the voice of GOD, of all that GOD thought fit to make known unto men; of his creation of the Heavens and the Earth, and of all the host and creatures of them; that Adam should frequently inculcate to his children all he thus knew; that authentic narrations of these things should have come down from before the flood to the posterities that were afterwards;ⁱ and that when Moses wrote his history, there should have been no such obsolete remains, as we now may be apt to think them; are things in themselves not at all improbable.

From Adam unto Abraham, considering the then duration of man's life, is, comparatively speaking, no greater length for even tradition, than from our father's grandfather unto us. Abraham lived to A. M. 2183,^k to see Jacob, the father of Joseph, about fifteen years old;^l Jacob had, from his youth up, been a diligent inquirer into, and observer of the hopes,^m and fear of his fathers,ⁿ and had, himself, many revelations from GOD.^o He came down unto Joseph, and lived with him in Egypt seventeen years before he died.^p He lived full ^h Adam lived nine hundred and thirty years, Gen. v, 5.

ⁱ There might have been among the faithful, before the flood, more express revelations than have come down to our times. Bishop of London's Dissert. II. p. 237; see Jude, ver. 14; see Connect. vol. i, b. i, p. 51.

^k Ibid; vol. ii, b. vi, p. 66.

^l Jacob was born A. M. 2168; see Connect. vol. ii, b. vii, p. 109.

^m Ibid.

^o See Gen. xxviii, xxxii, xxxv, &c.

ⁿ Gen. xxxi, 53.

^p Gen. xlvii, 28.

of the hope of the promises, and died in the belief of them,^a and left Joseph as fully embracing them, and persuaded of them, and testifying them unto his brethren, when he also died.^r Joseph lived to see his son Ephraim's children of the third generation;^s Moses was not lower than in the third generation from Levi;^t and the father of Moses must have been well known personally to Joseph. Put these things together, and we may reasonably admit all that had been believed from the beginning in this family, might have come down unto Moses so authentically testified, that all he wrote, from the creation to his own times, might unquestionably be received by his brethren and fathers as well warranted to be true. And, agreeably hereto, we find, that notwithstanding all the opposition he had from his Israelites, enough surely, during the whole forty years he had the charge of them,^u to make it plain, that they were not a people disposed implicitly to believe him; but rather, wherever they could find the least pretence for it, most zealously asserting a liberty to gainsay and contradict him; notwithstanding, in all he had related to them from the creation to his becoming their leader, we have not one hint, that they disbelieved it, even in any particular at all.

^a He prophesied of them to his sons very largely; Gen. xlviii, xlix, 29.

^r Gen. i, 24.

^s Ver. 23.

^t 1 Chron. vi, 1—3.

^u See Connect. vol. iii, b. xii, p. 202.

SECTION III.

Of the Promise of the Seed of the Woman; with a Refutation of Dr. Middleton's Observations against the Evangelical Account of the Genealogy of our Blessed Lord.

BUT, if I should rest this matter here, and suppose, that Moses's history of the Creation and Fall had no greater authority, than what can be given from its being reasonable to believe he might write it merely from the records of his fathers, I should most egregiously trifle. Let the conduct of Moses, what he said, what he wrote, and what he did, be only considerately examined; and it will appear beyond a possibility of contradiction, that God himself was, in many things, his infallible director.^a And if God was his director in other parts of his writings, what reason can we have to think he was not so from the beginning? In the history of the Fall, Moses writes so emphatically, that one person should be descended from the woman to be the capital subduer of the great enemy of mankind; he limited this person to be of the seed of Abraham,^b of Isaac,^c and of the tribe of Judah.^d Surely flesh and blood could not have assured him, fifteen hundred years beforehand, that thus it should be;^e yet the things which he thus foretold were accomplished in a miraculous manner, when the fulness of their time was come; and thus the prediction, and the fulfilling it, bear an undeniable testimony to each other. Nothing but the immediate power of God could have brought to pass the things foretold, in the manner

^a See Connect. vol. iii, b. xii, p. 194, &c.

^b See Connect. vol. iii, b. xii.; see also Gen. xxii, 18.

^c Gen. xxi. 12.

^d Chap. xlix, 10.

^e Matth. xvi. 17.

in which they were accomplished ; so that the particular accomplishment of them could be none other than the work of God. And as no one could foresee what God would thus do, but the Spirit of God;^f so no man beforehand could say of these things, that they should so be, unless it had been revealed from God.

Contrary to what the Scriptures inform us, and which I have had occasion to mention, that our Saviour was a descendant from David, Dr. Middleton would seem to argue, that he was not really of the tribe of Judah ; but rather of the tribe of Levi. I need not go through a long detail of what he offers, the whole of which may be comprised in a few particulars. 1. He observes, that Joseph, the husband of Mary the mother of Jesus, was only the reputed father of our Saviour ; he says our Saviour had really no share or participation of his blood.^g And yet, 2. That the Evangelists, whenever they deduce his pedigree, show that he was the son of David, by a line up from Joseph only.^h 3. That they never say, that Mary the mother of Jesus, through whom alone his real genealogy could come from David, was descended of David.ⁱ 4. That their silence herein seems to make it probable, that Mary was not of such descent. 5. That Mary is observed to be the cousin of Elizabeth,^k and that Elizabeth being of the daughters of Aaron,^l Mary, her cousin, was most probably of the same tribe, namely, of the tribe of Levi, and not of the tribe of Judah.^m

The answer to this is, 1. The Evangelists are particularly careful to observe, that Jesus was not descended from Joseph his reputed father.ⁿ 2. Their deducing Joseph's pedigree from David, was merely to remove the prejudices of the Jews ; for they at first would look no farther than to consider Jesus as the carpenter's son,^o and were scandalized at the meanness of his birth ;^p thought him a fellow of so low an extraction, that there was no saying whence he was.^q Contrary to these, their prevailing sentiments, the Evangelists, at the same time

^f 1 Cor. ii, 11.

^g Remarks on the Variations in the Evangelists, p. 29.

^h Ibid.

ⁱ Ibid. p. 30.

^k Luke i. 36.

^l Ver. 5.

^m It needs not be remarked, that David was of the tribe of Judah.

ⁿ See Matth. i, 18—25 ; Luke i, 35 ; iii, 23.

^o Matth. xiii, 55.

^p Ibid.

^q John ix, 29.

not concealing or disguising the truth; that Jesus really was of God; that Joseph was only his supposed father; nevertheless took care to show, that were his genealogy, as they imagined, to be reckoned by or through Joseph, even thus, also, he would have been the son of David. This would have been the case, either of the two ways in which the Jews counted their pedigrees; in one of which they reckoned the son to belong to the parent who begat him; in the other, where a man died without issue,^a and his brother, or next of kin, married the widow, and raised up seed to the deceased, the seed raised up was counted not to the real father who begat him, but to the deceased, who died without issue.^b This is allowed to have occasioned the difference between St. Matthew's and St. Luke's genealogies;^c both which considered, were evidence to the Jews, that although they were obstinate and would reckon our Saviour's descent through Joseph; yet even here, count which way they would, the genealogy would come up to David. But, 3. Why was not the descent of Mary, of whom alone our Saviour's genealogy could truly come from David, as expressly said to be from that patriarch, as Joseph's? I answer, it was. St. Luke tells us, in recording the angel's salutation of Mary, that the son to be born of her should have the throne of his father David; so that he recognizes David to be the progenitor of Jesus. He immediately after allows, that this child was to be born of Mary without her knowing man:^d if, then, he had not before hinted of the child thus to be born, that by his mother he was a descendant of David, his narration would evidently be a contradiction to itself. But the Evangelist had sufficiently guarded against this, in plainly telling us, before he begins the salutation, that the angel Gabriel was sent to a virgin of the house of David.^e The words, espoused to a man, whose name was Joseph, inserted between virgin—and of the house of David,^f may be a parenthesis, indicating, that of the house of David should not be attributed to Joseph. For, as I have observed, the sense and argument of the

^a Vide quæ sup.

^b Matth. i; Luke iii.

^c Deut. xxv, 5.

^d Luke i, 32, 35.

^e Chap. xxv, 6.

^f Chap. i, 27.

^g The words of the text are, προς παρθένον, μεμνησμένην ἀνδρὸς ἐκ οἴκου Δαβὶδ. An obstinate critic may fight this battle, but I apprehend that ἐκ οἴκου Δαβὶδ belongs to παρθένον.

whole context must lead us to think otherwise; as, indeed, does the manner of the expression likewise. For, as the genealogies of the Jews were deduced in the male line, it is most reasonable to think, that if the Evangelist had here intended what he said to be understood of Joseph, his expression would have been, as he elsewhere says of him, of the house and lineage of David; but women, though not said to be of the lineage, being with propriety recorded to be of the house of their fathers,^b the expression concurs with the reason of the narration, that the Evangelist herein spake of Mary only. But, 4. Why was not this point more frequently, more clearly, more largely, insisted upon? I answer; because it was a point doubted by none, but allowed by all. It was, St. Paul tells us, προδηλον, manifest, without controversy, that our Lord sprang of the tribe of Judah; how sprang of that tribe? by his father Joseph? This the apostles denied; it must then be thus undisputed by the descent of Mary only. For, 5. As to what is said of Elizabeth being cousin to Mary, and therefore, Elizabeth being of the tribe of Levi,^d that Mary was also of that tribe—; this way of arguing—for any one of letters to make use of it, is most indefensible trifling. It can have weight only with a mere English reader, who possibly may be deceived by the common acceptation of our English word cousin. The word used by the Evangelist is συγγενης;^e St. Paul uses the same, where he tells us of his great heaviness and continual sorrow of heart for his brethren, his kinsmen according to the flesh, his συγγενων κατα σαρα.^f Who they were, that stood in this relation to him, he informs us very clearly. They were not only those of the tribe of Benjamin, his own tribe; but they were all the Israelites,^g all to whom pertained the adoption, the glory, and the covenants, and the giving of the law; the promises, unto which all their twelve tribes hoped to come.^h It is most evident, then, that the relation specified between Mary and Elizabeth, in the word cousin, or συγγενης, did not at all mean, that they were both of the same tribe; but that they were children of the same people; both of them Israelites, of one and the same stock, namely, of the stock of Abraham.^k The reader may easily perceive, that in this argument Dr. Middleton descended below every notion we can have of a man of learning, to invent an expedient to puzzle (to such readers as might not be able to consider the texts cited by him, in their original language) the most clear and allowed truths concerning our Saviour, of which he must have known no real argument could be formed to contradict them. And to this he descended (what induced him I will not take upon me to determine) at a season of life, when he stood upon the very threshold of immortality.

^a Luke ii, 4.^c Heb. vii, 14.^e Ver. 36. Ἐλισαβετ ἡ συγγενὴς σου.^f Rom. ix, 3.^h Chap. ix, 4.^b Psal. xlv, 10; Gen. xxiv, 10. et in al. loc.^d Luke i, 5.^g Chap. xi, 1.^h Acts xxvi, 7.

^k Acts xiii, 26.

SECTION IV.

The Necessity and Certainty of a Divine Revelation; and the Impossibility of discovering the Things mentioned in the Sacred Writings, by any Efforts of Human Reason.—Of the various Readings of the Old and New Testaments; and the Integrity of Divine Revelation.

THE principles, which I have made the foundation of the following treatise, are, that human reason was not originally a sufficient guide for man, without some express revelation from God; and that positive precepts given by God, however we may be apt to conclude of them, from their not appearing intrinsically of real moment to the rectitude of our lives, are not therefore, unreasonable and vain. The professed opposers of revelation must be herein unanimously against me; and some valuable writers, not apprehending a necessity, though allowing the expediency of a revelation, do not entirely think with me in these particulars. The reader will find their way of reasoning considered in the following pages.* All I would here offer is, that if authority was of moment, I might cite even Dr. Middleton for me in these points; for it is obvious, that he knew there might be found “the testimony of all ages; the experience of all the great reasoners of the heathen world, that reason (human reason alone) had not light enough to guide mankind in a course of virtue and morality,” that there was “such an universal conviction and experience,” he says, “of the insufficiency of reason, as seemed to be the voice of nature disclaiming it, as a guide, in the case of religion.”^b In like manner; treating of positive precepts, he deduces an argument from what may be observed of God’s works; that “the wise of all ages have, from the excellency of God’s works, collected the excellency of his nature. Yet in those works all still agree, that there are some particulars, not only whose nature, but whose use or reason of existence cannot be discovered by the most curious searchers into nature; nay, some things, which, considered separately, appear even noxious to the rest; all which, though not understood, are yet reasonably presumed to be good and perfect in their several kinds, and subservient to the general beauty and excellency of the whole system.”^c He proceeds: “’Tis full as unreasonable to charge all positive precepts, supposed to come from GOD, whose use and relation to morality we cannot comprehend, to fraud and imposture; as, in the visible works of God, to impute every thing we do not understand, or even every thing that seems hurtful, to the contrivance of some malicious power opposite to the divine nature—. As, on the one hand, we do not exclude from the catalogue of GOD’s works, all those particulars, in which we cannot trace the marks of divine wisdom: so, on the other, we cannot exclude from the body of his laws, those few injunctions, which seem not to have impressed on them the legible characters of morality.”^d

* See chap. v.

In examining the text of Moses, I have proposed to the learned reader’s disquisition, whether in the 19th and 20th verses of the second chapter of Genesis, two words, nepesh chajah, have not been, by the mistake of transcribers, removed in the text from one line into another.* The mistake is so easy to be made, and the true and clear meaning of the place rendered so indisputable, by allowing such transposition, that, I apprehend, what I have suggested, may, perhaps, carry its own vindication. If I had the opportunity, of which a learned author is making a very commendable use,^f to search such manuscript copies as we have of the Hebrew Bible, I should very carefully have examined whether any can be found, which may justify my supposition. I could ^b Letter to Dr. Waterland, edit. 8, p. 49, 50.

^d Ibid. p. 62.

^f See Kennicott’s State of the printed Hebrew text of the Old Testament.

name other texts, into which I would make a like inquiry: I will mention two: one is the latter part of the 24th verse of the forty-ninth chapter of Genesis. The inquiry should be, whether the words now printed ישראל רעה אבן, are not in any manuscript written בשם רעה אבן ישראל? The supposed difference is in one letter only; whether the first letter in the first word be a mem or a beth; a difference so small, that a reader, not very attentive, may not see it; the least dash of the pen, added or omitted (the letters are so similar,) may make it the one or the other.* The other text is, Psal. cv, 28; He sent darkness and made it dark: in our Bibles the translation of the latter part of the verse is, and they rebelled not against his word. The old version, still used in our common prayer, is, and they were not obedient unto his word. The two versions evidently contradict each other: the original words are printed ולא מרו דברו.⁵ It would, I think, be of no moment to consider how the translators came thus to differ; the reader may see it by consulting the critics:^h I do not find any good way proposed for bringing them to an agreement. Both the versions cannot be true; and it is, therefore, possible, that neither may. I would hereupon inquire, whether what we make two words לא מרו, and read loa maru, were not originally written in one word לאמרו, to be read leamoru, the literal translation of the verse to be thus; He sent darkness, and made it dark, and by his speaking his word.† In this correction we do not alter a letter: we only suppose what are now read in two words to be really but one, and we vowel the words to sound their syllables but very little differently in the one case or the other.ⁱ But the fact alluded to being, that God said unto Moses, stretch out thine hand toward Heaven; that there may be darkness over the land of Egypt—and Moses stretched forth his hand toward Heaven,

* This alteration is not authorised by any of the MSS. collated either by Kennicott; or De Rossi. EDIT.

⁵ The word is printed in the text דברו, but the marginal reference tell us it should be דברו.

^h Vide Poli Synops. in loc.

† Neither is this emendation authorised by any of the collations, already referred to. EDIT.

ⁱ לא מרו. We read לאמרו. We must punctuate the words instead of לא מרו.

and there was a thick darkness in all the land of Egypt:^k and the intention of the Psalmist being to ascribe these miracles most expressly to the word of God: He spake, says he, and there came divers sorts of flies, and lice in all their coasts:^l again, He spake, and the locusts came, &c.: both the manner of the Psalmist, and the clear meaning of the place, seem to lead us to the reading for which I am inquiring.

I am sensible that some very pious English readers may hastily take offence at every liberty of this sort; and will be ready to ask; May not a pretender to learning, at this rate, make what he will of our Bible? I answer, not at all; and may give a very plain view, as it were, of the whole of this matter. Suppose our English tongue had been originally written like the Hebrew, without inserting the vowels, which give us the sound of the syllables. Let us consider the following paragraph, he that taketh heed to the commandment offereth a peace-offering.^m It may be seen, that if these words were to be written without vowels, the words peace-offering might be thus characterized, p c f fr ng. Suppose, through some early mistake of transcribing, all printed copies had both divided erroneously these letters into words, and had not put the proper vowels under their respective letters; suppose the letters p c f which make one word, had the vowels, being ie e, put under them, as I have marked them; ie to be read between p and c, and e after c, a final letter; so as to read this word piece. Suppose the first f was taken to be a word by itself, and o put under it, to read it of; suppose r n g were vowelled, as I have underlined them; i to be sounded after r, e to be the final letter, the word to be thus read, fringe; would any one rest satisfied to read the sentence, he that taketh heed to the commandment, offereth a piece of fringe? and should any one show, that of is, with the following letters, but one word, and that the letters might be so vowelled, as to read pc f fr ng, a peace-offering; would not the clear sense of the place vindicate this to be the true reading, and evince that the other, of what date soever, and how much soever followed, must be an error? And would ^k Exod. x, 21, 22.

^m Eccclus. xxxv, 1.

^l Psal. cv, 31, 34.

any reasonable man be ready to think of him, who should offer so expressive an emendation, that it might be dangerous, lest he should make the English tongue speak whatever he had a mind to, and not its certain and true meaning? I do not intend to insinuate that the case I have put exactly resembles either of our translations of the Psalmist, above cited: it certainly does not, neither of our translations being in themselves absurd. And the Hebrew tongue is not so various in its number of words, so far similar, that such instances can occur in it, as may be in our English, if so written. But, although in the Hebrew the vowels put under the words in points, may be necessary to pronunciation, to teach or remind us to give the word such syllables, and each syllable such sound, as the points put under them direct; yet, as such points were not originally in the sacred pages;^a so neither are they necessary for any one who tolerably understands the language to ascertain the true meaning of a text. For, if a word happen to be wrong punctuated, it may mislead him; and, if it be not punctuated at all, the letters of the word, and the context, will better direct him to see the true meaning of the text, without any false bias to divert him from it.

The talking of various readings, transpositions of words, additions in some copies of the Scriptures, omissions in others, are, indeed, matters so managed by the artful, who desire to perplex and deceive, as to raise terrible appearances or apprehensions in the minds of the well-meaning, but unwary and unlearned. And I know of no writer, who has aimed at this point more unfairly than the late Lord Bolingbroke; who roundly tells us, that "the Scriptures are come down to us broken and confused, full of additions, interpolations, and transpositions, made, we neither know when, nor by whom; and such, in short, as never appeared on the face of any other book on whose authority men have agreed to rely."^b In another place, he says the Scriptures are "extracts of histories, not histories; extracts of genealogies, not genealogies;"^c and, in a third place, that "it would not be hard to show, upon great inducements of probability, that the law and the history were far from being blended together, as they now stand in the Pentateuch, even from the time of Moses down to that of Esdras."¹ It would not be decent in me to say how palpably untrue all these assertions are. The two last I considered very largely, sometime ago; and I hope, with the utmost freedom and impartiality.² And that the sacred books are far from having had a worse preservation than other ancient writings, has been unanswerably shown by a more able hand, as far as concerns the New Testament;³ and should Dr. Kennicott proceed as he began, and collate the manuscripts and printed copies of the Old Testament, we should see the event come out in the one case, as it is known to have done in the other.* Dr. Bentley would have told Lord Bolingbroke, upon what he says of additions, omissions, interpolations, variations, &c. in the Scriptures, "that it filled him with disdain to see such common stuff brought in with an air of importance." All his lordship offers has been before offered even by the lowest creatures of the unbelieving tribe; even the assertion upon which his lordship seems to plume himself, that "the Scriptures would have been preserved entirely in their genuine purity, had they been entirely dictated by the Holy Ghost;"⁴ and they have been answered over and over.⁵

^a See what the very learned Dean Prideaux has written at large upon this subject, Connect. part i, book v.

^b Of the Study of History, letter iii, p. 95, 96.

^c Id. p. 102.

*These are the kings, that reigned in the land of Edom, before there reigned any king over the children of Israel.*⁶ It is commonly observed concerning this paragraph, that it could not be written until after there had been a king in Israel; i. e. until after the times of Saul, and consequently that it was not written by Moses. Now suppose that we can in nowise find out by whom it was written; admit that some private owner of a manuscript Pentateuch wrote it in the margin of his manuscript, as a remark of his own; that a copier of ¹ Of the Study of History, letter iii, p. 100.

² Preface to Connect. vol. iii, p. 22, &c.

³ Philoleuth. Lipsiens. part i, p. 92—114.

⁴ Dr. Kennicott has completed his task; and a learned foreigner, De Rossi, has greatly extended the inquiry; and the result is as creditable to the cause of divine revelation, as Dr. Shuckford had conjectured. See Dr. Kennicott's Hebrew Bible, 2 vols. fol. Oxon. 17—, and the Variaz Lectiones Vet. Testamenti, by J. B. De Rossi, 4 vols. 4to, Parmæ, 1784—88. Edit.

⁵ Lord Bolingbroke's Letter, iii, p. 95.

⁶ See Phil. Lipsien.

⁷ Gen. xxxvi, 31.

such manuscript carelessly wrote it into the text of his transcript; is there any thing material in this interpolation? must not the learned see that the scripture is perfect without it? and can the unlearned see any detriment in having the observation? Of this sort are the interpolations so formidably talked of. They are very few in number, though said, at random, to be so many. And whatever apprehensions may be raised in the minds of the unlearned about them; nothing is more easy to be shown, than that no point of our religion is materially affected by them at all.

“But there are omissions in some texts of Scripture—.” They who say this should produce their instances, deal openly and fairly with the world; let us see of what nature their objection is, that we may not be amused and alarmed, where there is no reason. I will therefore give an instance or two, that even the unlearned reader may judge of this particular. In the xiith chapter of Exodus, ver. 40, we read, Now the sojourning of the children of Israel, who dwelt in Egypt (I would rather translate the Hebrew words, which they sojourned) in the land of Egypt, was four hundred and thirty years. It is plain, that the Israelites were not four hundred and thirty years in Egypt; for they came into Egypt A. M. 2298,^γ and their exit was A. M. 2513;^δ so that their sojourning in Egypt was but two hundred and fifteen years. But the Septuagint gives us this text as follows: Now the sojourning of the children of Israel, which they sojourned in the land of Egypt, and in the land of Canaan, was four hundred and thirty years.^α the words here added are, and in the land of Canaan. Now Abraham came into Canaan to sojourn there A. M. 2083:^β if we count hence to the exit, we find it exactly four hundred and thirty years. What difficulty now can we have, even supposing that no Hebrew manuscript, now extant, has the words, which we render, and in the land of Egypt;^ε will not any reasonable inquirer think, that these words were in ^γ See Connect. vol. ii, book vii, p. 143.

^δ Book ix, p. 275.

^α Ἡ δὲ κατοικία τῶν υἱῶν Ἰσραὴλ, ἐν καταστάσει ἐν γῇ Αἴγυπτος καὶ ἐν γῇ Χαναάν, ἦν ὡσεὶ ἑκατὸν τριάκοντα. Vers. Septuagint.

^β Connect. vol. i, book v, p. 168.

^ε I ought not to omit, that in the Samaritan Pentateuch the Hebrew words are found, which we render and in the land of Egypt.

the text from which the Septuagint translated, and that they really belong to the Hebrew text, though the manuscript copies we have may, by some carelessness of copiers, have omitted them? The observation of our learned critic is a very just one: "If emendations are true, they must have been once in some manuscripts, at least in the author's original. But it will not follow, that because no manuscript now exhibits them, none more ancient ever did."^d

No one can doubt but that Moses, in the xxxiii chapter of Deuteronomy, blessed the twelve tribes, every tribe particularly, according to his blessing; and yet we are said to have no one copy of the original text, no one version in general, which mentions the tribe of Simeon at all; the Alexandrian manuscript of the Septuagint, only inserting the name Simeon in the 6th verse, writes that verse, in that one word, differently from all other copies.^e Here then is an omission which cannot be supplied from any Hebrew manuscript: will it therefore follow that there is no omission? No version that we now have amends this omission, except one copy of one translation.* Will it follow, that originally all versions had not the name of Simeon? Is it not apparently more reasonable to conclude, that the Alexandrian manuscript was transcribed from some copy of some more ancient manuscript which had the word Simeon; that the original manuscript of the Septuagint translated from a Hebrew copy, which had it likewise; and that the word Simeon was originally in the Hebrew text; however, through some carelessness of transcribers, it came to be dropped, and to occasion great numbers of copies and versions to be without it? There is room in all cases of this nature for reasonable consideration and inquiry: and I dare venture to affirm, that there is no Scripture difficulty, of which a serious inquirer, able to make a proper search for it, may not find a proper solu-

^d Phil. Lips. p. 106.

^e The Hebrew text is,

ויהי ראובן ואל יסח ויהי סכר

The common Septuagint version is Ζητα 'Ρεβη και μη αποθανηται και ισω σολυς
 " αρεθμω: The Alexandrian manuscript is, Ζητα 'Ρεβη και μη αποθανηται. Και Συμεων ισω σολυς " αρεθμω.

* Several copies of the Septuagint, besides the Alexandrian, have Συμεων. See them in Dr. Holmes's edition of the Pentateuch, cum variis lectionibus, fol. Oxon. 1798. Edit.

tion. As for those, who have not literature for this examination; if they read the Scriptures with a careful design to be made wise unto salvation, they will soon know enough, not to be led away blindly by persons, who perhaps know little more than what may just enable them to impose upon and deceive others in points, of which, whether they can say correctly, what is the right or the wrong, may be of no material moment.

The learned have raised a difficulty about a text in St. John's First Epistle, whether in chap. v, verses 7 and 8, for there are three that bear record (in Heaven, the Father, the Word, and the Holy Ghost: and these three are one. And there are three that bear witness in Earth,) the Spirit, and the water, and the blood, and these three agree in one—; whether the words written in Italics, are in some manuscripts; and in what particular copies they are not? The reader may see the whole of what can be offered upon this point in Dr. Mills,* and will probably think there is nothing in the whole, which will greatly affect him, when he considers, that what is here said of the Father, the Son, and the Holy Ghost, that they are one, is a doctrine to be deduced from various other texts of Scripture. And, if I may be permitted, I would inquire, whether it may not perhaps be shown to be not a jot or tittle more, than what even Moses had declared fifteen hundred years before the writing any books of the New Testament were at all thought of.

The 39th verse of the thirty-second chapter of Deuteronomy has, in our English version of it, these words, I, even I am He, and there is no God with me. I would here observe, 1. That the Hebrew text is, Ani Ani Hua, ve ein Elohim nimmadi:[†] 2. There is no word in the text answering to the English word even, nor is there any verb expressed in the text, no word for am, nor for is. 3. That Ani Ani is not the usual way of expressing I even I in Hebrew. It should rather have been Ani hinneni, if I even I had been intended. I even I do bring

* Vide Millii Testam. Nov. ad fin. Epist. primæ Sancti Johannis.—Several writers, since Dr. Mills, have published for and against the authority of the above verse. The verse is in no authentic MS. but the Codex Montfortii, in Trinity College, Dublin: but the doctrine itself is in almost every page of the Old and New Testaments. EDIT.

† The Hebrew words are,

אני אני הוה ואין אלהים עמו

a flood, is not Ani Ani, but Ani hinneni.^h For these reasons, ought we not to translate the words of Moses literally? Ani Ani Hua ve ein Elohim nimmadi;ⁱ I, I, He, but not Gods with me. The verb substantive, here understood, speaks itself to be, there are: I and I, and He, are three personal pronouns: and the whole sentence is verbally rendered, there are I, and I, and He,^k but not Gods with me. It was a doctrine before taught by Moses, that there were more persons than one called Jehovah, God, whom no man hath seen at any time, nor can see; and the LORD who had appeared unto Abraham.^l And yet he strictly charges Israel to hear, i. e. to observe it to be their faith, that Jehovah, their Elohim, was one Jehovah.^m May we not suppose him in the text before us, declaring in the terms of the same faith, that the three persons he here speaks of were not Elohim, Gods in the plural number;ⁿ for to use the words of Scripture, they were one Jehovah.

If what I have thus offered may be admitted, it must surely be a vain labour for any to endeavour to strike the words which they desire to contest out of the New Testament; unless they could really put the doctrine intended in them out of the Old. But such is the harmony of Scripture, that nothing in it is really ιδίας επιλυσως,^o of a private interpretation, so peculiarly differing from all other Scriptures, as not to have such a coincidence with them, as may warrant it to be true. Rather, oftentimes, what the prophets of a later age have said, when considered, discovers its having such a foundation in

^h See Gen. vi, 17. Behold I even I do bring a flood—is אני הנני מביא אה-המבול

and it is by some thought that הנני here should be written הנה without the suffix pronoun, as in Exod xxxi, 6.

אני אני הוא ואני אלהים עמדי

mecum Dii at non Ille Ego Ego

A like expression, I think, is found in Isaiah xliii, 25.

אנכי אנכי הוא מזה פשעך and in a like signification. It was God, who is anochi, anochi, hua; or ani, ani, hua, that blotted out the transgressions of his people.

^k The comma in English supplies the copulative, which cannot but be understood in the Hebrew, though not inserted.

^l See Connect. vol. ii, book ix, p. 244.

^m See Deut. vi, 4; Connect. vol. ii, book ix, p. 244. The Hebrew words in Deut. vi, 4, are, והיה אלהים יחא אחד ⁿ The word אלהים is often used as a noun plural in Scripture; see חלוצי 2 Sam. vii, 22; see Deut. vi, 13, &c.

^o 2 Pet. i, 20.

what had been said before, though the speakers had evidently no intention of speaking one from the other; that herein appears some signature that what is said is of God.^p

There remain to be considered some other variations of copies of the sacred books from one another. The books of the New Testament have, it seems, been collated with so scrupulous an exactness, that we have it marked as a various reading, if there be in different copies, or versions from copies, or in citations of texts by subsequent writers for near five hundred years, the least difference of writing, the smallest particle or article of speech; or if the order and collocation of words minutely differ, though the meaning is exactly, and most clearly the same; and with all this indefatigable preciseness, the variations in the New Testament only are said to be thirty thousand.^q But let us consider: can we think of any book, if it had been published so many years, and there were so many different copies of it, translations into different tongues, citations made from it in divers languages, and all these were to be ransacked, and it were remarked as a different reading, wherever the word and was written in three letters, or in the character &, this was written ⁊, that ⁊, therefore ⁊, &c. with many other such minutenesses; might not abundance of variations beyond number be amassed in this manner? Our learned critic assures us, upon his own knowledge, that there is hardly a classic author, which, if thus examined, would not afford more various readings than the Scriptures.* I may perhaps be allowed to say very safely, that of the thirty thousand variations in the New Testament, not near one in a thousand are in themselves worthy to be in the least regarded; though the learned and laborious do well to collect them, that those who know how to use them may have full materials to show, that all the fancies and surmises, of which the opposers of religion are ever pregnant in their imagination, are rash, groundless, frivolous, and vain. And, respecting the few that are of any ^p 2 Pet. i, 20.

^q See Phileleuth Lips.

* We might gather many of this kind of variations from books printed in the old black letter, wherein are numbers of abbreviations different from any now in use.

[†] Phil. Lips. p. 96, 97.

moment in either the Old Testament or the New; so far as my little inquiry has been able to proceed, I never could see one, but such an account may be given of it as will show that it neither deprives me of the instruction of any page of the sacred writings, nor destroys any article of the faith, nor alters or makes void any one duty of our religion. And I may safely affirm to those who of themselves cannot find out these particulars, or, if pointed out, are not able readily to judge of them; that although I would not prevent any from endeavouring to add knowledge to their faith, in whatever points they are able; being fully satisfied, that no freedom of inquiry, justly conducted, can be of disservice to the truth, provided we do not give ourselves up to be carried to and fro, with every wind of what seems new to us, beyond what we understand: I say, even the lowest of our people, who can only read, mark, learn, and digest our Scriptures as our English version offers them to us, to gather from them that doctrine, reproof, correction, and instruction in righteousness, which they plainly afford us, will find, that they can want nothing more to make them wise unto salvation: and consequently, how obvious to them will be the answer long ago returned to such a surmise, as is offered by Lord Bolingbroke? That "if the Scriptures were entirely the word of GOD, all of them absolutely given by inspiration, they would have been as absolutely preserved from all variations of copies, and mistakes of transcribers."

The answer is: What a scheme would these men make? What worthy rules would they prescribe to providence? That in millions of copies transcribed in so many ages and nations, all the scribes or notaries, many of whom, perhaps, made it their trade and livelihood to transcribe, should, whenever they wrote out Scripture, be infallible and impeccable; that their pens should spontaneously write true, or be supernaturally guided, though the scribes were nodding and dreaming. Now, to what purpose should we require this miracle; to keep clear and indubious the articles of our faith, or the necessary rules for our moral lives? No: in all these we are safe, notwithstanding any imperfections of copies; but merely to silence every doubt and whim, which no man truly religious, drawn by the cords of a man, by rational, ingenuous, and moral motives, will have, but may be captiously taken up by the impiety and folly of such as will be pleased with any thing, which only seems to be an objection against the Scriptures.¹

Upon the whole, variations of Evangelists in their accounts of the same facts, the conduct of this or that particular apostle, and likewise some little difference in copies of the Scriptures, are topics, which designing men, with very little examination and knowledge of what they confidently affirm, are extremely apt to take up; one saying just what another had said before him, only perhaps with a little more freedom and false assurance; not considering how fully all they say, or can say upon these topics, has been answered over and over. To writers thus determined, of saying the same things there is no end. All we can do, is to remind the candid and sincere, that the points so industriously propagated, have been fully, freely, and impartially considered by the ablest writers, not only of that profession, which it is become a fashion, with some, most unmercifully to speak against; but by gentlemen also of inquiry and impartiality; of ability and character, which no approbation of mine can add to. And, both from what they have particularly written,* and from what others have more in general considered upon these subjects; it may be sufficiently known, even by the plainest reader, that the providence of God has permitted the Scriptures to have the lot of all other writings which have passed through the hands of men. Even the writers of these books have sometimes been permitted to differ, both in conduct and in matters related by them, so as to make it evident, that there has been no confederacy of men to make the Scriptures what they are. But there is in the sacred pages, in the New Testament, a morality so perfect, that it cannot be conceived, humanly speaking, that the first preachers of the gospel, men of such low parts and education as they were, could in all points, without any one error,² have thus taught the way of God in perfect truth. There is a forgiveness of sin, exactly what is necessary for man;³ and yet determinately indulging no one human corruption whatsoever.⁴ There is an atonement for sin, such as no invention of man would have proposed;⁵ and yet so foretold, and prefigured from the ² It would have weight with any serious examiner to consider, that although the wise heathens endeavoured, by the light of reason, to trace out the lines of moral duty, and many excellent rules were given by many of them, and perhaps a careful collector might form a good system from them all; yet, as they were but men, so every one of them had their mistakes. But herein there is a difference; there are no defects, no one error in the morality of the gospel. The first publishers of it were mean, illiterate, unlearned men; and yet they gave us moral precepts, all pure, all unmix'd: no conceits, or false rules; nothing tending to the by-ends of any man, or any party; no taint of fancy or superstition; no footsteps of pride or vanity; no touch of ostentation and ambition; but all sincere. Nothing too much, nothing wanting; but the whole is so perfect and complete, and tends so absolutely to the good of mankind, that all would be happy, even in this world, if all would sincerely believe and practise it.

¹ See Phil. Lips. p. 112, 113.

* No reader, that would judge of these subjects, should omit to consider and examine carefully Mr. West's Observations on the Resurrection of Christ: and another treatise entitled, Observations on the Conversion and Apostleship of St. Paul.—To which should be added, the Bishop of Landaff's Apology for the Bible; and above all, Paley's Evidences of the Christian Religion.
Estr.

³ The Scriptures conclude every man to be under sin, Gal. iii, 22, affirming that there is no man that sinneth not, 1 Kings vii, 46. And not only the Scriptures testify that we every one know this ourselves, that if we say we have no sin, we deceive ourselves, and the truth is not in us, 1 John i, 8, but the very heathens allow it. "Quisque innocentem se dicit, respiciens testem non conscientiam," says Seneca, de Ira, lib. i. The question then will occur, how can man be justified with God? Job xxv, 4. A forgiveness of sin must be necessary, without which no soul can be saved.

⁴ The point I would here offer to the reader's consideration is, whether, if the pardon of sin offered in the gospel had been the contrivance of men, it would not, like what human contrivance is for inventing, have offered indulgences for particular failings; and whether, therefore, on the contrary, considered truly as it is, a doctrine which favours no one foible of human nature, admits no thought of our continuing in any one sin, that grace may abound, Rom. vi, 1, as there can be no deceit where there is no error proposed to us; a pardon of sin, thus circumstanced, does not approve itself to be not only grace but truth, John i, 17.

⁵ The sentiments, which the inquisitive heathens had upon this subject, were as follow. They agreed that philosophy was useful to correct what might be wrong in us. "Est profecto animi disciplina philosophia?" Cic. Tusc. Disput. lib. iii, c. 3. They did not see how they could purge or cleanse the conscience from sins which had been committed. All the known rites of ablu-tion they knew to be unphilosophical: "Animi labe nec diuturnitate evanescere nec annibus ullis elui potest." Cic. de Leg. lib. ii, c. 10. They did not think that repentance could make them whole. "Quem permittit peccasse pene est innocens," is, I think, said by the same writer, who does not wholly acquit upon repentance. They had notions that there might be purgations of sin in another world. Thus Virgil speaks of souls departed,

"— exerceantur pœnis, veterumque malorum
Supplicia expendunt: alius panduntur inanes
Suspensæ ad ventos: aliis sub gurgite vasto
Infectum cluitur scelus, aut exuritur igni:
Quisque suos patimur manes.—"

ÆNEID, lib. vi.

The construction in the last verse is, I think, clear and easy; though both our commentators and dictionaries seem to make it difficult. Manes signifies our spirits departed out of this life. It is the accusative case, signifying the part of us affected; like doleo caput, I have pain in my head; patimur manes is, beginning, throughout all ages, that we must think it hath been appointed by God. In the Old Testament, there is the very same morality, though not so fully explained, and enforced to perfection; in which He who came not to destroy the law and the prophets, but to fulfil them, taught with authority, how what they read in the law was to be understood, to direct both the thoughts of their heart and the actions of their life. There is in it a series of legal institutions, such as we have good reason to think no legislator, from human wisdom, would have thought of or contrived;^b yet in many points so plain a schoolmaster to bring those to whom they were given unto Christ;^c so clearly referring to things that were to come, and be revealed, as plainly to indicate, that there was more than human foresight and design in them.

In a word, in both Testaments there are such prophecies of things which were to be, and of some which are we suffer in our souls departed. But others philosophized, that when this life was over, they, who lived well, should go into some star, such as they had made themselves meet to live in. "Qui bene et honeste curriculum vivendi a natura datum consecravit, ad illud astrum, cui aptus fuerit revertetur:" Cic. Lib. de Universo. Which state was not supposed to be absolutely final; for spirits in a future life, they believed, might have a progress to perfection, and go from a higher state to higher, until they arrived at their supreme good. Vide Platon, in Phædon, in Lib. de Legib. &c.; and some allowed the body a participation herein with the soul. Μεταβολή, τὰς τὸ σῶμα οὐκ ἀπολείπει τὰς ψυχὰς—ἡ μὲν ἀναστὰς ὡς ἄνθρωπος. ἡ δὲ ἄρως ὡς δαιμόνιος. αἱ βέλτερος ψυχὰς τὴν μεταβολὴν λαμβανούσιν· αἱ δὲ δαιμόνιος ὄντας μὴ ἐν χρόνῳ πολλὰ δι' ἀρετῆς καθαρὰς θύρας πύλας εἰσέλθουσιν. Plut. Orac. Defect. How different from all these schemes is what the gospel proposes concerning Christ Jesus! that this man offered one sacrifice for sins for ever, and through the offering of his body once for all, will perfect for ever those who come unto God through him: Heb. x, 11, 12, 14. Whence now could the first preachers of the gospel have these things; no wisdom then in the world would have suggested any such doctrine to them. That the prophecies indeed, obscurely, like a light shining in a dark place, foretold them, is true; that their Master, beginning from Moses and all the prophets, had expounded unto them in all the Scriptures, the things concerning himself, is acknowledged; but as this exposition was entirely different from all that the rabbies of the Jews had delivered, and all their doctors, learned in their law and Scriptures, contended for; that these things, thus hidden from the wise and prudent, should at once be brought to light by babes, be preached uniformly and consistently by a set of men, who had no human learning; and the truth of them be attested, by the author of them visibly raising himself from the dead, and going up into Heaven, and by the preachers of his doctrine being approved of God, in the many miracles wrought by them at the time of their preaching this gospel; these things must put it out of all doubt, that this doctrine was not of man, but of God.

^b See Connect. vol. iii, b. xii, p. 207; not to remark both of sacrifices of the living creatures, see vol. i, b. i, p. 52; and also of circumcision; that it is impossible to give any probable or reasonable grounds of their first institution, other than that they were appointed by God.

^c Gal. iii, 24.

yet to come; such a fulfilling of all that is completed; and thence so reasonable an assurance that there shall be a performance of what remains to be fulfilled in its season; as must give every considerate reader, whether learned or unlearned, a steady belief, better grounded than to be shaken by disputes concerning the canon of Scripture; when it was settled; by whom these or those books were particularly written; or what errata have crept into some copies in some texts. In all these, and many other disquisitions of a like nature, which might be started, we may find that the Scriptures, in being committed unto men, have been a treasure so put into earthen vessels, as to furnish full evidence, that the excellency of them is not of man.^d And although the miracles done, to bear testimony to their contents, were done in an age long since past, so that we may carelessly overlook them; nevertheless, we shall be forced to allow, that the books of Scripture are such as could not have come merely from man, but must be from God.

^d See 2 Cor. iv, 7.

SECTION V.

The Origin and Nature of Language, &c.

THE origin and progress of language is a subject which has been treated by many writers. The learned seem mostly inclined to think, that God put into the minds of our first parents all such words, and a knowledge of their meaning, as might be necessary for their conversation with each other. They represent, that the allowing them to be made sociable creatures, implies necessarily, that they were in actual possession of all words instantly to communicate a variety of sentiments. But I confess I do not see this consequence to be a necessary one. They began life, I apprehend, without any stock of actual knowledge: they acquired it gradually, and by like advances came to think of, and form words, to signify what they wanted to name, and converse upon. The allowing them to be able to do this, as early, and as variously as they wanted it, and to improve it, as fast as their knowledge increased; answers every social demand we can suppose, as fully, and more naturally, than to imagine them full of innate words before they had acquired the sentiments, or observation of the things, which were to be intended by such words. But as I have at different times treated this subject, I do not see it needful now to add any thing to clear it.* As to the opinion of some writers, that our first parents' minds were filled with original words, which expressed (what they could not otherwise know) the very nature of things, so as to enable them to speak, and thence to think philosophically of them; and that the Hebrew was originally a language of this sort—it is romantic and irrational. That there are words of a sound corresponding to what the ear hears, when the object denoted by them is presented to us, is unquestionable; and the proper use of words of this sort is thought an elegance in many writers. It is remarked, that Virgil has thrown the sound of the thing he writes of, sometimes over a whole line; thus, in the following verse, he is observed to sound, as it were, the trumpet he speaks of,

* Connect. vol. i, b. ii, p. 84; vol. ii, b. ix; see the following treatise, chapter iii.

Ære ciere viros martemque accendere cantu.

VIRG. Æn. lib. vi.

And, in another place, to express the very beat of the horses' feet on the ground where he supposes them to move, Quadrupedante putrem sonitu quatit ungula campum.

Id. Æn. lib. viii.

Homer's—πολα φλωσβοιο θαλασσης sounds to the ear both the hollow roar of the rising wave, and the crash of its waters breaking upon the shore. Single words may sometimes affect the ear in like manner. The Hebrew word רוּחַ (ruach), which signifies wind, may seem to sound the rushing noise made by that element; and many like instances might be collected from divers languages; but will any one say, that the philosophical nature of the things thus described is in any wise indicated by any word, part, or the whole of any such description? Words are but sounds; and it is easy to conceive, how, by arbitrary agreement, different sounds may come to denote such things as are intended to be meant by them; but to say that any particular sound has a necessary connection or relation to the essence or nature of one particular thing more than another is a confusion we could not fall into, if we did not overlook some particular in the train of thinking, which leads us into it. Allowing that the word create denotes the producing things out of nothing; Creator may signify Him who made all things, and is God. But the word can have no such reference from any thing in the nature of it; except merely from its being first established, that to create shall be the sound to signify this act of making things to exist. From such known designation, בָּרָא bara, in Hebrew; creavit in Latin; any other word in any other language appointed to denote the exercise of this act of power, shall equally have this signification; and, without such appointment, no one sound can have it, in the nature of things, more than another. The manner in which Adam and Eve were brought into the world, duly considered, will lead us to suitable thoughts concerning the rise and improvement of their language. If it could be conceived that they instantly talked copiously about all things, before time and experience had taught them to know them; there would be reason to think that they had words for such conversation not of their own inventing. But Moses hints nothing of this nature; nay, the very contrary appears most plainly throughout his narration. Accordingly, many expressions occur in his Hebrew (of which, I apprehend, the following words, the Lord is a man of war, may be one instance,)^b which hint, that, in the most early times, the expressions used had their rise, not from any innate sentiments of the nature of things, nor from innate words concerning them, farther than what men had felt, seen, or heard, and agreeably thereto conceived and understood of them. With respect to such words as God was pleased to speak to our first parents in the beginning of their lives; I have considered what, I think, must be admitted concerning them.^c That names, formed from words agreed to signify qualities of things, may denote the nature of the things so named, so far as to inform us, that they are reputed to have the qualities expressed by the words which are given as names to them, may reasonably be allowed.^d If I know, that Nabal in Hebrew signifies to be of no value or moment; I may possibly conclude, that a man called by that name is one of that character: but had any other word than ^b נֶחֱמָה וְכֶחָזָק Exod. xv, 3. I may say of this expression, as also of another, which occurs later, wherein God is represented like a mighty man that shouteth by reason of wine, Psal. lxxviii, 65, that neither of them can be supposed to express any thing of the nature of the power of God. Rather, human imagination, struck with the terror of a man of war coming forth armed to battle: or of the terrible fury of a giant, awakened, and refreshed with wine, furnished the ideas which occasioned these expressions. Other words, very different, would have been used, had a natural description of the tremendous power of God, terrible in majesty, infinitely beyond what these words convey to us, been at all intended.

^c See hereafter, chap. ii.

^d See Connect. vol. ii, b. ix, p. 244.

^e 1 Sam. xiv, 25; Connect. ibid.

Nabal been the verb to signify the having this character, the sound Nabal might have conveyed a very different idea to me. It is the same respecting all other circumstances of things, which their names can hint to us. If terra be the allowed word to signify earth, the saying that a person is terrestris, may denote that he is earthy, but had the first agreed idea annexed to terra, been what we call heaven, it is evident that nothing in nature would have prevented terrestris from having a signification opposite to what is now understood by it. What a learned writer very clearly thought upon this subject, he has expressed as intelligibly. "There is," he says, "between sounds and things no relation: words signify things, from no other than the arbitrary agreement of men: it is evident that language is not natural, but instituted:"—"that the human organs being admirably fitted for the formation of articulate sounds; these, with the help of reason, might in time lead men to the use of language—; I own it is imaginable that they might."^f The judicious author, I think, after all this, would not have imagined, that, without an inspiration of language from God, mankind might have lived a series of generations without having a sufficient use of it, if he had happened to consider the steps and gradual progress in which Moses represents our first parents coming into their knowledge of themselves and the world.^h

The reader will find in the following sheets, that I have had great assistance from Mr. Pope's very excellent Essay upon Man. The poet himself confesses, that he could not have expressed his thoughts with that force and conciseness in prose, as he could in verse.ⁱ With respect to myself, I am sure, that I should have deprived the reader of a pleasure, and the subject of an advantage, had I used only my own language: what

I oft had thought would have come far short of being so well express'd;

I wish I could have had the like assistance of this power-

^f See Revelation examined with Candour, vol. i, p. 52.

^g Ibid. p. 53.

^h Ibid. p. 61—67.

ⁱ See what the author says in the design of the poem.

ful pen for some other sentiments, which I have endeavoured to defend; but in these I have ventured to desert the poet, thinking that he has some lines, which require correction. Speaking of the primæval state of mankind, he seems to represent that their only guidance had been the light of nature. He says,

The state of nature was the reign of God,^k

He in nowise supposes that man, in his first estate, began his being under the especial direction of a revelation; but, rather, that

To copy instinct then was reason's part.^l

And he sends our early progenitors to learn arts and sciences from the animal world, sooner than we can think the animal world could be so considered as to afford them this knowledge.^m In like manner, he appears to think, that sacrifices of the living creatures were not offered in the first times. He represents, that "the shrine" was "with gore unstained,"ⁿ that "unbloody stood the harmless priest."^o He has these and some other sentiments in the third epistle, which, to me, do ^k Pope's Essay on Man, Ep. iii, ver. 147.

^l Ibid. ver. 171.

^m Solomon, indeed, bids his sluggard go to the ant, consider her ways, and be wise, Prov. vi, 6. And it is natural to think, that Solomon, who had searched deep into nature (see 1 Kings iv, 33,) should offer this instruction. But to think that mankind had not sought out many inventions; but were without work, device, and contrivance of their own, until they had observed the instinct of the creatures, is extremely improbable. That he, who "primus per artem movit agros" (Virgil;) "learned of the mole to plough" (Pope's Essay, ver. 178;) or that Cain formed the plan or building of his city, Enoch (Gen. iv, 17,) from any observations of the bee, her little cells, lodgments, and structures, is a wild imagination: and, I dare say, had Solomon had no ships to send to Ophir, until men had learned of the little Nautilus to sail,

Spread the thin oar, and catch the driving gale, Pope's Essay, ver. 179.

he would have brought no gold to Jerusalem. Men had invented a great many arts of their own, before they could observe what, in anywise, corresponded with them in the creatures: though we may, perhaps, well allow, that when they thus came to look from themselves to the creatures, reflections might arise to teach them to correct art by nature, and to add to their own inventions a regularity and improvement which otherwise they might not have thought of.

ⁿ Pope's Essay, ver. 157.

^o Ver 158.

not seem entirely to accord with other parts of his poem.
If I might guess from one maxim hinted,

—go, and thus o'er all the creatures sway,
Thus let the wiser make the rest obey;^p

he seems to suppose, that a superior understanding gives a right of dominion; a thought diffused so largely in the imagination^q of his admired statesman, whom he styles

His friend, his genius—— —— Master of the poet, and the song,
Pope's Essay, Ep. iv, ver. 363.

that I should think, much of what we find from about the 147th line of the third epistle, to the 216th, was written upon anecdotes given to the poet, and in respect to him, who gave them, well ornamented; but they have not that firmness and stability, which can be given to nothing but what is true. It would be going absolutely from the subject, in which I am engaged, to examine all Mr. Pope's positions, which might be here stated. One of them, indeed, I am more particularly concerned in, namely, the Origin of Sacrifices. I have supposed that sacrifices of the living creatures had been appointed from the time of our first parents' transgression; and what I have offered upon this topic has been replied to at large. I hope I shall not misspend a few pages, if I endeavour to clear this matter.

^p Ver. 195, 196.

^q Lord Bolingbroke hints to us, that "the author of nature has mingled among the societies of men, a few, and but a few of those, on whom he is graciously pleased to bestow a larger proportion of the ethereal spirit, than is given in the ordinary course of his providence to the sons of men. These are they, who engross almost the whole reason of the species; who are born to instruct, to guide, and to preserve; who are designed to be the tutors and the guardians of human kind." See Letter on the Spirit of Patriotism, p. 10. I am at a loss what to say of this random sentiment. It seems to me to want more explication, and the application of it to be guarded and regulated, beyond what one would expect of any thing said by a wise man. If the ethereal genii of the age happen in any country not to have either the reins of government, nor the chair, seat, or bench, to guide, direct, and give law to mankind; and, surely, many of them often have not; and I can apprehend it sometimes for the good of the world that they have not; there is a far more useful principle to be thought of, than that these wise should try to make the rest obey; namely, that every one should study to be quiet, and mind his own business, in the duties of that station in life which happens to belong to him. It must undoubtedly be a great blessing to the world, when those, who have the power over others, are the truly wise; but the happiness of mankind can never have any permanency, unless those, who cannot attain what they happen to think their genius most fit for, know how to govern themselves wisely, and be patterns to others to teach them the same thing. These ethereal gentlemen, acting otherwise, have often occasioned great convulsions in the world: and many times, when they get that power for which they strive, and make the rest obey, they are neither the public blessing they think, nor perhaps do they perform any great and real good even to themselves. Our author's sentiment seems no better, than a not well digested refinement of a notion found amongst the heathen disputants; viz. that mankind are born, some with endowments to rule and govern, others with capacities fit for servitude only: that where the rulers of states find such, as, though born for servitude, will not submit to it; a war upon these is but a lawful hunting, to take men, as we do, by a like exercise, the beasts of the field, to sort and reduce them to their proper application. Nimrod was perhaps a mighty hunter of this sort, and hereby raised himself to a kingdom, Gen. x, 9. But how far any thing of this nature can be useful or right, I shall submit to farther consideration.

SECTION VI.

The Origin and Use of Sacrifices.—The Nature and Design of that Sacrifice offered by Abel.—Apology for the Mistakes into which the Author may have fallen in this Work, or in his Connection.

It is argued, that sacrifices of the living creatures were not made in the most early ages: that they did not commence until after mankind had eaten flesh: that we need not imagine they had their rise from a positive command of God; for, from the weakness in human nature, we may suppose, that mankind might invent this service, without any command enjoining the use of it.* All these points have been treated by a very ingenious writer;† an answer to whom will, I hope; be a sufficient reply to all that can be objected upon this topic. And my answer hereto is, that Abel, unquestionably, offered a sacrifice of an animal or living creature: that he did it in obedience to a command of God; and, consequently, that the origin of this institution was not of human contrivance.

I. Abel, I say, offered a sacrifice of a living creature: Abel, Moses tells us, brought of the firstlings of his flock, and of the fat thereof.‡ This offering was made before the 130th year of the world,§ and is indeed the first sacrifice which the Scripture mentions. That Abel's was a sacrifice of a living creature, may, I think, be proved, both from Moses's express account of it, and

* See Philemon to Hydaspes, letter v.

† Gen. iv, 4.

‡ Adam was but one hundred and thirty when Seth was born, after Abel was killed; Gen. v. 3.

from what is said upon it by the author of the Epistle to the Hebrews.

Moses's account begins with the offering of Cain: Cain brought of the fruit of the ground an offering unto the LORD.^d It is plain, that nothing animate was intended in Cain's oblation: it was an offering of corn or herbs, the produce of the ground, and of nothing more. And it will be observed, that it is accordingly called minchah;^e the word often used for a meat-offering or oblation of things inanimate, in distinction to the sacrifice of a living creature.^f But Abel brought of the firstlings of his flock, and the fat thereof: the words which follow are to be observed: and the LORD had respect unto Abel, and to his offering;^g the text says, ve æl minchatho:^h so that the word minchah is here also used, to speak of Abel's offering, as it was of Cain's. Wherein then did they differ? or why should we think that Abel's offering was a sacrifice of a living creature, when it is thus hinted to be a minchah? The learned are herein very diligent to exert themselves. Grotius observes, that the word we render the fat thereof,ⁱ may signify the milk thereof, and thinks, that Abel did not sacrifice a lamb; but, perhaps, only some wool and cream, of the lactage, and growth of the firstlings of his flock.^k I answer, learned men will seem to say something for any singularity they have a mind to support; and Grotius is remarkable in this particular. But it is observable, that he lays the stress of what he would argue, upon explaining a word not material to the argument; but says nothing upon some other words, on which the true meaning of the place most absolutely turns. The word, which we translate fat, may signify milk, or must be rendered fat, as the sense and context, when it is used, require; but the words here to be principally considered are, of the firstlings of his flock.^l The firstling or firstlings of beasts, of cattle, of the herd, or of the flock, are expressions very common in ^d Gen. iv, 3.

^e אֶל מִנְחָתוֹ וְאֶל הַזֶּבֶחַ מִנְחָה לַיהוָה

^f See Levit. ii, 1, 4, 5, 15; vii, 9, 10; xiv, 10; xxx, 16; Numb. xv, 3—6; xxviii, 5, et sexcent. al. in loc.

^g Gen. iv, 4.

^h The Hebrew words are מִנְחָתוֹ וְאֶל הַזֶּבֶחַ.

ⁱ Annot. in loc.

^k Grotius observes, that these had been thought very ancient sacrifices by the heathen writers. Ibid.

^l מִנְחָתוֹ וְאֶל הַזֶּבֶחַ. Gen. iv, 4.

Moses;^m and the question is, whether, wherever he speaks of an offering of firstlings, he means any thing but an offering of the living creatures so called? Whether, in Moses's language, had Abel offered only wool, and milk or cream, the expression must not have been, he brought of the wool, milk, or cream, of the firstlings of his flock an offering to the LORD? And, whether, supposing the word which we render fat, may signify milk, the words of Moses here used, he brought of the firstlings of his flock, and the milk thereof, would not have denoted, that he brought both the living creatures, and their milk too? But a farther question is, whether firstlings were ever reckoned, except by the males only?ⁿ If they were reckoned thus only, our learned annotators mistake most ridiculously. Abel, I apprehend, brought of his young rams unto the LORD; and the lactage of his rams: our learned disputants would be as well fed as they would teach us, if they had nothing else to eat, till they gave up this absurdity. In a word, Moses's expression can in nowise signify any thing else, but that Abel brought a living animal of his flock an offering unto the LORD. For,

With respect to Abel's offering being called a minchah, it is easy to be accounted for. The word minchah is, indeed, often used sacrificially to denote an inanimate offering, in opposition to the sacrifice of a living creature; but it has likewise a more general acceptation. It is the word used of Jacob's present to his brother Esau;^o and, again, for the present sent out of Canaan to Joseph.^p It is well translated, when used in this sense, by the Greek word Δωρον, a gift: the apostle thus renders it:^q in this general sense it is, and may be used of all sacrifices both animate and inanimate; for every sacrifice is, in this sense, a minchah, Δωρον, a gift, or present unto the LORD; though every minchah, or gift, is not a sacrifice of a living creature.*

^m Lev. xxvii, 26; Numb. xviii, 15; Deut. xv, 19; Numb. iii, 41; Deut. xii, 6; xiv, 23, &c.

ⁿ See Exod. xiii, 12.

^o Gen. xxxii, 13, 19.

^p Chap. xliii, 11.

^q Heb. xi, 4, ἐν τοῖς δωροῖς αὐτοῦ.

* The truth is, Abel made two offerings to the LORD, at the same time. One was the minchah, or thanksgiving offering, by which he acknowledged God as the Creator and Preserver. The other was an animal for a sin offering, by which he acknowledged his sinful state, the need he had of an expiatory victim, and his faith in the coming Redeemer. Hence the apostle says, Abel, by faith, offered a more excellent sacrifice than Cain: and God testified of his Having thus far shown, that Moses must be understood as expressing Abel's offering to be of a living creature; I come now to consider, that the apostle plainly tells us, that this was his meaning. The writer of the Epistle to the Hebrews tells us, that Abel's offering was θυσια, i. e. the oblation of a creature slain.* I laid great stress upon the inspired writer's using this term.† I am answered, that it is notorious, that the word θυσια is several times used in Scripture for an inanimate oblation. And the ingenious writer, above mentioned, cites, for his assertion, Lev. ii, 1.‡ Undoubtedly he might have cited many other passages. His mistake is, in citing the Septuagint translation for Scripture; not considering that these translators, not being infallible, might err in their translation. The translators of the Septuagint were extremely careless in their use of this word. They render the third verse of the fourth chapter of Genesis, ἤνεγκεν Κάιν ἀπὸ τῶν καρπῶν τῆς γῆς θυσίαν τῷ Κυρίῳ. Here they call Cain's offering, which is described and allowed to be of the fruits of the ground only, θυσίαν, a sacrifice or mactation. But then it is to be remarked, that the apostle herein particularly corrects them, removes the word θυσίαν, misapplied by them, and uses it of Abel's sacrifice only, and not of Cain's offering.‡ The inspired writers of the New Tes-gifts, τὰς θυσίας i. e. both the minchah and sin offering. Cain, not having faith in the coming Saviour, acted simply as a Deist, and offered only the minchah, or thank offering, to God, without either a consciousness of sin, or faith in the promised atonement; therefore his offering was not accepted. Dr. Kennicott has handled this subject in a masterly manner, in a work, intitled, Two Dissertations, 1. On the Tree of Life; 2. On the Oblations of Cain and Abel, 8vo. Oxon. 1747, to which I beg leave to refer the reader. EDIT.

* θυσίαν Ἄβελ προσέφερε, Heb. xi, 4; I might, I think, here observe, that the apostle elsewhere expressly calls Abel's offering an offering of blood. Alluding to the blood of Christ, by whose death we have the forgiveness of sins, he says, ye are come—to the blood of sprinkling, which speaketh better things than that of Abel, Heb. xii, 24;—that of Abel; he does not mean Abel's blood, or the blood shed by the death of Abel; for Abel's death was no sacrifice for sin; but the blood which Abel offered in his θυσία, or sacrifice, though accepted by God, as he had commanded it, was but a shadow in comparison of the sacrifice of Christ.

† See Connect. vol. i, book ii, p. 73.

‡ Phil. to Hydasp. Letter v, p. 32.

§ I would take away all possible ambiguity, that can be supposed in the apostle's expression; and would, therefore, observe, that should any one imagine that the apostle's words are elliptical, that the words may be taken, by faith Abel offered a more excellent sacrifice than Cain's, i. e. sacrifice: that the word θυσίαν may as well be understood at the end of the period, as inserted in the beginning. I answer, it is impossible so to construe the apostle, his words being, οἷσι πολλοῦ θυσίαν Ἄβελ παρα καὶ προσέφερε. Were this the meaning, it should be παρα τε καὶ but we say, a more excellent sacrifice;

tament are known generally to cite the Old Testament, according to the Septuagint version; and where they do so, it is evident they did not think the expression importantly faulty. But when, in any particular passage, an apostle thus remarkably varies and corrects the diction of the Septuagint, ought we not to think he observed an impropriety, and designed to amend it? Θυσια is in many places of the Septuagint version used to signify inanimate offerings; but the Septuagint were not inspired writers, and therefore ought to stand corrected by those who were. The word Θυσια occurs frequently in the New Testament. But although, after the legal sacrifices of the Old Testament were done away, the sacred writers of the New adopted the word Θυσια; using it in a spiritual sense, to express the making our bodies a living sacrifice:^w to represent our charity as being a sacrifice acceptable unto God;^x to exhort to offer the sacrifice of praise,^y &c. I say, although, after animal sacrifices had ceased, the one real sacrifice being offered, which alone could take away sin,^z inspired writers did use the word Θυσια in a spiritual sense, to signify our giving ourselves up to perform many of the commanded duties of the Christian religion, sacrificing ourselves in them truly to serve God in spirit and in truth; yet, I think, they did not use the term Θυσια of any sacrifices of the Old Testament, but of such only, wherein there was the shedding of blood;^a preserving where do we find πλυσια to signify more excellent? Things that are more excellent, are called τα διασπορτα, Rom. ii, 18; Phil. i, 10. A more excellent way is, καθ' ὑπερβολὴν ὁδὸν, 1 Cor. xii, 31. A more excellent name is, διαφοροτερον ὄνομα, Heb. i, 4; and a more excellent ministry is, διαφοροτερας λειτουργιας, Heb. viii, 6. But πλυσια signifies more ample, says Stephens, Concord. Græco. Lat. Nov. Testam. And to its here having this signification agrees what follows: Abel brought Θυσιας πλυσια παρα Καν. The preposition παρα is used in the New Testament to signify præter, besides, more than, over and above. Thus St. Paul, guarding the Galatians against receiving the observances of the Jewish law, superadded to the Christian religion, most solemnly warns them, not to receive any thing that should be preached to them, παρ' ὁ κηρυχσομεθα, οὐ παρ' ὁ παραλαβον, Gal. i, 8, 9. They were to receive no doctrines, as gospel, more than, over and above, what St. Paul had preached to them. And thus Abel's Θυσιας was πλυσια παρα Καν. Cain had offered only inanimate gifts: Abel had offered these also; for these often accompanied the burnt offering: but Abel's Θυσια was something over and besides these, it was the mactation of an animal. And in the not having this added, Cain came short of what ought to have been done by him.

^w Rom. xii, 1.

^x Phil. iv, 18.

^y Heb. xiii, 15.

^z See Heb. x.

^a See Matt. ix, 13; xii, 7; Luke ii, 24; xiii, 1; Acts vii, 41, 42; 1 Cor. x, 18; Heb. v, 1; vii, 27; viii, 3; ix, 9, &c. I know but one place in the New Testament, where Θυσια may seem to be used of an inanimate offering of the law; where our Saviour says every sacrifice (παρα Θυσια, are the words of the

it an allowed truth of all revealed religion from the beginning of the world, that without shedding of blood there had been no declared remission of sin.

II. The second point I am to consider is, that Abel's offering his sacrifice was in obedience to some divine command, some explicit injunction given by God. And, I confess, that to me a most unanswerable argument that it was so, is Abel's being said by the apostle, to have made his offering by faith, Heb. xi. I have already argued, that the faith, concerning which the apostle wrote this chapter, supposes in all the instances he gives some express declaration or direction from God, the believing and paying obedience to which is the faith set forth and recommended to us.^b I have shown that this was the fact in the case of Rahab, when she entertained the spies at Jericho.^c My ingenious adversary thinks otherwise;^d but with how little reason, I must entirely submit to the reader's impartial consideration. He would argue about Enoch, as he reasons about Rahab.^e He supposes that Enoch obtained his translation to Heaven, not upon account of his receiving and believing any particular declaration by an express revelation from God, but upon account of the general tenor and conduct of his life; that he was a man of eminent virtue, faithfully attached to perfect holiness in the fear of God, assuring himself, that he should have a reward for thus doing. I answer, had the hopes of Enoch been only the general and rational expectations arising from a moral life; he had not been herein in any wise above others eminent for faith, which is not an act of mind paying regard to arguments arising from considering what may appear intrinsically, without external testimony, to be in reason true; but faith cometh by hearing:^f faith is the believing something that is testified Evangelist,) shall be salted with salt, Mark ix, 49. The law here referred to, is Levit ii, 13, which may be thought to be the law of the meat offering. But I would observe, that the text in Leviticus first provides, that the meat offering, which was indeed inanimate, should be salted. But having ordered this, it adds farther, with all thy offerings thou shalt offer salt. The word for thine offerings is קרבני, a word used of a sacrifice of an animal, Numb. xxviii, 2, as קרבן חיה, Levit. i, 2. So that the text provides, first, that all offerings inanimate shall be salted; and then farther, that salt shall be also used in all sacrifices; and the word Suum is used by St. Mark, referring to the law given in the latter part of the verse.

^b Connect. vol. i. book ii, p. 75.

^c Id. vol. iii, book xii, p. 214.

^d See Phil. to Hydas. Letter v, p. 39.

^e Id. ibid.

^f Rom. x, 17.

or declared to us.^g Accordingly, the author of Ecclesiasticus, who observes, concerning Enoch, that he pleased God and was translated, does not ascribe his being translated to his being more and above others a man of a righteous or moral life; but tells us he was made an example of repentance unto all generations.^h We should perfectly understand what is here suggested, if we may say a special revelation was made to Enoch, that men should have life for ever in another world, if they sought it believing, through his name, by repentance, to receive remission of sins.ⁱ If Enoch embraced and testified unto others this faith, and it pleased God to confirm unto the world, that what he had declared by Enoch, was true; by granting to Enoch not to die and fall like other men, but, without tasting death, to be received to the life to come which was published, and by him believed, and declared according to the word of God, made known to him; herein we show that Enoch has been literally, according to the words of the author of Ecclesiasticus, set forth an example of repentance unto all generations: and as clearly according to the full meaning of the apostle's expression, by faith, believing and doing according to what had been especially revealed to him, was translated that he should not see death.^k

There is no point upon which many able and very learned writers appear more fondly mistaken than in not truly stating the doctrine of faith, according to the Scriptures. It is a favourite notion with them to divide the states in which mankind have been, into that of natural religion, and that of the gospel. They call the state of creation or natural religion, the dispensation of the Father: the state of the gospel, the dispensation of the Son of God; and they argue, that the former, natural religion, is a necessary preparation for the latter.^l But herein they certainly introduce a language very different from the Scriptures. To come unto God, to seek God, to walk with God; all these, and other like expressions, in their Scripture meaning, signify, to accede to that law which is from God's mouth, to lay up his words in ^g Vide quæ sup.

ⁱ See Acts x, 43.

^l The reader may see this way of thinking fully stated by the late Dr. Samuel Clarke, Sermon i.

^h Ecclus. xliv, 16.

^k Heb. xi, 5.

our hearts; to live according to what God has revealed and commanded;^m the fearing God, and working righteousness according to what is called natural light, is not what is in Scripture designed by those expressions. In like manner, the dispensation of the Father, in contradistinction to the dispensation of the Son, must be the revelation of the Old Testament, as distinguished from the revelation in the New. Our blessed Saviour's exhortation to his disciples was, that, as they had believed in God, so also they would believe in him.ⁿ And the enforcing this particular duty is the great intent of the whole Epistle to the Hebrews. God, at sundry times, and in divers manners, had spoken to their fathers.^o Here now is the dispensation of the Father, which the Scriptures recognize; from whence the apostle endeavours to lead them to the dispensation of the Son; to what, in these last days, God hath spoken to us by his Son,^p that they should take the more earnest heed to the things which we have heard, not to neglect the great salvation which began to be spoken by the Lord himself, and was confirmed unto us by them that heard him; God also bearing them witness, both with signs and wonders, and with divers miracles and gifts of the Holy Ghost.^q He observed to them, that, in obeying Moses, they had not refused one, who spake to them on earth. He exhorts them now, agreeably hereto, not to refuse him who spake to them from Heaven.^r In a word, the whole design of this epistle is to set forth to the Hebrews, that faith had always come by hearing; that the foundation of all revealed religion had in all ages been, the receiving and believing the word of God; and the intent of the eleventh chapter is to set before us a cloud of witnesses or examples of this fact. Now, to suppose that any one instance, given by the apostle in this chapter, was intended to hint any other faith, than the belief of some explicit revelation, is to suppose that the apostle has deviated from his argument to something entirely foreign, if not opposite to it.

But it will be here asked; What proof, or shadow of proof, can we bring of Enoch's having had any express

^m See Job v, 8; Psal. cv, 4, 5; Isa. lviii, 2; viii, 19, 20; Deut. viii, 6; 2 Kings xxiii, 3, &c.; Job xxii, 22.

ⁿ John xiv. 1.

^o Heb. i, 1.

^p Heb. i, 2.

^q Chap. ii, 1—3.

^r Chap. xii, 25.

revelation from God? I answer, 1. We are informed that Enoch prophesied of the judgment to come, that the LORD would come with thousands of his saints, &c.^{*} 2. Moses informs us, that in Enoch's days men began to call upon the name of the LORD.[†] Upon which words I would observe, 1. That the expression in this place means, that at this time began the distinction of mankind's being called, some the sons of God, others the sons of men.[‡] 2. I have indeed observed, that the words, kara beshem Jehovah, was an expression used concerning Abraham and his descendants, and signified that they invoked God, in the name of the LORD who had appeared to Abraham.[§] But I do not think that this expression had been thus used before the days of Abraham.^{||} 3. A very learned and judicious writer observes, and gives instances, that the word hochal,[¶] which we translate began, may signify had hope;[‡] and he remarks, that the Septuagint so understood and translated it. ἔτος ἤλπισεν επικαλεῖσθαι τὸ ὄνομα κυρίου τοῦ Θεοῦ. To Enoch, then, hope was given in his being called by the name of the LORD his God. I can see no reason to reject what this able writer offers upon the text. And we may consider upon it, that the hope was undoubtedly great unto whom it was given to be called by this name. Why ought we not to reason concerning ^{*} See Jude 14, 15.

[†] Gen. iv, 26.

[‡] See Connect. vol. i, b. i, p. 40.

[§] Ibid. b. v, p. 176. I have been told that I must be thought to err in giving this particular interpretation of the words kara beshem. It is said, that the xviiith chapter of the first book of Kings, ver. 26, shows, that the expression signifies to call on the name. The priests of Baal, we are there told (וַיִּקְרְאוּ בְשֵׁם-הַבַּעַל לְאֵמֶר וְהָעֵל) called upon the name of Baal, saying, O Baal! hear us. Are we not here told plainly, that their saying, O Baal! hear us, was their calling upon the name of Baal? Why then must kareau beshem Baal be any thing more than they called upon the name of Baal? I answer; we are here easily misled by our rendering learnor, saying; had the participle been here used (asomarin) dicentes, there would have been a greater plea for what is objected to me. But the infinitive mood, with le prefixed, though it may be often rendered by the gerund in do, in Latin (learnor) dicendo, is also many times to be rendered by the gerund in dum (learnor), ad dicendum, see Noldius in Partic. and may signify to the saying: when thus used, it implies a proceeding from what was said before, to something farther. We often pray unto God in the name of our Saviour; but we often proceed farther, and say, O Christ! hear us. In this manner, the priests of Baal invoked in the name of Baal, to the saying. i. e. and proceeded even to pray, O Baal! hear us; Kara shem, or kara al shem, may signify to invoke, or call upon the name; but kara be shem cannot admit this signification; see Connect. ubi sup.

[¶] Connect. vol. ii, b. vii, p. 116.

[‡] See Rutherford's Essay on Virtue, p. 297.

^{||} The Hebrew verb לָמַד is speravit: desiderio expectavit, &c.

them, as we may of ourselves? Behold, what manner of love was herein bestowed upon them, that they should be called the sons of GOD?^a They were now the sons of GOD. Undoubtedly it did not appear what they shall be; but, as Enoch prophesied unto them, that the LORD cometh with ten thousand of his saints, to execute judgment; it must be, that all who had this hope of their calling, and held fast the profession of it, knew, that when he shall appear, they shall be like him, for they shall see him as he is.^b When He, who is their life, shall appear, they also shall appear with him in glory.^c We may surely hence well understand what was the particular revelation made to Enoch; namely, a revelation of the hope of another world; and the supposing him translated for receiving and embracing this faith, and faithfully preaching it to others; himself living an example of repentance according^a to the tenor of it, is no more than supposing that GOD testified in him to the world, that what he had published by him was truth. Enoch was translated A. M. 987, which is fifty-seven years after Adam's death.^d Enoch was born A. M. 622,^e above three hundred years before the death of Adam. If we may suppose, that Enoch had received and preached the revelation of this hope, about the middle of his life time, we have the grounds for what the reader will find I have offered; namely, that some time before Adam died, GOD had given the hopes of another world.^f

III. I have to consider, that sacrifices of the living creatures were not originally the invention of men. The writers, who would argue they were such, carry us back to the times of Orpheus, or of some other sage and wise personages about his age, who reformed and civilized the barbarous clans of savage and uncultivated people, who overran the parts adjacent to them. They endeavour to show us, that the first step they took to humanize the minds of those with whom they conversed, was to endeavour to dissatisfy them with the thoughts of eating the living creatures, and to persuade them, that taking away the life of any thing, must be a violence which

^a See 1 John iii, 1.

^b Ver. 2.

^c See Coloss. iii.

^d See the table of the lives and deaths of the antediluvian patriarchs, Connecticut, vol. i, b. i, p. 57, 58.

^e Ibid.

^f See hereafter, chap. xii.

could not make the so doing an acceptable sacrifice to God. This, the poet tells us, was the endeavour of Orpheus in particular,

*Sylvestres homines sacer interpresque Deorum
Cædibus et fœdo victu deterruit Orpheus,
Dictus ob hoc lenire tigres rapidosque leones.*

HOR.

Orpheus is supposed to have lived about the Argonautic times, later than A. M. 2700: but what if he, and all the reformers, such as he was, had lived much earlier? What if, not really knowing the history of the beginning of mankind, they had thought it a reasonable doctrine, very proper to repress and subdue the outrage and violence they saw the Earth full of; when men not only destroyed the beasts of the field, but made as free with the lives of one another? What, I say, if they deemed it a doctrine which might be effectual, in putting an end to these violences, to teach that the gods could not be pleased with blood; that the first sacrifices of mankind were of the fruits of the Earth; or mixtures of oil, milk, and honey; of odoriferous spices, herbs, and gums; of the leaves of trees, of nuts, acorns, and berries: of every thing, which men could offer innocuous, neither doing violence to any thing to which God had given the breath of life, nor to one another? Will it, because these doctrines have in them what is agreeable to the humanity of our nature, and might be thought reasonable to these men, who first taught these tenets; will it, I say, hence follow, that what a well-warranted history relates as having been fact near three thousand years before, was mere fiction and fable, because it does not accord with what was taught in these so much later times?

If the natural tenderness and regret of human nature against all appearance of barbarity were made use of to show, how great a consternation it must have been to the first men, at a time when the creatures were not their food;^s and it could not but be more natural for them to say, of every thing living,

— vitaquæ magis quam morte juvatis,

OVID.

^s The writers, who would argue that sacrifices of the living creatures had commenced from human institution, would have it, that the eating flesh was before the flood; that the command to Noah, was to regulate, not to give the when to see it living must have been more agreeable, as well as more useful,^h than to put it to death; what less than a command from God, whenever they committed a sin, that the sin might not remain, and lie at their door,ⁱ could have induced them to bring an innocent, and to them innocuous animal, to offer its blood upon account of their own transgressions? Time and custom may reconcile us to almost any thing; but it is difficult to avoid the reflection, that when mankind came first to this service, it would truly rend their hearts, to see, as it were, death, unto which they knew themselves must one day come: to have displayed before their eyes its pangs and agonies inflicted by themselves on a creature which had no demerit; merely because they had themselves committed some offence against their God:—such a service must cause them both to think upon the victim and upon themselves. As to the suffering animal; how could they avoid asking, what has this sheep done?

Quid meruistis oves, placidum pecus——

OVID.

Upon themselves they must look with confusion of face, that what flesh and blood would naturally shrink back at, was without mercy to be performed, merely upon account of their misdoings. One would think, that whilst their minds were tender (and they ought carefully to have kept them so,) nothing could have been enjoined, which could have been a more affecting rebuke of sin, to raise in them hearty desires, if possible, to sin no more, rather than to come often to repeat a service, in its nature so disagreeable; and to perform, deliberately, the rites of it. One would think, that not only Cain, but all mankind, would have been glad to have avoided it; if the offering of the fruits of the ground might have been accepted in its stead.

first liberty to eat flesh: see Philemon to Hydaspes, p. 55, letter v. But what a mere pretence, without shadow of foundation, this is, let any one consider, who will examine what Lamech said at the birth of Noah, Gen. v. 29. If they had eaten flesh as freely before the flood, as after Noah had obtained a grant of it, what comfort did they want, or could expect, concerning their work and toil of their hands, because of the ground which the Lord had cursed?

^h The heathen poets conceived, that some creatures might be sacrificed upon account of their destroying the fruits of the Earth, of the vines or trees, or otherwise having been prejudicial to men: see Ovid, Fastor. lib. i; Metamorph. lib. xv. But nothing of this sort can be imagined to have been Abel's reason for offering of the firstlings of his flock.

See Gen. iv, 7.

In fact, it appears, that sacrifices had been offered thousands of years before any thing, which can be cited concerning them from heathen writers, was written. And, in truth, nothing can be cited from thence to show us the reason of them, or their origin. Sacrifices of the living creatures, as in the case of Abel, were made ages before mankind had any thought of eating flesh; and, consequently, none of the weak reasons into which our ingenious writer supposes mankind might fall, to induce them to offer to the gods in their injudicious way of thinking, part of what they experienced to be sustenance to themselves, could have any place in their mind at all. From what is argued in the New Testament, the first sacrifices in the world came of faith, and were made in obedience to some divine command. It may be apprehended, that they were an institution so dehortatory against sin, that even upon this account they would appear a command worthy of God, to creatures who needed to be strongly warned against it. Besides, they bear such a reference to what was afterwards in reality to take away sin, and they might so instructively prepare the world to receive the revelation concerning it, when it should be more fully published, and to lead men to it; that what is said, for supposing it a human institution, is frivolous and without foundation. Therefore I may, I think, without farther controversy, refer the reader to the reason which I have given of this institution; viz. that God having determined what should, in the fulness of time, be the propitiation for the sins of the world; namely, Christ, who, through his own blood, obtained eternal redemption for us; thought fit, from the time when man became guilty of sin, to appoint creatures to be offered, to represent the true offering, which was afterwards to be made for the sins of all men.¹

¹ See Connect. vol. i, b. ii, p. 74. My ingenious adversary, see Philemon to Hydaspes, Letter, v, p. 31, thinks it not reasonable to suppose that Abel offered sacrifice for any sin of Adam; and would argue from St. Paul's having said, that sin is not imputed without a law, Rom. v, 13, that there was no law given in Abel's time, declaring death to be the punishment of any sin, but of the first transgression; and, consequently, that there could be no reason that Abel should offer a sacrifice for any sin of his own. A little observation may both explain St. Paul's meaning, and clear the confusion raised by my antagonist. The Apostle thus argues: As by one man sin entered into the world, and death by sin; AND SO (I should render it EVEN SO) death passed upon all men, for that all men have sinned; for until the law, sin was in the world. The point to

I have here endeavoured very largely a reply to what has been objected to me upon this subject, as I thought it required a full consideration. I would as freely defend or retract any thing I have written, which other writers have thought wrong, if I apprehended it alike material. But where I think myself only misrepresented, be observed is, that the Scriptures conclude all men under sin, Gal. iii, 21, and affirm, that there is no man on Earth that sinneth not, 1 Kings viii, 46. This, therefore, being an allowed truth, that sin was in the world until the law; that from Adam unto Moses, not Adam and Eve only, but every individual of their descendants had actual sins of their own, the apostle reasons, that there can be no injustice pretended that in τῷ Ἀδὰμ πάντες ἀσθενήσουσιν, that in Adam all die, 1 Cor. xv. 22, ἵς ὁ ἁμαρτίαν ἡμῶν Rom. v, 12: not in whom all sinned, as our marginal reference would correct our version; for, had this been intended, it would have been ἵς ὁ ἁμαρτίαν ἡμῶν ἀσθενήσουσιν ἵς ὁ is eo quod, in that, or because. As by one man, says the apostle, sin entered into the world, and death by sin, καὶ ὅσους — even so, in like manner: i. e. as deservedly, death hath passed upon all men. The foundation of which reasoning is plain: for death being the wages of sin, and all men having done the works of our first parents, having actually sinned as well as they, we not only receive in dying, but by our sins deserve the same wages. Having thus stated this point, the apostle proceeds to consider an objection. But sin, says he, is not imputed, where there is no law: nevertheless, death reigned from Adam to Moses, even over them that had not sinned after the similitude of Adam's transgression: Rom. v, 13, 14. The apostle's argument is so clear, I wonder it can be mistaken. He allows, that sin is not imputed where there is no law: which, indeed, is exactly what he elsewhere says, where no law is, there is no transgression: Rom. iv, 15. For, as St. John observes, sin is the transgression of the law: 1 John iii, 4. Nevertheless, says he, notwithstanding all that may thus be reasoned, and although none like our parents have eaten of the forbidden tree; yet death hath reigned from Adam down to Moses: all have received the wages of sin, and therefore, in fact, all have sinned: and, consequently, as there would have been no sin, had there been no law; there certainly has been a law, which all men, every one, has in many instances failed of living up to; and, in these failures, every man living, or that has lived, has had actual sin. Thus the apostle's argument concludes directly contrary to my ingenious correspondent. Abel had sin as well as all other men; but he would have had no sin, if he had not lived under some law; therefore he lived under the law of some revelation, which appointed sacrifice for sin. And upon sinning, that his sin might not remain and lie at his door, believing and obeying what God had commanded, he offered his sacrifice, and therein, by faith, obtained forgiveness of sin.

If it were not foreign to the point before us to proceed to the context, we might refute by it a calumny of Lord Bolingbroke against Eve; who says, she damned her children before she bare them: Study of History, Letter iii, p. 109. His Lordship in no wise understood, how, not as the offence in Adam, so also is the free gift in Christ: Rom. v, 15. In Adam, indeed, all died; and so in Christ shall all be made alive: 1 Cor. xv, 22. But we shall not only be made alive; this might be given us, and we might live unto condemnation for our own sins. But the free gift aboundeth in the forgiveness of many offences unto justification of life: Rom. v, 16—18, &c.; and thus Eve damned none of her children; for there was no necessity, that any should thus terribly perish. All were to live again; and to as many as would truly strive to obtain it, power was given to become the sons of God, to live unto honour, to glory, and eternal happiness. But this is not the only instance of this unhappy writer's most unwarrantable rashness. How dogmatically he can abuse even the Scriptures, not really knowing them, must be very evident to any one who will read Mr. Hervey's most excellent remarks on Lord Bolingbroke's Letters; a treatise worth every one's attentive consideration.

or a controversy to be rather sought for, than to be of any service to truth, I wish to enjoy silence and quiet, rather than trouble the world with an altercation, which can be of no use. In some small points, the reader may observe, that I have varied from myself. When I began my Connection, I too hastily concluded, that God appeared to Cain.^m I thought this a mistake, when I wrote my second volume;ⁿ and, in the ensuing treatise, have followed what I apprehended, upon second examination, to be true.^o Yet I let my error stand in later editions of my first volume, as I at first printed it; and shall do the same thing, where I differ in this treatise from what I formerly conceived to be the situation of the garden of Eden.^p I would not, by having written, be prevented from growing wiser; but hope, that the alterations of what I have written may not be necessarily very many. However, if I should live and have health to finish my Connection, they may be collected and referred to in a page by themselves; and the whole of what is printed continuing as it is, I may show, that I am at least just to the world, in not printing new editions of any works of mine, which may depreciate any former ones.

The chief point inquired into in the ensuing treatise is, indeed, the direct opposite to what I see stated by the author whom I have often cited. "If we consider," says he, "the order of the sciences in their rise and progress, the first place belongs to natural philosophy, the mother of them all, or the trunk, the tree of knowledge, out of which, and in proportion to which, like so many branches, they all grow."^q The Scriptures, I think, teach otherwise: the first information which man had, came from hearing the word of God;^r and the first error, which came into the world, arose from our first parents' opposing their first philosophy to it.^s Their thought was indeed low and mean, not deserving to be called philosophy; but it was the supposed science of the day, and they ventured to be led by it, contrary to what God

^m Connect. vol. i, b. i, p. 35.

ⁿ See vol. ii, b. ix, p. 253.

^o See hereafter, chap. ii. &c.

^p Connect. vol. i, b. i, p. 70; see hereafter, chap. viii.

^q Lord Bolingbroke's Letters to Sir William Wyndham, and to Mr. Pope, p. 466.

^r Gen. ii, 15, 16; see the ensuing treatise, chapters iv, and v.

^s Ibid. chap. ix: see chap. v, and vii.

had commanded. If we proceed, the Scriptures show us, wherein the word of God was to be to man the ground of truth; and how human science, falsely so called, opposed to it, has been, and may still be, the root of all error. The rightly determining how far we ought to begin under the guidance of faith; and wherein, and how, we may proceed to add knowledge to it; to prove and examine whether we be in the truth, in contradistinction to what some contend, that we must begin in knowledge, and hereby become perfect, is the one question, which, rightly stated and examined, will, according to what we determine concerning it, incline us either to deism, or to embrace and see the reason of the revelation set before us in the Scriptures. Concerning these, with regard to myself, I will venture to say, that I have studied them, not, as Lord Bolingbroke imputes to us, in order (i. e. right or wrong determined) to believe: but the more impartially I examine, I find more and more reason to believe them to be true. Accordingly, although I am a clergyman, I am verily persuaded, that I believe and profess in matters of religion nothing, but what, if I were a layman, I should believe and profess the same. His lordship says of the clergy, in his round and large manner of affirming, that “in natural religion the clergy are unnecessary; in revealed, they are dangerous guides.” How far any will be guided by me, I hope I shall always know myself so well, as to leave that to their own choice. As to the inutility of my inquiries, and also the impartiality of them; here I confess that I wish, as I think what I wish, may be a good, not absolutely terminating upon myself; that the reader will consider with as unbiassed a freedom as I have written, how far he may exempt me from his lordship’s most absolute sentence of reprobation.

• Lord Bolingbroke, ubi sup. p. 531.

CANTERBURY,
June 2, 1753.

THE CREATION AND FALL OF MAN.

THAT mankind have not been in this world, nor this world itself been from eternity, may be proved by many arguments from the nature, and from what is, and has in fact, been, the known state of the world in the different ages thereof.¹ But in what particular manner men at first began to exist; where, and how they lived; are points, of which we can have no farther certainty, than we have some authentic testimony declaring them unto us.

The heathen writers have given us their conjectures upon these subjects, but they are only conjectures.² Some part of what they offer, indeed, might be admitted as probable, if we were not better informed, that in the beginning things were not done as they supposed. But in having the writings of Moses, we have a real history of these matters; and, as I have elsewhere³ made some observations upon his account of the creation of the Heavens and the Earth, I would herein examine, what he relates concerning the creation of mankind; the manner and circumstances in which our first parents began their being, and the incidents which befel them; hoping to show, that Moses's account may reasonably be believed to set before us what were real matters of fact; and that no part of what is related by him ought to be taken to be apologue and fable, as some writers are fond of representing.⁴

¹ See Archbishop Tillotson, serm. i.; Wilkins's Nat. Rel. b. i, c. 5.

² Diodor. Sic. lib. i, p. 5.

³ Connect. Sac. et Prof. Hist. pref. to vol. i.

That the subject I am attempting has many difficulties, I am ready to confess, and not willing to be too positive I can remove them all: but as I apprehend the substance of what I have to offer will be seen to carry an evident design to give a reason for, and thereby to establish, the principles of revealed religion; I persuade myself I shall find all that candour, which I have long ago experienced the world not unwilling to bestow upon a well-intended endeavour, conducted, as I trust this shall be, without ill-nature or ill manners to other writers, however I may happen to differ from them.

⁴ It is observable, that some years ago the most forward writers expressed doubt and reserve in treating this subject: Quædam esse parabolica in hac narratione neque penitus ad litteram exigenda omnes fere agnoscunt: nonnulli etiam totum sermonem esse volunt inartificiosam artificiosam ad explicandas res veras, said Dr. Burnet, Archæolog. p. 283. But we find writers, who have added no argument beyond what Dr. Burnet had before offered, now more absolutely asserting, that the matter of Moses's account is inconsistent with the character of an historical narration, and must, they say, convince all, who consider it without prejudice, that it is wholly fabulous or allegorical. See Middleton's Exam. p. 135.

CHAPTER 1. •

The first and second chapters of Genesis reconciled and adjusted to each other.

THE first and second chapters of Genesis give us the whole of what Moses relates concerning the creation of mankind. Now, we shall see that they accord perfectly with each other; if we consider the first chapter as giving only a short and general account of this great transaction; and the second to be a resumption of the subject, in order to relate some particulars belonging to it, which in the conciseness of the first relation were passed over unmentioned.

In the first chapter, Moses, having recorded the several transactions of the five preceding days, begins the sixth day with God's creating the cattle, and living creatures of the Earth,¹ and then adds his determination to make man: *God said, let us make man in our image, after our likeness, and let them have dominion over the fish of the sea, and over the fowl of the air, and over the cattle, and over all the Earth, and over every creeping thing that creepeth upon the Earth.*² After this, Moses tells us, that God effected his purpose: *so God created man in his own image, in the image of God created he HIM.*³ unto which he adds, *male and female created he THEM.*⁴ The Hebrew words are as I have below transcribed them:⁵ and they might be translated as I have underlined them: the male and the female, he created them; i. e. he created them both; not the male only, but the female also. The words of Moses are very plain: he tells us, that God on the sixth day created the woman as well as the man. He does not say, that God created both at the same instant, nor in the same manner; for this he distinctly considers in the next chapter. But he here hints to us, that God made both the male and the female within the time of

¹ Gen i, 24, 25.

² Ver. 26.

³ Ver. 27.

⁴ Ibid.

⁵ וַיִּבְרָא אֱלֹהִים
וַיִּבְרָא אֱלֹהִים cos creavit et feminam marem.

this sixth day : and Moses's expression gives no grounds of the conceits concerning Adam before Eve was taken out of him, in which some writers have egregiously trifled.⁶

After both the man and the woman were created, God blessed them, and said unto them, be fruitful, and multiply, and replenish the Earth, and subdue it : and have dominion over the fish of the sea, and over the fowl of the air, and over every living thing that moveth upon the earth : and God said, behold, I have given you every herb bearing seed, which is upon the face of all the earth, and every tree, in which is the fruit of a tree yielding seed ; to you it shall be for meat : and to every beast of the earth, and to every fowl of the air, and to every thing that creepeth upon the earth, wherein there is life, I have given every green herb for meat :' and now the evening and the morning were the sixth day.⁷ The sixth day was now completed, and the seventh day began, on which God, having finished the creation, rested from all the work which he had made. *And God blessed the seventh day, and sanctified it, because that in it he had rested from all his work, which he had created and made :'*⁸ these are the generations of the Heavens, and of the Earth, when they were created.¹

Moses here ends his summary, or general account, of the creation : and here, I think, they who divided our Bible into chapters and verses should have ended the first chapter of Genesis ; and the second chapter should have begun with these words : In the day that the Lord made the Earth and the Heavens, &c.

The second chapter of Genesis being, as I have hinted, a resumption of the argument treated in the first, in order to ⁶ Some fanciful writers have represented, that the man was at first created of two bodies, a male and a female ; and that God of these made two persons, by dividing or separating the one body from the other. It is generally said, that this was a fiction of the rabbins ; but I should apprehend it to be of a more early origin. Plato's fable of the Androgynes (see Plat. in Conviv. vol. iii. p. 189, edit. Serrani) shows us what sort of traditions he met with in searching through the then ancient literature ; and I should think it no unreasonable supposition, that a fiction of this kind might have its first rise in those early times, when the Egyptians and Phœnicians began or made proficiency in disguising, with their fables and mythology, the plain narrations they found of the origin of things. See Euseb. Præp. Evang. lib. i. c. 10 ; Connect. of Sac. and Prof. Hist. vol. ii. book viii.

⁷ Gen. i. 28, 29, 30.

⁸ Ver. 31. This was the ancient way of computing the natural day : it began from the morning, proceeded to the evening, and continued until the next morning ; finished the preceding, and began the ensuing day. Thus the evening and the morning were the day, Gen. i. 5, 8, 13, 19, 23, 31. And in this way of computing, the Jews continued to their latest times. For thus we are told of the end of the Sabbath, Matt. xxviii. 1. The Sabbath was ending, as it began to dawn towards the first day of the week : the end of the night which had closed the Sabbath was the end of the computed day. The day following began with the morning sun.

⁹ Gen. ii. 2, 3.

¹ Ver. 4.

set forth more explicitly some particulars, which the first chapter had only mentioned in general, begins thus: In the day that, i. e. when³ the LORD made the Earth and the Heavens, and every plant of the field, before it was in the Earth, and every herb of the field, before it grew, for the LORD GOD had not caused it⁴ to rain upon the Earth; and there was not a man to till the ground; ~~nor~~⁵ did a mist go up from the Earth and water the whole face of the ground: but the LORD GOD formed man of the dust of the ground, and breathed into his nostrils the breath of life, and man became a living soul. And the LORD GOD had⁶ planted a garden eastward in Eden, and there he put the man whom he had formed.

In this manner Moses proceeds to reconsider the creation of man; first observing, that of itself, or by any powers of its own, the Earth had produced nothing. It was an ancient opinion, and very early in Egypt, where Moses had his birth and education, that the Earth originally, of itself, brought forth its fruits, plants, trees, and all kinds of living creatures, and men.⁶ Some have thought, that the natural fertility of ³ Eo die, i. e. quando—Dies tempus in genere passim dicitur. Cleric. in loc.

⁴ We begin this sentence with the particle for: the Hebrew text having the particle ו [ci,] we put in for to answer it: but ci should be here rendered nampe, quidem, indeed, not for: the sentence not being, for the LORD GOD had not caused it to rain—; but rather, the LORD GOD had indeed not caused it to rain—.

⁵ We render this paragraph, but there went up a mist from the Earth; in the affirmative; whereas the sense of the place shows us, that Moses intended to assert, that God made all things before any natural powers were in activity to be the cause of their production: the Hebrew particle ו [ve] is here used, and joins similar, i. e. negative sentences; there was no man to till the ground, nor mist went up from the Earth. The Arabic version has observed the true meaning of the place, rendering it, nec exhalatio ascendeat, &c.

⁶ We say planted, in the perfect tense; but the Hebrew perfect tense is often used in the sense of a preterpluperfect to speak of things done in a time past. This the Syriac version seems rightly to observe in a passage like this in the 19th verse of this chapter. We say, the LORD GOD formed out of the ground every beast—, as if God then made them, whereas the beasts were made some time before: the Syriac version is rendered, and the LORD GOD had formed—. And thus we should render the place before us: and the LORD GOD had planted a garden—for the garden was undoubtedly planted on the third day of the creation, when God caused all the plants and trees to spring out of the Earth, Gen. i. 11, 12, 13. Vide Diodor. Sic. Hist. lib. i. p. 5. The Greeks had sentiments of this kind from Egypt: for thus Euripides, ὅς οὐρανὸς τε γαῖα τ' ἦν μέγας μίαν ἔπειθ' ἐχρησθῆσαν ἀλλήλων δίχα, τίκτουσι πάντα κἀνδάναν αἰς θάλας, τὰ θήρα, κτήνη, θήρας οὐκ ἔ' ἄλκιον ἄνθρωπον,

τίμος τε θνητῶν—.

In Menalippe, v. 14.

⁶ The Roman poet seems to have been in doubt between two opinions in this matter; rather inclining to introduce an opifex rerum into all the produce of the whole creation; but not absolutely determining against the opinion of all the ground for these purposes was put in action, either by the rain which fell from Heaven, or by some moisture exhaled from the Earth, fertilized by the Sun, and falling down in a mist, spread abroad over the face of the ground.⁷ But Moses, contrary to all the imaginations of this philosophy, affirms, that by the word of God only all things were made; that there was not a plant, which God did not create before it was in the earth; nor an herb, which he had not made before it grew; and that God had made them all, before either rain or dew had watered the earth; or the earth had had any tillage from the hand of man; for that all the produce of the world had its beginning before there was any man to till the ground: but that other things being thus set in order, God last of all made man. He had, as I have observed, before told us, that God made man; and that he made two persons, the male and the female.⁸ He now proceeds more distinctly to relate, of what materials God made them both; when, and how they were created; where he placed them, and what command and directions he gave them, as soon as he gave them being.

And, 1. God *made the man of the dust of the ground, breathed into him the breath of life, and caused him to become a living soul.*⁹ 2. He put him into the garden, which he had planted, to dress it and keep it: and having therein caused to grow every tree either pleasant to the sight, or good for food; the tree of life also, and the tree of knowledge of good and evil; the LORD God commanded the man, saying, *of every tree of the garden thou mayest freely eat: but of the tree of the knowledge of good and evil, thou shalt not eat of it; for in the day that thou eatest thereof thou shalt surely die.*³ 3. Having given the man this injunction, the LORD God said, *it is not good that the man should be alone, I will make him a help meet for him.*³ But, 4. Before God proceeded to make this meet help for things arising from their natural seeds in the Earth, as soon as the Earth was aptly disposed to give rise to them.

"Vix ita limitibus discreverat omnia certis,
Cum quæ pressa diu massa latuere sub ipsa
Sidera cœperunt toto effervescere cœlo:
Nec regio foret ulla suis animalibus orba,
Astra tenent cœleste solum, formæque deorum,
Cesserunt nitidis habitandæ piscibus undæ:
Terra feras cepit, volucres agitabilis ær:
Natus homo est, sive hunc divino semine fecit
Ille opifex rerum, mundi melioris origo;
Sive recens tellus seductaque nuper ab alto
Æthere cognati retinebat semina cœli."

Ovid. Metamorph.

⁷ Thus perhaps they thought, who would have sung with Pindar, Ἄσπερ γὰρ ὁλύμπου Olymp. Ode i; or thought with Thales, aquam esse initium rerum.
⁸ Cicero Lib. de Nat. Deor. i, c. 10.

⁹ Gen. i, 27.

³ Ver. 16, 17.

⁹ Chap. ii, 7.

³ Ver. 18.

¹ Ver. 9.

man, the beasts of the field being before formed;⁴ and every fowl of the air, God brought Adam to a trial how he might name them.⁵ And after this, 5. *God caused a deep sleep to fall upon Adam, and he slept. And he took one of his ribs, and closed up the flesh instead thereof. And the rib, which the LORD GOD had taken from man, made he a woman, and brought her unto the man. And Adam said, this is now bone of my bones, and flesh of my flesh, she shall be called woman, because she was taken out of the man.*⁶ These are the particulars relating to the creation of mankind, which Moses distinctly mentions in this second chapter. And if we would place them in order as they were done, together with what is hinted in the first chapter, we might insert them between the 27th and 28th verses of the first chapter; *God created man in his own image; in the image of God created he him, and the male and the female he created both of them.*⁷ The male he formed of the dust of the ground;⁸ placed him in the garden, commanded him his duty there;⁹ declared that he did not intend him to be alone;¹ called him to try to name the creatures of the world;² then caused him to fall into a deep sleep, and out of the man made the woman to take her beginning.³ The male and the female being now both created, God gave them both the general blessing, and said unto them all that Moses farther adds in the 28th, 29th, and 30th verses of the first chapter; in all which the two chapters entirely agree, and the second is no more than a supplement to the former. For I think it needless to remark, that there is no manner of contradiction between the first chapter's giving them leave to eat of every tree upon the face of all the earth,⁴ when the second shows plainly, that of one tree in the garden they were not to eat.⁵ It is only to be observed, that the forbidden tree was one tree only, and that growing in the garden; there was no forbidden tree out of the garden all over the world. The restraint; as to one tree, was enjoined to be observed by them within their garden; but wherever they went out of their garden into the earth to replenish and subdue it, all was common. They had no care to inquire, whether a like tree with that prohibited in the garden, grew anywhere else in the world; for all that grew without the garden, every tree, and every herb upon the face of the earth, was indiscriminately given them for meat.

⁴ We render the place, God formed; but, as I have before observed, the Syriac version is rightly translated, God had formed; for the creatures were made before man.

⁵ Gen. ii, 19, 20.

⁶ Chap. ii, 7.

⁷ Ver. 19, 20.

⁸ Chap. ii, 17.

⁹ Ver. 23.

¹ Ver. 11, 17.

² Ver. 21, 22.

³ Chap. i, 27.

⁴ Ver. 18.

⁵ Chap. i, 29.

CHAPTER II.

Considerations concerning some particulars related by Moses as belonging to Adam's first day.

NO sooner was Adam created, than Moses tells us he heard the voice of God;¹ and that, I think, upon two different points. First; he was audibly commanded, that he should not eat of the forbidden tree.² Secondly; he was told, that he should not live alone; for that God would make for him a help, that should be his likeness.³ Without doubt he sufficiently understood what was thus spoken to him; otherwise the voice of God had spoken to him in vain. But it will be here asked, how should Adam, having never before heard words, instantly know the meaning of what the voice of God thus spake to him? May we not fully answer this question by another? how did the apostles, and such of the early disciples of CHRIST as God so enabled,⁴ instantly know the meaning of words, in tongues or languages which they had never before heard or understood? The Spirit of God in both cases raised in the mind the ideas intended, as far as God was pleased to have them perceived; which the words spoken would have raised, had a

¹ Gen. ii, 17.

² Ibid.

³ Ver. 18. I apprehend the word which our version renders a help meet for him, might be translated, a help, that shall be his likeness. The Hebrew words are עֲזָרָה כְּנֶגְדּוֹ [nezer cenegeddo:] the interlinear Latin renders them, auxilium quasi coram eo, a help, as it were before him, i. e. in his sight or presence, to stand ready to receive his instructions, to aid and execute them. But I do not find the word neged ever thus used. To stand before, or in the presence of one ready for his aid or service, is, I think, always otherwise expressed in Scripture: See Deut. x, 8; 1 Sam. xvi, 22, &c. Some of the versions intimate the meaning of this passage to be, that God would make for Adam a help like himself: adjutorium simile sibi, says the vulgar Latin. Bonbir nar' abrit, says the Septuagint. The Syriac is, adjutorem similem ipsi. Onkelos, adjutorium quasi eum. And why may we not, instead of taking the word neged to be a preposition, and to signify coram, before, or in the presence of, suppose it to be a noun substantive from the word nagad, indicavit, and translate cenegeddo, quasi indicium ejus? I would say in English, an indicating, or, as it were, a speaking likeness of him, knowledge of such words in a natural way been attained. God, who planted the ear, hath given us to hear; and so made us, that whatever sound strikes that organ, shall move the mind of him who hears it. But in themselves words are mere sounds; when they strike the ear, the understanding instantly and naturally judges, whether they are soft or loud, harsh or agreeable; i. e. how the ear is affected by them. But to give words a meaning; to make them carry, not only the voice of the speaker to the hearer's ear, but the intention of the speaker's mind to the hearer's heart; this comes not naturally from mere hearing, but from having learned what intention is to be given to such words as are spoken. Should a man hear it said to him, bring the bread, it is evident, that if the words had never before been heard by him, they would be to him sounds of no determinate meaning. But let the word bread be repeated to him, and the loaf showed him, until he perceives, that whenever he hears the word bread, the loaf is intended by it; let him farther, upon hearing the word bring, see the action intended by this word done, until he apprehends it, and from that time the words, whenever he hears them, will speak their design. But should we now say, that therefore some process of this sort must have been necessary for our first parents' understanding what God, in the beginning of their being, was pleased to cause in words to be heard by them; we err most inconsiderately, neither attending to the Scriptures, nor to the power of God. The Scriptures show us, in the instance of the apostles and early disciples above mentioned, that God has in fact, long since the days of Adam, made men instantly understand words never before heard or learned by them. And he can undoubtedly, from any sound heard, teach the heart of man what knowledge he pleases, instantly causing, from any words spoken, such sentiments to arise in the mind, as he thinks fit to cause by them. This matter, I apprehend, is so plain, that it is unnecessary to be argued in general; though it may not be improper, before I leave this topic, to consider a little farther, what extent or compass of ideas we may reasonably suppose our first parents had of the things spoken to them from the words of God, which they heard in this their first day.

⁴ 1 Cor. xii, 10—30.

An ingenious writer has queried upon this subject: How could Eve, upon hearing that death was threatened to the eating of the forbidden tree, have any notion of what could be meant by dying,⁵ having neither seen nor felt any thing like it? Our author seems to think, that our first parents could have no ideas of death at all, if they had not such sentiments as time and experience enabled them to form, and which they had gradually more and more enlarged. Whereas nothing can be more obvious, than that if upon hearing what God threatened, namely, that they should die, God caused them to apprehend that they should cease to be, though they could in nowise conceive the manner how; a general notion of this sort might have been sufficient for them.⁶ Their first idea of dying was, undoubtedly, not the image which they afterwards came to have of it, when they slew their first sacrifice. And their idea of death became afterwards farther augmented with new terrors, when the murder of their son Abel, by Cain, showed them more plainly how it would affect them in their own persons. Many incidents, also, probably occasioned their additional observations and reflections concerning it; although as we cannot, so neither could they, have their idea of death full and complete, until they had gone through their own dissolution. But, as in this one instance, so in all others, the sentiments which God was pleased to raise in the minds of our first parents of the things he spake to them, were no more than as it were their first and unimproved notions of those things; God did not cause them to think of them in that extent and variety of conception, which they came afterwards to have, as their thoughts enlarged by a farther acquaintance with the things spoken of, and with other things from which they distinguished, or with which they compared them. In and from the words, which God was pleased to speak to them,⁷ he gave them some plain and obvious sentiments, which were the first beginnings of the thoughts of their lives; conceptions which grew gradually, and produced others more enlarged and diversified, as they grew more and more acquainted with themselves and the things of the world.

⁵ Quo die comedetis moriemini—Mori! Quid hoc rei est inquit ignara virgo, quæ nihil unquam mortuum viderat, ne florem quidem, neque mortis imaginem, somnum, vel noctem, oculis vel animo adhuc senserat. Burnet, Archæol. p. 291.

It may here be considered, whether God was pleased to give Adam and Eve to understand all the words of some one language, so that they immediately conceived whatever was said to them in that particular tongue. Many have supposed, that God endowed them with both speaking and understanding some innate language; but I confess I cannot see sufficient reasons for this sentiment, as I have suggested in another place.⁶ The author of Ecclesiasticus, indeed, tells us of our first parents, that *they received the use of the five operations of the Lord: and in the sixth place he imparted to them understanding, and in the seventh speech, an interpreter of the cogitations thereof.*⁷ But we shall hastily go beyond the true sentiment of this considerate writer, if we conclude from it, that God instantly gave Adam every word he was to introduce into his language, or gave him instantly to understand every word of that language in which God spake, by whomsoever any word of it might have been spoken to him. The author of Ecclesiasticus does indeed declare, that the speech of man is the gift of God; but in like manner he represents, that the perception of man by his five senses, and the judgment of man by his understanding, is so too;⁸ not meaning, that in giving man speech, God actually gave him every word he was to utter, any more than that, in giving him the five operations of his senses, or in giving him understanding, God planted innate in him every idea which his senses were to raise; or actually formed in his mind every sentiment of his judgment and understanding, respecting those things which he perceived. Rather, in all these cases, God gave only a capacity or ability; in the one, he made man capable of sensations of things without him; in the other, able to form a judgment of the things perceived, and in language capable of uttering sounds, and of judging from what he had heard from the voice of God, how he might make his own sounds significant to himself, and in time to others, to intend what he might fix and design by each sound to point out and denominate. In this manner Adam and Eve might form for themselves all the words of their language, beside those few which had actually been spoken to them by the voice of God. Their immediately understanding these was unquestionably from him who spake to them:⁹ but because they were instantly enabled by the power of God, who could affect their minds as he pleased, to understand each word that proceeded from the mouth of God (for otherwise they could not have been instructed by God's speaking to them;) it does not, therefore, follow, that they should as readily understand all the words of some one whole tongue.

⁶ See Connect. vol. i, b. ii.

⁷ Ecclesiasticus xvii, 5.

Some writers, indeed, represent Adam as abounding in great fluency of speech, pouring forth the fulness of his heart in most eloquent soliloquies, as soon as he perceived he was 'in being';¹ but a considerate inquirer will think this very unnatural. Adam, though created a man, not in the imbecility of infancy and childhood, cannot be supposed to have had a mind stored with ideas (and without these, what could be his thoughts?) before he attained them by sensations from without, or reflections upon his perceptions within: and shall we think, that he had words upon his tongue sooner or faster than he acquired sentiments? Moses introduces Adam into the world in a manner far more natural: whatever Adam heard and understood from the voice of God, Moses does not hint, that he attempted to speak a word, until God called him to try to name the creatures;² so that here we find the first attempt Adam made to speak. We perceive likewise the manner and the process of it; for God, we are told, brought

⁸ Ecclesiasticus xvii, 5.

¹ See Milton's Paradise Lost, b. viii, ver. 273.

² Gen. ii, see to ver. 19.

⁹ Vide quæ sup.

the beasts of the field, and the fowls of the air,³ unto Adam, *to see what he would call them: and whatsoever Adam called every living creature, that was the name thereof.*⁴ After Adam had been called to this trial, we find him able also to give a name to the woman.⁵ But before this trial we read nothing that can induce us to think that he attempted to speak at all; rather, an attention to what was said to him by the voice of God entirely engrossed him. God brought to Adam the creatures, to see what he would call them: i. e. to put Adam upon considering how to name them. But how superfluous a thing would this have been, if Adam had had an innate word for every creature that was to be named by him? Whenever he saw a thing, the innate name for it would have readily offered itself without trial; he must have had that name for it, and he could have had no other. But the text plainly supposes that Adam, in naming the creatures, had been more at liberty; whatsoever Adam named every living creature, that was the name thereof. He might have called them by other names than he did; he might have fixed this or that sound, just as he inclined to call this or that creature, and therefore had no innate names for any; but, having determined with himself what sound to use for the name of one, and what for another, God ALMIGHTY herein not interposing, he was left to himself, and so fixed what he determined for the name of each. But,

I must confess, that an incident which follows may require our examination before we dismiss this point. If we consider how Eve was affected when the serpent spake to her,⁶ we see no reason to think she had any difficulty in understanding any part of what was said to her. She as readily took the meaning of what the serpent expressed to her, as either she or Adam had before apprehended what had been spoken to them by the voice of God. God doth know, said the serpent, *that in the day that ye eat thereof, then your eyes shall be opened, and ye shall be as gods, knowing good and evil.*⁷ God had said nothing to them concerning their eyes being opened, nor their being as gods; and therefore, if they had no farther knowledge of the meaning of words, than of those only which the voice of God had spoken to them, here seem to have been sounds never before heard by them, and how could these be so readily received and apprehended? We can in nowise suppose that the serpent had God's power to make his words instantly as intelligible to Eve as he pleased.

And it will increase the difficulty, if we should consider the words here spoken as bearing not a plain but a metaphorical meaning. Their eyes were to be opened; i. e. say some,

³ The fact here related will be more distinctly considered chap. iii.

⁴ Gen. ii, 19.

⁵ Chap. iii.

⁶ Ver. 23.

⁷ Ver. 5.

their understandings were to be enlarged; open thou mine eyes, said the Psalmist, and I shall see wondrous things from thy law.⁸ The Psalmist here prays for what he elsewhere expresses in words without the figure, that God, through his commandments, would make him wiser, would give him more understanding than he should have had without them.⁹ And it may seem that, according to Moses, the event of their eyes being opened was, they knew they were naked;⁴ they had knowledge of themselves, different from what they had before; so that we may perhaps think, that Moses here used the eye of the body metaphorically for the sense of the understanding, intending by the opening of the one the increase of the judgment of the other. Now, if this was the meaning of the words of the serpent to Eve, and if Eve thus understood them, we cannot conceive that she had been at this time a mere novice in language, just beginning to form first notions of a few original and plain words. We must rather think her an adept in the tongue which the serpent used, that she had a ready conception of all the elegance of its diction; could give its metaphors and figurative expression their true meaning; could receive and feel their full and real import. But to all this I answer: . . .

1. There was no metaphor intended by Moses in the words in which he has expressed what the serpent said to Eve. The diction of the Psalmist is indeed figurative, open thou mine eyes, and I shall see wondrous things from thy law;² but the word used for open is not the same with that of Moses: גל עין [gal nainai] says the Psalmist: the word here used is a termination of the verb galah: but Moses expresses the serpent's words to Eve, your eyes shall be opened, נפקחו עיניכם [niphkechu neineicem]:³ Moses's word for shall be opened is a termination of the verb pakach. The Hebrew language has both these verbs, and we render both by the word open; but the one only, namely galah, speaks in the metaphorical sense; means by opening the eye instructing the understanding, either by our forming a better judgment of things, or when God by vision, or in any other manner, was pleased to give an extraordinary revelation.⁴ Pakach nain signifies no more than to see, what is the object of the natural eye;⁵ and to this meaning it is confined so strictly, that although pakach nain is sometimes said of God, when he is spoken of after the manner of men; yet it is used only where God is said to look upon such outward actions as can come under the observation of the eye;⁶ wherever God is said to regard what can ⁸ Psalm cxix, 18.

⁹ Ver. 98, 99.

¹ Gen. iii, 7.

² Psalm cxix, ubi sup.

³ Gen. iii, 5.

⁴ See Numb. xxiv, 4.

⁵ Gen. xxi, 9; 2 Kings iv, 35; vi, 17, 20; Prov. xx, 13.

⁶ See 2 Kings xix, 16; Isa. xxxvii, 17; Dan. ix, 18, &c.

be matter of the attention of the mind only, the expression pakach nain is, I think, not used.

Pakach nain, therefore, carries the intention no farther than to the outward sight; signifies no more than to open the eye of the body: I might say, it has such a propriety to express this, and this only, that as facere in Latin may be put, as it were, idiomatically for to sacrifice,

Cum faciam vitulā—————

Vinc.

so a participle of the verb pakach, without nain (the word for eye) after it, may be used in the Hebrew language for one who has his eye-sight, in opposition to the being blind;⁷ so that we use Hebrew words, not in their Hebrew or true meaning, if we take Moses, by the words he has used, to intend that the serpent had herein said any thing referring farther than to their natural eye. But,⁸

2. Let us observe, that in what the serpent said to Eve, he was for the greater part confined to use the very words, and none other, than what both Eve and Adam had heard and understood from the voice of God; and therefore all these she readily understood as she had before heard and understood them. Accordingly, there could be nothing in the serpent's first address to Eve, *Yea, hath God said, Ye shall not eat of every tree of the garden?*⁹ but what she must have readily understood from God's having said, *Of every tree of the garden ye may freely eat;*¹ only we may remark, though Moses has in divers places historically called God, Elohim,² yet that God not having as yet so named himself to her and Adam, the word Elohim, God, might not have been heard by Eve before the serpent spake it to her. But, if this was in fact true, as there was no other person but one, who had spoken before this to her or Adam, there could be no confusion in her hearing the serpent call him Elohim, God; she must readily understand whom he intended by that name. To go on: The serpent's next words, *Ye shall not surely die,*³ must instantly, when spoken, be sufficiently understood, from

⁷ Exod. iv, 11; xxiii, 8.

⁸ It may perhaps be here questioned, whether the words in this place used by Moses were the very words spoken by the serpent? Indeed I apprehend they were not, as I do not conceive that Moses's Hebrew was the original unimproved language of the world. See Connect. vol. i, b. ii. But as we have all reason, whether we conceive Moses to have written by an immediate inspiration; or whether, under a divine direction, he wrote from ancient memoirs of his forefathers, which were recorded in an older and perhaps then obsolete diction; we may and ought to allow, that he expressed in the language of his own times, with a strict propriety, what the serpent had spoken in words of the same meaning, though probably of a more antique form, construction, and pronunciation.

¹ Gen. iii, 1.

² See Chap. i, and ii.

¹ Chap. ii, 16.

³ Chap. iii, 4.

her having understood what God had said before, Ye shall surely die,⁴ as any one that understands a proposition affirmed, must understand the denial of that same proposition. The serpent proceeded, for God doth know, that in the day that ye eat thereof, then your eyes shall be opened, and ye shall be as gods [ce Elohim]—as God, knowing good and evil. Here I would observe, that in the day that ye eat thereof, had been before said to them from the mouth of God,⁵ and that God had called the tree, the tree of the knowledge of good and evil,⁶ and therefore from what God had in these words said to them, all the sentiment she had of knowing, and of knowing good and evil, may be conceived to arise upon the serpent speaking to her in these like terms. The serpent told her they should be as gods; we render it in the plural number, but not rightly; for it is not reasonable to imagine the serpent intimated to her herein, that there were spiritual beings, many in number in the invisible world; this did not as yet enter her imagination. She and Adam had heard only one who spake to them; the serpent had told Eve that this person was Elohim;⁷ he here tells her, that if they eat of the tree, they should increase in knowledge of good and evil, be ce Elohim, like him: and herein, as far as they had any notions of what knowledge was, nothing unintelligible was proposed to her.

There remains still to be considered, what she expected from what seemed to be promised in the words, your eyes shall be opened. But I may fully answer this in three or four observations. 1. I have already said, that these words have no reference to the improvement of the knowledge of the mind. What the tempter offered concerning that came afterwards under the words Ye shall be as God, knowing good and evil. The words concerning their eyes being opened, are such, that, according to the Hebrew idiom, they speak no more than some enlargement of their outward sight. 2. I would remark, that it cannot be necessary to say, that Eve had an adequate and full notion of the true meaning of these words. The writers, that would puzzle and perplex this matter, contend, that the fall happened immediately after the creation; but we can in nowise find any one reason for such an assertion. Rather, I apprehend, we shall see what may induce us to think that several days intervened between the Sabbath after⁸ the day of Adam and Eve's creation, and the ⁴ Gen. ii, 17.

⁵ Ibid.

⁶ Ibid.

⁷ Chap. iii, 1.

⁸ See hereafter. Syncellus cites the Annæ Iulianæ to say, that Adam was guilty of the transgression in his seventh year, and expelled Paradise in his eighth. Syncelli Chronogr. p. 8. What the Minutes of Genesis here cited were I cannot say, nor by whom made; their authority can avail only to hint, that there have been ancient writers who did not think the fall had been so instantaneous as others have since imagined.

day on which the serpent tempted Eve. On the night of each of these days, Adam and Eve, in the course of nature, had known what sleep was, and how it differed from the being awake, and therefrom what it was to shut the eye, and what it was to open it; and probably had made themselves, before the serpent spake to Eve, a name for the one, and a name for the other. Therefore, though the serpent here used words, which they had not heard from the mouth of God, yet he might not herein use words which they had not agreed to make, and had daily spoken to and heard from themselves, and consequently were words that were not without meaning. I do not say that Adam or Eve, at hearing these words, conceived exactly the event which afterwards came to pass; for it is easy to observe, that we may be said to know the general meaning of words, sufficiently to give us expectations from them, and yet not be able determinately to see their full extent and import. Every one, that has a common understanding of the Greek tongue, would, upon reading the philosopher, παθαρμοὶ ψυχῆς λογικῆς εἰσὶ αἱ μαθηματικαὶ ἐπισημαί,⁹ apprehend that these studies may greatly improve us, as the English reader may, from no better translation of the words than, the mathematics are purgations of the reasonable mind: but the particular improvement to be obtained from them would not hence be known to any, who had not experienced the habit, which may be acquired from these studies, of pursuing a long train of ideas variously intermingled, so as to see through all the steps which truly lead to the most distant conclusions. Whether Eve, well knowing from many days' experience, wherein the opening the eye differed from shutting it, thought, that after eating the fruit she should never more slumber nor sleep; or whether she conceived such an addition to their sight, as that they might thenceforth be able to see Him, whom hitherto they had heard only, without his being visible to them,¹ I cannot say; but we may conceive, that she had formed to herself great expectations, without reaching the full meaning of the words, much less apprehending what proved in reality to be the event. Upon the whole: when God was pleased to speak to Adam and Eve, as they had not before heard words, we cannot conceive, that they could have understood what the voice of God spake, unless God had caused them to understand the words spoken. But allowing that God enabled them to perceive what he thought fit to say, and duly attending to what Moses relates farther; we may conclude, that nothing more was said to them, or that they hurried into the world, or the things of the world broke in upon them, faster, or in a greater variety, than they could form to themselves words, to talk of, and to know distinctly, as far as their knowledge did, or it was necessary it should then reach, the things they had to hear or to speak, to be concerned in, or affected with in their lives. Therefore no more being necessary for them, than that God should cause them so to understand what he thought fit to speak to them; we justly conclude, that, respecting making other words, and settling the meaning and intention of them, he left our first parents to do what he had given them full powers and opportunity to do in a natural way for themselves, unto which God was pleased to lead Adam, as far as he herein wanted guidance and direction, in the manner which shall be set forth in the ensuing chapter.

⁹ Hierocles in aurea Carmina Pythag.

¹ No divine appearance is recorded to have been seen before the days of Abraham. See Connect. b. ix.

THE fact, concerning which I am to inquire in this chapter, is thus related by Moses: *Out of the ground the LORD God formed every beast of the field, and every fowl of the air, and brought them unto Adam, to see what he would call them; and whatsoever Adam called every living creature, that was the name thereof: and Adam gave names to all cattle, and to the fowl of the air, and to every beast of the field.*¹ To form a right judgment of what is here said to be done, we must not too hastily rest satisfied with our English version of Moses's words; but inquire more strictly into his text, and examine how he relates this matter.

Ve'jitzer Jehovah Elohim min ha Adamah col chajath hassedah, vezeth Col Noph hashemaim, vejabea al ha Adam lireoth mah jikrah lo: Ve col asher jikra lo ha Adam (nepesh chajah) hua Shemo: vejikra ha Adam Shemoth lecol habeshema ve lenoph has Shemaim ve lecol chajath hassedah.³

And the LORD God formed out of the ground every beast of the field, and every fowl of the heavens, and he brought

¹ The Hebrew words are, and may be written and interlined as follows:—

Digitized by Google

unto Adam to see what he would call it. And whatsoever Adam called it (the living creature,) that was the name of it. And Adam gave names to every living creature, and to the fowls of the heavens, and to every beast of the field.

It is observable, that the first period of this passage, namely, and the Lord God formed out of the ground every beast of the field, and every fowl of the heaven, was not intended to hint, that God, at this juncture, created any living creatures anew. The words should rather have been rendered agreeably to the translation of the Syriac version,³ the Lord God had formed—; for they are not a relation that God had now made them, but a recognition of what had been before related, that he had been the Creator both of the birds and cattle;⁴ none of which were made at this time; for the one were created a day sooner than Adam,⁵ the other on the same day, but earlier and before him.⁶

In like manner, the words which begin the 20th verse, and Adam gave names to all cattle, and to the fowl of the air, and to every beast of the field, do not mean, that Adam now, at this one time, gave names to all living creatures; but are rather a remark, that the names of the creatures were given by Adam, and by no other. He himself (ha Adam;) says the text, named them; not now, all at once, which undoubtedly would have been too much for him; but he named them gradually, some at one time and some at another, in the process of his life, as incidents happened to give occasion for his so doing.

That the fact really was not that Adam now named all the creatures is evident, from the very express words of Moses, which relate the particular we are examining. The words of Moses are, *And the Lord God brought unto Adam, to see what he would call it;*⁷ *and whatsoever Adam called it, the living creature,*⁸ *that was the name of it.*⁹ The question here is, what did God bring unto the man? Our English version, following other translations, says them; i. e. every beast of the field, and every fowl of the air, for these are the words to which them must refer. But we should observe, that the word them is not in the Hebrew text: according to Moses, the name given by Adam was לו (lo,) i. e. to it; the pronoun being of the singular number, not plural; which the

³ Compegerat autem Dominus Deus de humo omnem bestiam. Vide Walt. Polyglott. Syr. Vers. in loc.

⁴ See Gen. i.

⁵ Chap. i, 20.

⁶ Ver. 24, 25.

⁷ Lireoth mah jikra lo. Gen. ii, 19.

⁸ Ve col asher jikra lo ha Adam nephesh chajath hua shemo. Ibid.

⁹ Hua shemo. Ibid. The Samaritan text is rendered more strictly to the Hebrew words in the Latin translation of it in our Polyglot Bible, thus: "Adduxitque ad Adam, ut videret, quomodo vocaret illud: et omne quod vocaret illud Adam animæ viventis hoc est nomen ejus."

next sentence expresses more fully; for the words are not as we render the text, and whatsoever Adam called every living creature. There is no word in the text for every: the Hebrew words say, whatsoever Adam called it, the living creature, that was the name of, not them, but the text says that was the name of it.

Thus the fact before us appears to be, that God brought unto Adam, not all the living creatures, for the text says no such thing. God indeed made all the creatures,¹ and Moses here recognizes this truth; but God brought unto Adam some one creature only, a nepesh chajah in the singular number,² to see what he would call it. Adam hereupon gave it a name; and what he thus called it, that was the name of it. God was pleased herein to bring Adam to a trial, to show him how he might use sounds of his own to be the names of things: he called him to give a name to one creature, and hereby put him upon seeing how words might be made for this purpose: Adam understood the instruction, and practised accordingly. For so Moses tells us: *Adam gave names to all cattle, and to the fowl of the air, and to every beast of the field.*³ The names of the creatures were not given by any express words from the voice of God; but were of Adam's own making, as he proceeded to use sounds of his own to be the names of things as himself designed them. God, as I said, brought Adam to name one creature: Adam had the sense and understanding to see hereby, how he might make words, and make use of them. Accordingly, in the progress of his life, as the creatures of the world came under his observation, he used this ability, and gave names to them all.

Now, if this was the fact, it must, I think, be allowed, that Adam had, as I have already observed, no formed, fixed, and innate language. If he had such a language, it must surely have been most superfluous to bring him to this trial, to set any creature before him to see what he would call it. An innate language, whenever and wherever he had seen any creature or thing in the world, would have instantly given

¹ Gen. i.

² See the text of Gen. ii, 19. I should have some difficulty to say, why nepesh chajah is not lenepesh chajah, in the dative case; as I think, nepesh standing after and referring to to, the construction should require. But I would offer to the consideration of the learned, whether, if in the ancient manuscript this text was written in lines ending with the words which I have made the final words of the several lines, as I have before transcribed them, nepesh chajah might not be so situated at the end of a line, as that a copyist might mistake, and put it to the end of the third line, when it really should be at the end of the second. If this may be supposed, the words of Moses are exceeding clear, being exactly as follows:

And the Lord God had formed of the ground every beast of the field, and every fowl of the heavens, and brought unto Adam a living creature, to see what name he would give to it. And whatsoever name Adam gave it, that was the name of it, &c.

³ Gen. ii, 20.

him its innate name. No trial could have been wanted to lead him to it, for this name would, as it were, have offered itself; and I cannot see how he should have thought of any other. But Moses seems in nowise to represent Adam under these limitations; a creature was brought to him to see what he would call it; and there is not the least hint, that he was so much as directed what to call it; for (ha Adam) Adam himself named all the creatures.⁴ We have no reason to think, that God dictated the name of any; and the expressions of Moses hint, that Adam had all possible liberty to name them as his own imagination should lead him. It seems, that nothing had been herein fixed or determined for him; but he called every thing by what name he pleased, and whatsoever name he fixed and determined for any creature, that was the name thereof.

Our Bibles close the 20th verse of the second chapter of Genesis with these words; but for Adam there was not found a help meet for him. The adding these words to the end of this 20th verse may seem to represent, that in the transaction ending with this observation there had been, undoubtedly, a survey taken of all the creatures in the world, to have it seen that none of them were fit to be Adam's associate, and consequently that all the creatures had been convened for Adam to name them. I believe our translators had this sentiment, and they, who divided the Bible into verses, were probably of the same opinion. This thought may easily take the unwary, though I am surprised that the difficulty of conceiving how it could be has not occasioned a more strict examination. However, as I have shown that Moses's text says no such thing, I may as clearly prove, that in the words of Moses, which we improperly add to the 20th verse, no such insinuation was really intended.

For, 1. These words, but for Adam there was not found a help meet for him, ought not to have been made a part of the 20th verse, because they are the beginning of the relation of a new transaction; and having no reference to any thing going before, they should have begun a new period, absolutely independent of, and detached from the former. Agreeably hereto we may observe, 2. That the particle ve, which we here translate but, ought to be in this place rendered and. It is often so rendered in the first and in this second chapter of Genesis: it is not here a disjunctive particle, disjoining and distinguishing two parts of one period; but the particle often used by Moses when, having finished his narration of one fact, he passes on from that to quite another.⁵ 3. If we suppose, that the words above cited belong to the 20th verse, we shall find it difficult to make out their grammatical construction; it will be difficult to ascertain a nominative case to the verb found; for the word, which we translate was found, is not passive, as we render it. The words are לֹא מָצָא (loa matza), he did not find, in the active voice; and the nominative case to this verb follows after the next verb in the next verse, and is Jehovah Elohim, the LORD God.⁶ This is a construction very clear and frequent in many languages, and in the Hebrew tongue amongst others; and our translators ought to have been carefully attentive to it.

⁴ Gen. ii, 20.

⁵ Gen. i, 6, 9, 14, 20, &c.; ii, 7, 15, 18, 20, 21.

4. I would farther observe, that the Hebrew verb matza does not always signify to find a thing after having looked for it; but when used with a noun to which ל is prefixed, it makes an idiom of the Hebrew tongue, to which we have something similar in a particular use of our word find in English. Buxtorf remarks,⁷ that the verb matza, with a dative case by the prefix le, signifies to suffice; I should rather say, sufficiently to supply: thus Numbers xi, 22, Shall the flocks and the herds be slain for them? וַיִּמָּצָא לֵהֶם (ve matza lehem), and will it suffice them? i. e. will it sufficiently supply them. Thus again, Judges xxi, 14, And Benjamin came again at that time, and they gave them wives, which they had saved alive of the women of Jabesh Gilead: but the Hebrew words are וְלֹא-מָצְאוּ לָהֶם כֵּן (ve loa matzaeu lehem ken), and yet so they sufficed them not, they did not sufficiently supply them so. I would, more closely to the Hebrew, translate both these places by our English word find. Shall the flocks and the herds be slain for them? I should say, will it find them? In the passage in the Book of Numbers, They gave them wives, which they had saved alive of the women of Jabesh Gilead, but, (I should render the place) they did not find them so. The expression, to find a person, is still used in some parts of England, to signify to supply that person with such things as we undertake to procure for him; and in this sense I take the word matza to be here used by Moses. God had promised to find Adam with a person, or helper, that should be his likeness: Moses, now going to relate in what manner God made this person, introduces his narration very properly with observing, that God had not yet⁸ found or supplied Adam with this companion: and having suggested this observation, he proceeds to relate in what manner God now supplied him. And the LORD God had not supplied or found the man with the help meet for him: but *caused a deep sleep to fall upon him, &c.*⁹

⁶ The words are, Gen. ii, 20,

וְלֹא-מָצָא עֹזֶר כְּנֶגְדּוֹ at cadere fecit judicium ejus adjutorium non invenerat et homini

וַיִּהְיֶה אֱלֹהִים וַיְרַחֵם עַל הָאָדָם
Adamum in soporem Deus Jehovah

⁷ Buxtorf, in voce מצא.

⁸ Gen. ii, 20.

⁹ Ver. 21.

CHAPTER IV.

Concerning the Formation of Eve, and the farther Transactions of Adam's first Day; together with some Observations upon the whole.

THE account given by Moses, of the formation of Eve, is in words as follow : And the LORD God caused a deep sleep to fall upon Adam, and he slept : and he took one of his ribs, and closed up the flesh instead thereof : and the rib, which the LORD God had taken from man, made he a woman and brought her unto the man. God caused a deep sleep to fall upon Adam : the Hebrew word for a deep sleep is תרדמה [tardemah] : it is a word used in divers places in the Old Testament : in some it signifies no more than what we in English call a sound sleep ; a sleep from which we awake, not having dreamed, or been sensible of any thing that has passed during the time of it. It is thus used in the Book of Proverbs ; slothfulness casteth into a deep sleep :¹ and more emphatically in the first Book of Samuel, where David and Abishai went by night into Saul's camp, and took away the spear and cruse of water from his bolster, without awaking him or any of the soldiery, that lay asleep round about him ;² for, says the text, tardemah Jehovah, a deep sleep of or from the LORD was fallen upon them ; hereby meaning, that they were in a most exceeding sound sleep ; so sound, that we might, using the Hebrew idiom,³ speak as

¹ Prov. xix, 15.

² 1 Sam. xxvi, 12.

³ It is a solemn, but not unusual expression in the Hebrew tongue, to say of a thing beyond measure great, that it is of the LORD ; not always meaning hereby, that God himself is the immediate cause of it, but signifying it to be such, that naturally no account is easy to be given of it. So great was the hardness of Pharaoh's heart, that God is thus said to have hardened it, though Pharaoh really hardened his own heart. Exod. vii, 13, 22 ; viii, 15, 19, 32 ; ix, 7, 34. See Connect. book ix. Thus it is said, that it was "of the LORD to harden the hearts of the Canaanites," that they should "come out against the Israelites in battle." Joshua ix, 19. Not that we are to say, that God if God himself had been the cause of it. But although this is the general signification of the word tardemah; yet it is farther used sometimes to denote that kind of sleep in which God, in the earlier ages of the world, was pleased, in divers manners, to give revelations unto men. When sound asleep, their natural sensations made no impressions on them; but, by internal visions and movements of their minds, they had strong and lively sentiments raised of what God was thus pleased to show them. Daniel says of himself, using the verb from which the noun tardemah is derived, nirdampti, *I was in a deep sleep, on my face towards the ground, but he touched me, and set me upright.*⁴ In a deep sleep of this sort, Daniel was made to understand a vision that appeared to him.⁵ And Job in like manner, in tardemah, a deep sleep of this kind, when a vision of the night fell upon him, saw a spirit passing before his face, an image before his eyes, and heard a voice.⁶ Abram⁷ in tardemah, this depth of sleep; had a very signal revelation made to him; and, accordingly, such was the tardemah, deep sleep, which on the occasion before us fell on Adam. Whether, abstracted from all impressions of his outward senses, he saw, as Balaam speaks, a vision of the Almighty;⁸ as the Book of Job mentions, a spirit, an image, before him,⁹ actually performing what was done to him, I cannot determine. But, as Moses has nowhere said, that Adam ever saw any similitude or appearance to represent God,¹ I rather think, that God was pleased, by impressions, such as the ear usually conveys to the mind, and which God undoubtedly can cause to arise in us, as lively as he pleases, as well without their actually coming through the ear, as if they did come through it, to cause Adam to perceive the same, as if awake he had heard that voice, in which God had before spoken to him; commanding a rib, a bone, to be taken out of him, and seen that it was done; bidding the flesh be closed up instead thereof, and it was so:² saying, Let the woman be made hereof, and she was created. Upon Adam's actually prevented the Canaanites from securing themselves from ruin. See Connect. book xii. It was the obstinacy of their own hearts that brought them to destruction; which obstinacy being so great, as that we in English would call it a fatal obstinacy, the Hebrew expression for it was, an obstinacy from the Lord; not meaning hereby, that when any man was tempted, he should say he was "tempted of God, for God cannot be tempted with evil, neither tempteth he any man." James i, 13. Their obstinacy was their own wilfulness, great, and indeed beyond all common expression, and therefore said to be of the Lord. In this sense I understand what is said of the sound sleep of Saul and his army: not taking the text to mean any more, than that it was so deep a sleep, as might be hard to say how it could be, that they were not awaked out of it.

⁴ Daniel viii, 18.

⁵ Job iv. 13, 15, 16.

⁶ Numb. xxiv, 16.

⁷ We read of no divine appearance to any one before the days of Abraham. See Connect. book ix.

⁸ Gen. ii, 21—23.

⁹ Ver. 19—26.

⁷ Gen. xv, 12—16.

⁹ Job ubi sup.

awaking, he found in fact, what in his sleep had been showed to him: the woman, such in reality as he had before apprehended her, was brought to him; i. e. was present before him; and he now, using the power of naming things, the exercise which was upon his mind, as he had just began to practise it, before he fell asleep; having had a clear perception of what had been transacted, said naturally of this new creature, *This is now bone of my bone, and flesh of my flesh: she shall be called woman, because she was taken out of man.*³ But I conceive that Adam ended here: for he in nowise added the words which follow; *Therefore shall a man leave father and mother, and shall cleave unto his wife, and they shall be one flesh.*⁴ for Adam could not yet say what it was to be a father or a mother, and therefore could draw no conclusion concerning them. Moses indeed records these words as now spoken, but he does not say that Adam spake them; and our Saviour has told us, that not Adam, but God himself said this to them. It was He, who made them, that said, *For this cause shall a man leave father and mother, and shall cleave to his wife, and they twain shall be one flesh.*⁵

The last transaction of this first day of Adam's life was, that after the woman was created, God blessed them both, and said unto them what we read in the 20th, 29th, and 30th verses of the first chapter of Genesis; the particulars of which may be sufficiently considered, if I take a general review of the things concerning Adam said and done in this day.

One of Dr. Burnet's objections to the history of Moses is, that it heaps together too many things for the space of time allotted to them:⁶ and indeed this writer has endeavoured to run together a multiplicity of incidents, and to crowd them all into this one day, in order to represent it as having been a day of great hurry and confusion, rather than such as the day ought to have been, on a cool and deliberate sense of which, and a conduct according to it, depended the life or death (we might say, if there had been no farther purpose in the deep counsel of God for us, depended the whole) of man. But if we carefully examine, and distinguish what are the facts which Moses ascribes to this one day, and what are not, and in what manner he describes them, we shall see reason to differ widely from this writer. God breathed into Adam the breath of life, and caused him to become a living soul:⁷ but Moses in nowise describes Adam, as soon as he began to think, as abounding instantly in a variety of conceptions concerning his own nature, concerning the Deity, or the works

³ Gen. ii, 23.

⁴ Ver. 24.

⁵ Matt. xix, 4, 5.

⁶ Quantillo tempore hæc omnia peracta narrantur!—! Quot autem, et quanta congerenda sunt in hunc unum diem! Burnet, Archæol, p. 294.

⁷ Gen. ii, 7.

of God, and the fabric of the world.⁸ Had Moses brought forth Adam expatiating in such an unbounded wild of sudden and undigested apprehensions, there would have been reason to consider whether the human mind would not have hence fallen into great confusion. But there is a propriety in the manner in which Moses brings Adam into the world: he does not tell us, that in order to take his first sight of things, God set him upon a hill, to look around him over the creation; but God put him into a garden, where a few plain and easy objects surrounded and confined his first views from taking in such variety as would have been too much for him. A bounded shade of trees was a scene, which neither fatigued his eye nor gave a multiplicity of conceptions to his mind. In this silent cover from the many things which were in the world, he hears the voice of God, and finds that he knows what was said to him.

The words now spoken to him were not such as called him into the midst of things to load him with a multitude of sentiments, either of God, of himself, or of what was in the world; or concerning what were to be the moral and relative duties of his life. The voice of God, as yet, spake to him only of the plain objects then visibly before him; called the lofty plants, which he saw, the trees of the garden; told him, that he might eat of them all, except one; but commanded him not to eat of that one; for that, if he did, he should surely die.⁹ And it is remarkable, that this one tree was so distinguished from all others by its situation,¹ that it must, at sight, have been known in order to be avoided, before he had time to make observations, to see wherein one tree differed from another.

May we add, that Adam heard the voice of God declare, that it was not good that he should be alone, but that a help, which should be his likeness, should be made for him?² Suppose that these words conveyed to him, not all the enlarged notions of the wants and imperfections of solitary life,³ nor ⁸ We may see a large field of imagination of this kind most beautifully coloured, but in fact, and the reason of the thing, mere fancy and romance, in Milton, Par. Lost, book viii.

⁹ Gen. ii, 16, 17.

¹ It does not seem to me determined, that the tree of life stood also in the midst of the garden. Eve seems rather to hint that the forbidden tree stood single and alone in that situation, Gen. iii, 3. Our 9th verse of the second chapter might be pointed and translated thus: "And out of the ground made the Lord God to grow every tree that is pleasant to the sight, and good for food, and the tree of life; in the midst of the garden also, the tree of knowledge of good and evil." And thus this verse would agree with what Eve said in the next chapter.

² Gen. ii, 18. vide quæ sup.

³ Milton supposes Adam wonderfully able to expatiate upon the unhappiness of solitude, and the benefits of equal society; to say why God might, but man could not, comfortably be alone. The representation he draws is most delightfully poetical. But we can in nowise think considerably, that Adam the variety of the comforts of social happiness; the ideas of which could not begin and increase in him, sooner or farther, than a knowledge and experience of life raised and improved them: and suppose, that the words suggested to him no more, than that another person like himself should be made to be with him, and that it was good for him to have it so (a point, which, perhaps, if God had not told him, he would as yet not have thought of;) nothing herein was proposed to him so complex, as that his first thoughts could be in any confusion about it.

The next incident may indeed seem an embarrassment, if we suppose it to have been transacted as it is commonly conceived; but this, I think, I have already obviated. There was no assemblage of the living creatures of the world for Adam to name them, nor could he at any one time make a survey of them; it would have been a work too large for him. But though Adam had heard the voice of God, yet he had not, at this time, made any one word of his own for himself; and we may allow, that the fact of his naming the creatures, as Moses truly states it, shows us very naturally, how the man, having been enabled to understand the words which God had spoken to him, was introduced to begin and exercise himself to make farther words for the occasions of his life. The naming one creature taught him how he might name another; and the making names for the creatures gradually apprised him how he had it in his power to name and to speak of all kind of things, for him and Eve to begin and improve a conversible life. In this easy and natural manner (to use the words of the author of the Book of Wisdom) it was granted to them, to speak as they would of the things which were given them.⁴

Before Adam had proceeded far in naming the creatures, it pleased God to cause him to fall into a deep sleep,⁵ wherein no sensations from without gave him any interruption. He had, however, a clear and disimplicated perception of the manner in which Eve was taken out of him; and therein learned to name some parts of his own body, a rib, a bone, his flesh; and from what he had perceived concerning her origin, to name the woman also according to it. And,

After he had received the person made for him, and given her a name, reconsidering her extract, He, who made them both, said unto them,⁶ the voice of God spake, what he intended should be the strict and indissoluble union of man and wife in their lives. Relations of life were indeed here suggested, of which Adam and Eve as yet could not have any judgment; for it seems that Adam did not yet know that Eve could as yet have thoughts like these upon the subject. Milton. Par. Lost, b. viii, 365—435.

⁴ Wisdom vii, 15.

⁵ Gen. ii, 21.

⁶ Vide quæ sup.

was to be a mother, or himself a father. It may be observed, that as soon as he knew she was to be the mother of all living, he gave her a name accordingly, and thereupon called her name Eve;⁷ but this was not until after the fall, and after the sentence of God passed upon them.⁸ However, it may be apprehended, that what God here said must strike their minds, charged as yet with only few things; and be so remembered by them, that when afterwards they came to be a father and a mother, and in time had children grown up to be husbands and wives, they might consider and instruct them, what in the beginning had been said unto them; and how, according to God's original design and commandment, man and wife were inseparably to live together in the world.

Before the close of this their first day, God *blessed them, and said unto them, be fruitful, and multiply, and replenish the earth, and subdue it, and have dominion over the fish of the sea, and over the fowl of the air, and over every living thing that moveth upon the earth.*⁹ It does not seem, I rather think I may affirm, that our first parents had not yet looked beyond their garden; they had not seen the compass of the world, nor taken account of the numbers of the creatures that were therein. They had not been on the sea shore; nor could they know the inhabitants of the floods, whose paths are in the waters; so that it would be unnatural and absurd to think that the words, now spoken to them, were any farther understood, than to give them a general expectation of seeing and becoming acquainted with a various and extensive scene of things, far beyond what was yet beheld by, or known to, them. Their garden was the inclosure which at present surrounded them. But they were now informed, that a whole world was to be opened to them; that they should find innumerable living creatures on the land, in the seas, and in the air; and that they themselves should be fruitful and multiply, should replenish the earth, and subdue it, and have dominion over, and be, as it were, proprietors of all the living creatures that were created; that there was sustenance provided for all living things, in the fruits of the ground; which were all given without exception or restraint, the one limitation only observed, of one tree in the garden, of which Adam and Eve were not to eat.¹ These intimations were now given them; but they were in nowise instructed by them to know the things spoken of, so fully as every day after more and more led them to understand. What God now spake to them had only this general effect; that, as the world opened to them, nothing in it was so absolutely unexpected as to surprise or confound them; for, remembering what had been said to them, they might, as new ⁷ Gen. iii, 20.

⁸ Chap. i, 28, &c.

⁹ Ibid.

¹ Chap. i, quæ sup.

things presented themselves, gradually proceed to name, distinguish, and daily grow acquainted with them, to consider how they could use their power over them, and make them useful or agreeable.

I might add farther, that how much soever of these things was told them, it appears to have been provided for them, that they should not hurry too fast to look into, and after the many things in the world. The day ensuing was to be a Sabbath,² a day of rest, to be set apart to recollect and consider all that had been said and showed to them; that before they proceeded, they might have all the instruction, which a repeated review of it could give, distinct upon their hearts. And when the Sabbath was over, they were not instantly at liberty to wander at large over the earth; for their first business was in their garden; where God had given them employment; *to dress it, and to keep it.*³ Their duty here, if attended to, would so far confine them, that the world would not break in upon them, nor they go into the world faster or farther than they might become gradually able to receive and digest that knowledge of things, which would arise from it. In this manner Moses represents God as having given our first parents the beginning of their lives: and whoever will duly examine the sentiments which he sets before us upon this subject, and compare them with what other writers have fancied and represented (of all whom we shall find none so likely to captivate us as our Milton;⁴) I say, whoever will compare Moses with other writers upon this subject, will find, that he deeply entered into the real nature of man; and will be brought to say of him above all others, Quanto rectius hic—nil molitur inepte.

Hon.

His account speaks itself to be fact, and not fable; and though our first thoughts may not fully comprehend what he has written; yet a careful examination of it will show us, that they, who have thought it fable, have not taken pains truly to understand it. I have only to observe, before I close this chapter, that from what has been said we may reasonably conceive, that our first parents were not hurried into any scene, either of things or sentiments, larger or sooner than they were able to form, as they should want them, all such words as the incidents of their lives would call for, over and besides those which God already had, or did afterwards speak to them.

² Gen. ii, 2.

³ Ver. 15.

⁴ Paradise Lost.

CHAPTER V.

An Inquiry, what we may reasonably think to have been, at this time, the actual state of Adam's knowledge.

MOST writers, who have treated of the Fall, give us accounts of what they think was the primitive state of Adam and Eve's knowledge before they committed sin; but their sentiments, however ingenious they may seem, are no better than groundless imaginations. Our English poet represents Adam, when just created, not only as seeing things as they came before him; but instantly knowing their natures, by God's giving him an immediate apprehension of them. Introducing Adam relating how he named the creatures; supposing the hypothesis to have been fact, that God caused an assemblage of the whole animal world, to see what Adam would name every creature, he makes him say of himself,

I nam'd them as they pass'd, and understood
Their natures; with such knowledge God endu'd
My sudden apprehension.—¹

That God could if he had pleased, have thus endowed Adam, can be no question; but that God did not, is plain; for nothing can be more evident, than that neither Eve nor Adam had in fact this knowledge. They seem both to have been together when the serpent spake to Eve;² but neither appears to have

¹ Milton's Paradise Lost, b. viii, l. 352.

² The supposing Eve to have gone forth to work, separate from Adam, on the morning that the temptation befel her, is an ingenious fiction of our poet; which gave him room to introduce an episode as beautiful, and well-ornamented in all its incidents, as human imagination could contrive or can conceive. See Milton's Paradise Lost, b. ix. But I do not see that the text of Moses appears to countenance it: Moses says, that Eve,

וַיֹּאכַל	וְהָיָה	וְהָיָה	וְהָיָה	וְהָיָה	וְהָיָה	וְהָיָה	וְהָיָה
et edit	secum	viro etiam	et dedit	et edit	de fructu	ejus	et cepit

That she took of the fruit and did eat, and gave also to her husband, who was with her, and he did eat.

been surprised at hearing a serpent speak in man's voice. The observation which they seem to have made upon it was, that the serpent was more subtle than any beast of the field.³ they had heard no other creature thus speak, and therefore apprehended that the serpent had higher endowments than other animals. But we have no hint which represents either of them as having been at all aware that the serpent was not by nature as conversible as themselves;⁴ a plain indication that they had no such knowledge of the animal world as Milton supposes. Milton variously imagines that Adam had this innate sudden apprehension to guide him aright to judge of all things; of the nature of God;⁵ and the nature of man;⁶ in a word, of every thing knowable, within the reach of the human capacity. In truth, this seems to be the general opinion of writers; who speak of Adam as if he was created a philosopher; had implanted in him a natural fund of all science, instantly informing him of the true nature of things, whenever any of them came before his eyes, or any occasion was given him to have thoughts of them in his mind. They think, that he had innate sentiments of all moral duties; and that before the Fall he was ignorant of nothing but of sin: but the history of Moses sets before us plain facts, flatly contradicting all these assertions. If Adam had a true and innate knowledge and apprehension of the nature of God; how could he have been so ignorant of him with whom he had to do, as to think that getting behind the cover of a few trees would hide him from his presence? or if he philosophically knew himself, had full and innate apprehensions of the use and light of his own reason, and of all that could come within the reach of it; what room could there be for the serpent frivolously to offer to open farther, either his eyes or his understanding? Rationally judging, and having a right judgment of every thing that came before, either his outward perception, or his inward reflection, the serpent's temptation must have appeared intuitively absurd. He would have felt himself not wanting such additions as the serpent suggested; and, besides, would have had a better thought of things, than to be ³ Gen. iii, i.

⁴ Milton, b. ix, supposes that Eve had been much surprised at hearing the serpent speak; and represents her asking how he came by that ability; to which he answers, that he was raised to that attainment by eating the fruit of the forbidden tree; and that she hence argued, if the dumb animal was so heightened beyond his natural abilities by eating of this fruit, then well might she and Adam hope to be as God, if they should eat of ~~the~~. But, however agreeable this fiction is by the manner in which the poet has most elegantly painted it; yet it can only be an elegant fiction. Moses suggests nothing like it, nor is it likely that God would have permitted what might have given a more than ordinary appearance and strength to the temptation. See hereafter.

⁵ Milton, b. viii, 357—413, &c.

⁶ Ibid.

⁷ Gen. iii, 8.—The reader will observe, that this was after Adam's Fall, when all his mental powers were debased by the introduction of sin. EDIT.

capable of imagining, that the improvements proposed to him could arise from doing what the serpent recommended. We may therefore, if we will write at random, say high things of Adam and Eve's natural and philosophical knowledge; but we can never make it appear, that they had as yet much science, if in fact they knew things no better than to think that a serpent might naturally be able to speak to them; or grossly to believe, that meat for the body might be food for the understanding; that the fruit of a tree, which they saw growing in their garden, could be a thing to be desired to eat to make one wise.⁸ A sentiment this, not to be digested by any one that has understanding, and consequently must demonstrate, that our first parents had as yet attained but little advancement in real knowledge.

Adam, as soon as he received the breath of life, became a living soul.⁹ but he had a body made of the ground,¹ and his soul was, as our souls are, shut up within the inclosure of this tabernacle. In this state, the things without him, the material objects of this world, could raise in him no ideas, but as sensations of them were conveyed by his outward senses.² He could naturally judge of what he thus perceived no farther than ἐνθυμηθῆνα. ὁξίως τῶν δεδομένων,³ to think of them suitably to what was given, or presented to him: and if he looked inward upon himself, he could form ideas of his own mind, only as he made trial of its capacity and powers, and thereby came to know them: so that experience only could give him naturally an increase of knowledge. Let us suppose him turning his thoughts from himself to a higher object; to consider Him who made him;

“ Say,—of God above—

What could he reason, but from what he knew ;”⁴

He knew of God as yet no more, than what the words which God had spoken to him could teach, or his own few and first observations of things done might lead him to infer.

There are indeed some texts of Scripture, which, if not rightly considered may lead us into a mistake in this matter. St. Paul tells us of the Gentiles, who had not had the light of the law of Moses, that they did by nature the things contained in the law: not having the law, they were a law unto themselves: which he says, show the work of the law written in their hearts, their conscience also bearing witness, ⁸ Gen. iii, 6.

⁹ Chap. ii, 7.

¹ Ibid.

² This, I think, must be allowed as unquestionable. See Locke's Essay on Human Understanding, book ii, c. 1; unless we could imagine, that Adam had been a creature originally furnished with different abilities to perceive the things without him, other than the five operations, or senses, which the author of Ecclesiasticus represents that he had been endued with as we are. Eccles. xvii, 5.

³ Wisdom vii, 15.

⁴ Pope's Essay on Man, Ep. i.

*and their thoughts accusing, or else excusing one another.*⁵ Are we then to conclude from hence, that God has actually written, as it were, or implanted innate sentiments of duty upon the hearts of man? I rather apprehend, that a true essay of the human understanding; a true judgment of whatever was, or still is, the ability of man, will show us, that a capacity of attaining just notions of our duties, and not an actual possession of real sentiments of them, is the utmost of what the first man was created in, or any of us are born to: and a careful examination of what is offered by St. Paul will in nowise lead us to conclude more. The apostle elsewhere tells us, speaking of the Gentiles, that *that which may be known of God was manifest in them, for that God had showed it unto them.*⁶ The question is, how had God showed it? Had God planted it innate in their hearts? This was not the sentiment of St. Paul; rather he tells us, *that God had showed it unto them; for or because the invisible things of him from the creation of the world are clearly seen, being understood by the things which are made.*⁷ The Gentile nations, of whom the apostle here and elsewhere treats, had so far read the volume of the book of nature, had so far heard of, or known and considered the works of God, as to be without excuse, if thence apparent duties of their nature were not collected by them. But we should in fact be mistaken, and err from the meaning of St. Paul,⁸ if we expect to find implanted in men's hearts real characters of their duties farther than the book of nature has been read and considered by them; or they have attained a knowledge of them, more or less perfect, as they have happened to hear of, and be instructed from, some of the revelations which God has made to the world. Consequently, speaking rationally of Adam, whilst he had as yet heard and seen but a very few of God's works, and those few had not been so repeatedly examined by him, and compared with things which in time followed, as to give him a various trial, and an enlarged and corrected judgment; he cannot be thought to have attained a great extent of any kind of knowledge. All natural science has grown amongst men, as observation has gradually increased it; therefore, to say of Adam, that as soon as he lifted up his eyes, after he was created, and saw the Sun, Moon, and Stars, which gave light upon the Earth, he instantaneously knew that these lights of Heaven were to be *for signs and for seasons, for days and for years;*⁹ is to talk very irrationally. He cannot be supposed to have known, before his first evening showed it, that the Sun was to have a going down; nor can we imagine that the next morning told him of the rising day, what would have enabled him to have said with the poet,

⁵ Rom. ii, 14, 15.⁶ Ibid.⁷ Chap. i. 19.⁸ Gen. i, 14.⁹ Ver. 20.

———— aliusque et idem
Nasceris —————

Hoa.

He could not have told, whether the rising Sun of his second day was a new one: or the same which had the day before shone upon him. In time he formed a better judgment of these and other appearances: but as many ages, abounding in all kinds of learned disquisitions, passed, before it was apprehended that the Sun did not move round the Earth; it must be a wild notion to think, that in the beginning of the world our first father was possessed of an innate astronomy. All notions of his innate knowledge of the nature of the animals must, if thus considered, fall likewise to the ground; for he could know nothing of them until he observed them; and then, nothing farther than what he observed, or concluded from observations made of them. And, of God, he knew that he had received an audible injunction not to eat of one tree: and he had heard from the same voice other particulars: and in the formation of Eve, he had had a sensible conviction, that he who spake to him had great power to make or create, and consequently to destroy. Hence, as soon as he had disobeyed, he reasoned, that he might justly be afraid: he was afraid, and hid himself:¹ but having had nothing yet told or showed him, whereby he might consider the omnipresence of God, the imperfection of his own sight led him to imagine that he might get out of God's sight, if he hid himself behind the cover of a few trees. Respecting himself he had experienced, that he saw, and heard, and felt, and lived; that he tasted the food he was to eat; that it revived his spirits, and strengthened his heart:² and though I must think that he had a clear intellect to reason and conclude of things as far, though no farther, than they appeared to him, or he had experience of them; yet, hitherto, he could have made no advancement in knowledge, which could show him whether there were or were not juices in the fruit of a particular tree, which might literally cheer both God and man:³ give fresh life and spirits to the body, and likewise wisdom and understanding to the mind. Therefore he did not hereupon know enough to argue and refute the falsehood which Eve's imagination seems to have proposed, that the tree was to be desired to make one wise.⁴

It will, I am sensible, be here said by some, that they do not assert Adam and Eve as having had any innate actual knowledge; but they apprehend that both our first parents had been created with such powers of capacity, that they would

¹ Gen. iii, 10.

² Judges ix, 13.

³ Psal. civ, 15.

⁴ Gen. iii, 6.

naturally form just and true notions of things, as they came under their inspection and observation; so as not really to want any farther instruction concerning any thing which they ought or could be obliged to know, than what might naturally arise to them from their own senses and understanding. Our modern rationalists think, that they can not only support this notion from reason, but can bring Scripture also to confirm it. They argue, that "Moses says, that God created man in his own image," and that Solomon tells us, that God made man upright;⁶ the meaning of both which expressions, taken together, imports, they say, that man was endued with rational moral faculties, resembling the moral perfections of his Creator: was made perfect in his kind, capable to know and fulfil the duties, and attain the end of his creation, by a right use of his rational faculties, which were given him to be the guide and rule of his life and actions: and therefore that the reason, which God gave, must have been sufficient to direct him to those duties, which God required of him, and to conduct him to that happiness, which is the natural effect, or by God's will the appointed reward, of the performance of it."

The writer, from whom I have cited these words, did, I dare say, conceive, that he had guarded his expressions in a manner liable to no exception; but he has, I think, the misfortune common to these writers, not to hit the least tittle of the meaning, in the texts which they cite.

God, he says from Moses, created man in his own image. It must, I think, be indisputable, that, in a most obvious sense of the words, man's being created in the image of God may refer to the make of his body; and intimate, that he was formed, not after the fashion of any other living creature, but was made in a pattern higher than they; a more excellent form than theirs was given to him.

Pronaque cum spectant animalia cætera terras,
Os homini sublime dedit, cælumque tueri
Jussit, et erectos ad sidera tollere vultus.

OVID. METAM.⁷

It is an expression not unfrequent in the Hebrew Scriptures, to say of things, that they are of God, if they are in quality eminent above others, which have no more than common perfections. Thus, trees of a prodigious growth are called trees of God, or the trees of the LORD: such were the cedars of Lebanon; so greatly flourishing and full of sap as to be for that reason called the trees of the LORD, trees which he had planted.⁸ And thus man might be said to be made in the image of God: his outward form was of a different make; far more respectable, and superior to the make of all other creatures in the world. Accordingly, to speak suitably of it, the expression is used, which in the language of Moses's times was commonly said of any thing, which was so superlatively excellent as to have nothing like to or be compared with it. No image of any thing in the world was equal to, or like that of man; therefore man was said to be created in the image of God.

⁶ Gen. i, 26.

⁷ Eccles. vii, 29.

⁷ In like manner the Roman philosopher: "Figuram corporisabilem et aptam ingenio humano dedit; nam cum cæteris animantes abjecisset ad pastum, solum hominem erexit, ad cælique——conspicuum excitavit: tum speciem ita formavit oris, ut in ea penitus reconditos mores affingeret: nam et oculi nimis arguti, quemadmodum animi affecti simus, loquuntur, et is, qui appellatur vultus, qui nullo in animante esse præter hominem potest, indicat mores. Cic. de Legib. lib. i.

I would observe, that from St. Paul it appears, that the expression of Moses may carry this meaning: *A man, he says, ought not to cover his head, forasmuch as he is the image and glory of God: but the woman is the glory of the man.*⁹ The apostle is here inquiring, not into the dignity of the mind or soul of the man or the woman, but considering what ought to be the outward appearance or dress of their persons. He would not have the man's head covered, because the man was the image of God: his form was original, not the copy of another; and therefore, to express its original superiority above all others, is said to be of God. But the woman herein was inferior, being made after the likeness and similitude of man; therefore, in the sentiment of the apostle, she ought to wear a covering upon her head, in acknowledgment, that she was not sux formæ, the original pattern of the make she was of. She was herein inferior to the man,¹ in that the glory or dignity of her make was his; she was the glory of the man; the high excellence of her make was but a copy of what he, the man, was made in before her.

But the words of Moses bear also a farther sense, yet not what the writer I have cited would put upon them. God created man to be immortal, and made him an image of his own eternity.² Now here a great original difference may appear to have been intended between the spirit of man, that goeth upward, and the spirit of the beast that goeth downward:³ and that Moses had in view this particular, when he said of man, that he was created in the image of God, seems agreeable to the reason given for the early law pronounced against murder: *whoso sheddeth man's blood, by man shall his blood be shed: for in the image of God made he man.*⁴ God so made man to be immortal, that it is a high insult and violence against the design of God's creation, to put an end by murder to the life of man. Therefore,

⁸ Psalm civ, 16.

⁹ 1 Cor. xi, 7.

¹ I would here observe, that in ancient times, contrary to our modern customs, the having the head free, or without the incumbrance of being covered, was a mark of dignity and superiority; and, on the contrary, to wear a covering on the head was a token of inferiority and subjection.

² Wisdom ii, 23.

³ Eccles. iii, 21.

⁴ Gen. ix, 6.

*surely at the hand of every man's brother will God require the life of man.*⁵ This explains our Saviour's calling the Devil a murderer from the beginning;⁶ he had acted contrary to the design of God concerning the life of man, because, when God had created man in his own image, to be an image of his own eternity; to be immortal, *nevertheless, through envy of the Devil, death came into the world.*⁷

Thus, if we explain the text of Moses, without going beyond what was intended by it, we shall find, that it means no more, than that man was originally made of a more excellent form than all other creatures, and that he was made to be immortal, had not death, which God did not make for man,⁸ come into the world through sin.⁹ There is very little foundation to infer from this text, that Moses intended to represent, that man was made to resemble his Maker in his powers of knowledge.¹ Such a thought is so far from being

⁵ Chap. ix, 5.

⁶ John viii, 44.

⁷ Wisdom ii, 24.

⁸ Chap. i, 13.

⁹ Rom. v, 12.

¹ If we examine what the heathen inquirers argued upon this subject, we shall find them far more correct than our modern reasoners. They all, indeed, except a more sensual sect, Epicurus and his followers (see Cic. de Nat. Deor. lib. i, c. 18,) saw plainly, that man could in nowise resemble God in his outward form and figure. Therefore they would have understood Moses's expression of man's being made in the image of God, as to his outward form, in no higher sense than I have above mentioned; namely, that man was of an extraordinary and singular make, eminent above other creatures, of a form appropriated to man. As to his inward powers, they saw in them what was far more worthy than his outward person to be compared to God. "Tu—sic habeto NON ESSE TE MORTALEM, SED CORPUS HOC. Nec enim is, quem forma ista declarat, sed mens cujusque is est quisque; non ea figura, quæ digito demonstrari potest: Deum te igitur scito, esse siquidem Deus est, qui viget, qui sentit, qui meminit, qui providet, qui tam regit et moderatur et movet id corpus cui præpositus est, quam hunc mundum ille princeps Deus." Cic. Somn. Scipionis. But however they thus thought in general terms of a resemblance in man of the divine nature, they always, when the subject called for it, so explained themselves as not loosely to assert, that in man, "motus iste celer cogitationis, acumen, solertia, quam rationem vocamus (Cic. de Nat. Deor. lib. iii, c. 27,) the mere faculty of human reason made man like to God. They rather argued, that the likeness of man to God arose from this faculty so managed and conducted that we might possess virtue. "Ad similitudinem Deo propius accedebat humana virtus quam figura." Cic. de Nat. Deor. lib. i, c. 34. And thus Plato, ἡ ἐστὶν αὐτῶν ὁμοιωτάτης οὐδὲν ἢ οὐ αὖ ἡμῶν αὖ γὰρ πάντα οὐτὶ διαίτητος. Plat. in Theætet. Thus again, Ὁμοιωσις θεῶν—δικαίον καὶ ἄριστον μετὰ σπουδῆς γίνεσθαι. Id. ibid. Again, Ὁ μὲν σαρρὸν ἡμῶν διὰ τοῦ σώματος, οὐκ ἔστιν ὁ μὲν σαρρὸν ἀνθρώπου τὴν καὶ διαφοράν καὶ ἀδύνατον. Plat. de Legib. lib. iv. We are here to observe, that these ancients, in nowise like our modern rationalists, crudely affirm, that man is endowed with moral faculties, resembling the moral perfections of his Creator; but they distinguish the faculties of man, as then only rendering us like God when they are so conducted as to make us σαρρῶν, so truly wise as to be really virtuous. They did not determine, that our likeness to God consisted in our barely having a faculty of free reason; but they considered, that we could then only be like God when we became just and holy, δικαιοὺς καὶ ἁγίους μετὰ σπουδῆς or, in other words, when we attained a right understanding to depart from iniquity. They observed the difference between reason and right reason: they pointed out a height of reason, with which whosoever are endued, may in all things act intuitively aright; but this they allowed to be above man: "Quartus autem gradus et altissimus est eorum qui natura boni sapientia deducible from this text, that it is absolutely contradictory to what Moses expresses upon the subject; for their desire to be he Elohim, as, or like to, God in knowing,² was the mistake which caused our first parents' ruin.

Let us now see how the other text will answer the purpose designed to be served by it. God, said Solomon, made man upright:³ the words of Solomon are, God made the man, jashar, which we might render aright: God implanted in him nothing that was wrong. Adam, before the fall, had not in him the evil inclinations of a corrupt nature, and the not having these was the rectitude in which he was created. When the sentence of death passed upon him, he, who before was an image of God's eternity, ~~was~~ now become mortal, his body became corruptible: and a corruptible body presseth down the soul.⁴ He now began to have sensual appetites and desires, which created him many inclinations which he had to strive against, if he would strive against sin. He was now fallen into the imperfection under which we all labour,

Video meliora proboque
Deteriora sequor

He might now many times see and approve the things, which are most excellent, and yet have a heart that might cause him often to be such as the best of us are, who, as there is no man upon Earth that sinneth not,⁵ do in many things offend all.⁶ But though before he became corruptible he had not in him those evil appetites, which are since grown so powerful in our nature; yet it will not follow, that God originally gave him such a beam of unerring understanding as to place him in a light, which would not admit of mistake and error.

Decipimur specie recti

Hon.

To this failure Adam was subject in his first estate; and herein it was that he fell from it: both Eve and he judged what the tempter proposed to them to be very right, although it was grossly wrong, and in the error of their judgment they went astray; their appetites were not the strength which prevailed tesque gignuntur, quibus a principio innascitur ratio recta, constansque, quæ supra hominem putanda est, Deoque tribuenda." Cic: lib. ii, c. 13. Herein they stated the great difference between the human nature and divine; they allowed God to be the standard of all rectitude and truth; but they affirmed, that man in nowise was so; but wanted a measure or rule to adjust his judgment by, in order to act aright. 'Ο δὲ Θεὸς ἄμειν πάντων χρημάτων μέτρον ἐστὶν ἡμῶν, καὶ πολλὸν μᾶλλον ἢ περὶ τῆς, ὡς φασί, ἀνθρώπου. Plato de Leg. lib. iv. Which one point, duly considered, is that sobriety of knowing and estimating ourselves, which will lead us to admit, both the sentiments I have above observed that Moses hinted, and what I endeavour to build upon it.

² Gen. iii, 5.

³ Eccles. vii, 29.

⁴ Wisd. ix, 15.

⁵ 1 Kings viii, 46.

⁶ James iii, 2.

against them. In their judgment lay their weakness; they were misled, they were deceived. Thus St. Paul speaks of their transgressions, not imputing it to their corrupt inclinations, but to their erring in their understanding; the serpent beguiled Eve through his subtlety; the insinuation of the tempter became too subtle for them. Herein, therefore, the writers, who use the text of Solomon with the view above mentioned, mistake his true meaning. From Solomon's asserting, that God made man upright, they would infer, that God gave Adam a perfection of actual understanding, by which he might, without farther direction, have devised his own way aright, to complete himself in every moral virtue; whereas Solomon says no more than that God made man (jashar) rectus, i. e. not crooked or perverse; or, as we render it in English, upright, i. e. not inclined or propense to evil. Solomon says, that Adam had originally a rectitude of heart or inclination; but these writers would infer, that he had a perfection of head, an unerring judgment; whereas these are two very different things. I can apprehend, that Adam had a natural capacity, quick and lively, far greater than we have; but as he had far less acquaintance with, and information of, the nature of things than even we have had, his actual knowledge, at the time of his being seduced, must have been less than our knowledge is; consequently, it happened in fact, that he erred in a matter, wherein no one of a moderate share of improved understanding would have been so grossly mistaken.

But may we not correct a little the expressions used in setting forth this pretended rational scheme contended for, and query upon the subject as follows? Is not the spirit of man the candle of the Lord?⁷ Is there not a spirit in man,⁸ created with abilities of reasoning suited to his state? Is there not herein a natural inspiration of the Almighty to give man understanding?⁹ as soon as he grows up to know the use of it? And if Adam was created not a child, but a man; if he was created upright, having a right heart not biassed by evil appetites; must he not have had all the powers of a sound mind? And what can we say or think he could want more? Would not things have gradually appeared to him in their true light? His mind not corrupted would have admitted them to have been rationally considered; and his knowledge, as it grew and increased, being sincere and unbiassed, would ⁷ 2 Corinthians xi, 3.

⁸ Proverbs xx, 27.

⁹ Job xxxii, 8.

¹ Ibid. I think I need not here observe, that the word ruach here used, which we translate inspiration, is the word used by Moses, Gen. ii, 7, to signify the inspiration, or breath of life; and that therefore we may justly here take it to mean, not what we Christians call the grace of God, but rather that original ability of mind which God has given unto man.

have led him in a right use of his reason² unto true sentiments of his duty, as the relations of life came to be known to him; so that he might by his own natural light have gone wisely and virtuously through the world. I might cite many passages from the best and most virtuous heathen writers, to show, that they seem sometimes to have thought the human ability of this sort.³ But I might again cite other places from them, which lay a foundation for not being positive in this nice disquisition:⁴ and herein they preserved a sincerity of inquiry, far more to be respected than the arrogant forwardness of our modern contenders for the sufficiency of human reason. These latter seldom fail to show an unwarrantable disposition to assume, without proving, that God gave no revelation, until men had first departed from the guidance of their reason, and wanted to be brought back, to be told the use and the light of it. And they hastily conclude, that, if human reason at first was not in itself a sufficient guide and direction for man, it will follow, that God did not sufficiently provide for him. They tell us, "that God at first left men to the guidance of natural light, by a due use of reason to discover what best became the station they were placed in, and what duties were incumbent upon them, in the relation they stood to God as their Creator, and to one another as fellow-creatures; expecting no service from them, but what their own reason would suggest, and the very nature and circumstances of their being would have recommended." And they add, that "God did not interpose until man had herein greatly failed." But all this is directly contrary to what Moses informs us; according to whom, after Adam was created, before he had time to do, I might say, to think, of good or evil, the voice of God commanded him, saying, *Of every tree of the garden thou mayest freely eat, but of the tree of the knowledge of good and evil thou shalt not eat of it: for in the day that thou eatest thereof thou shalt surely die.*⁵ A command was herein given, such as the reason of man would not have investigated, had not the voice of God appointed it to him; consequently, a service or observation was herein expected from him, other than what his own reason would have suggested. But these writers will perhaps say of this particular command, that it is allegory and not a fact. Let us then proceed, and we shall find, that as soon as Eve was created, Adam and she were told, that a man should leave his father and mother, and should cleave unto his wife, and that they should be one flesh. This command, as Moses states it, was, our Saviour tells us, spoken to them by the voice of God. Herein, then, there is no allegory; herein we have the witness of a greater than Moses, that Moses related what was really fact. And it is a testimony, which, duly considered, will prove, that both our Saviour used, and the Jews also, to whom our Saviour spake, received the accounts of what Moses relates to have been done in the beginning, not as allegory and fable, but to be read and cited as true history.⁶ God, in fact, declared to Adam and Eve, what was to be the inseparable union of man and wife; and therefore herein they were not "left at first to the guidance of natural light, by a due use of reason to discover what best became the station they were placed in to one another;" but received a special direction by an audible voice from their Maker concerning this relation of life, before they had in any one thing failed in the use of their reason.

² Πᾶσα γὰρ πρὸς τὴν ἐπίσταν τῶν ἀγαθῶν συντάσσεται διὰ τὴν ἀρχὴν ἐννοητέαν οὕτως ὅτι τῆς ψυχῆς αὐτοῦ.

³ Est quidem vera lex, recta ratio, naturæ congruens, diffusa in omnes, constans, sempiterna, quæ vocet ad officium jubendo; vetando a fraude deterreat. Cic. de Rep. lib. iii. in Fragment. Erat enim ratio perfecta a rerum natura et ad recte faciendum impellens et a delicto avocans. Id. de Leg. lib. ii.

⁴ Si tales nos natura genuisset, ut eam ipsam intueri et perspicere, eademque optima duce cursum vitæ conficere possemus; haud erat sane quod quisquam rationem ac doctrinam requireret: nunc parvulos nobis dedit igniculos, quos celeriter malis moribus opinionibusque deprivati sic restringimus, ut nusquam naturæ lumen appareat. Cic. Tusc. Quæst. lib. iii. in init. Est profecto animi medicina philosophia. Id. ibid. This able writer appears to me here to allow, that men by nature are not so made as to look at once to the bottom and truth of things; to see without farther information, than the prompt suggestion of their own reasonings, the true relations of things and the moral duties of their lives. Had he known what we do from Moses, of the true origin of mankind, he would, I dare say, have allowed, that it might be necessary for man, when he first came into the world, not to be left absolutely to himself, to be guided by the parvulus igniculus, as he calls them, which God had given him. He would have considered man, as not admitted naturam ipsam intueri, but so far only endowed, as that though he had received rationem a Deo, yet he might make it bonam aut non bonam a seipso. (The reader may find this sentiment suggested by one of the disputants, in Cic. de Nat. Deor. lib. iii.) Therefore he would have rejoiced in the clear light, which he would have had, of man's having all the rationem et disciplinam, which he supposes him to want, from the directions, which, over and above his reason, God began, as soon as man came into being, by express revelation to give unto him.

What these writers say farther, that to suppose reason, the reason of man, "in itself in any state or circumstances an insufficient guide, is directly to impeach the Author of reason; is to say, that God did not give man sufficient abilities to know and to do his duty." This is equally dogmatical; contradictory to what we are informed by Moses was, in fact, the manner in which, and the abilities with which, Adam and Eve were brought into the world. Moses does not say, that God originally gave Adam a sufficiency of knowledge, for him to depend solely upon it; but he abundantly shows us, that man was not left insufficiently provided for, because he shows us how God would by his voice have directed, as directions would be necessary for him. Upon the whole, the texts of ⁵ Gen. ii, 16, 17.

⁶ Have ye not read? said our Saviour, appealing, as to fact, to what was recorded in Moses's writings. See Matt. xix, 4, &c. above cited.

Scripture above cited, to show that there is in man a light of reason, do in nowise determine to what degree it is given; therefore they are not in themselves conclusive against the necessity of revelation. And whatever else has been offered, may at best be but the conceits of mere imagination, and therefore intrinsically vain; so that I apprehend, if we would proceed as we ought in this inquiry, it may pertinently be examined, whether in the reason of things it may not be right, that the infinite Creator should make a rank of rational beings, so far endowed with reason, as to be above the restraint and confinement of instinct; and yet not endued with so unerring a beam of reason, as to need no farther direction, than what would arise from the intimations of their own breasts. After such an inquiry, carefully made, we may consider whether man was the creature made, in this rank; and whether the directions mentioned by Moses, as originally given to the man, may not be apprehended to have been the most proper means to supply his defects, to make him perfect, thoroughly furnished unto every thing necessary to answer the great end of his creation and being.

CHAPTER VI.

Concerning the Points above stated.

THE creation of God, as far as we can examine it, in the things which may be known by us, shows a wonderful connection between all things. If we go to what I would call the lowest, the most dead, and inorganic parts of matter; it is a question, whether vegetative life does not subsist in all. It is indeed so slow in some, that it will escape our first inspection; but stones and minerals in time show enough of it to apprise us, though it be hard to conceive how small its first beginnings are, that probably there is not any thing in the natural world wherein it really is not to be found. We may trace a gradual increase of the circulation of it from the more inert parts, as it were, of matter, to trees, shrubs, plants, and flowers; whose living growth is more and more conspicuous, and daily ornamented with new appearances of accrescent variety and alteration. And how near do some of these come to almost a visible connection with the animal world? It is difficult to ascertain how much more sensation there is in an oyster, if there really are not living animals of less sensation than an oyster, of whose motion we can hardly say more, than that it opens its shell, to take in the water and soil which is to feed it, and shuts at the approach of any thing which may more sensibly affect it; than in those plants which open their flowers to the soft and warm air, but will instantly close up and shrivel, if any grosser object be moved near enough to touch them. If we proceed through the innumerable varieties of animal life, until we come to those beings in whom the breath is most conspicuous; if we consider the difference of discernment in these, and carry on the progression until we enter the rational world, we may find, says an ingenious writer,¹ that some brutes seem to have as much reason and knowledge as some, who are called men ; so that the animal and rational creation do so nearly approach, that if you take the highest of the one, and compare it with the lowest of the other, there will scarcely be perceived a difference between them. The variety in the capacities of men being considered, will carry us over a vast field, and bring us to the borders of the angelic state ; for man was made only a little lower than the angels.² How far, had sin not come into the world, and death by sin, the highest and most perfect men might have improved and come near to the lowest order of angels, we cannot say. But if, from what we can see of the creation, we may reason concerning things invisible, supposing that God created the first man with the highest capacity, which could belong to his rank of being, yet knowing that he was made a little lower than the angels, that the lowest of these intelligences was made greater than he, we cannot place him higher, than upon an ascent next between the animal and more intellectual state. And when we consider how it answers the analogy of things, that all the intellectual powers should rise gradually, one order above another, to complete a fulness in God's creation of the Heavens and the Earth,³ it will not be unreasonable to suppose, that God created man with such powers indeed of reason, as to be above all that can be called animal life, yet not with so masterly a light of reason, as absolutely to want no assistant information. Mr. Pope has excellently well expressed what I am aiming at. In the creation of God, he observes, that as —— All must fall, or not coherent be,

¹ See Locke's Essay on the Human Understanding, book iii, c. 6.

And all that rises, rise in due degree ;
Then, in the scale of life and sense, 'tis plain,
There must be, somewhere, such a rank as man ;
Plac'd on the isthmus of a middle state,
A being darkly wise and rudely great.⁴

There must be somewhere, in ascending from sense to the height of reason, a rank of creatures above the confinement and limitation of instinct, but not so perfect in their powers of reason, as to stand in need of none other than their own direction.

Of this rank the poet deemed man, estimating him made

With too much knowledge for the sceptic side,
With too much weakness for the stoic's pride.⁵

² Heb. ii, 7.

³ Without this Plato thought the Heavens would be imperfect. Οὐρανὸς ἀτελής ἔσται, τὰ γὰρ ἀκρῆντα ἐν αὐτῷ γὰρ ζῶντι οὐκ ἔστι. Δὲ δὲ μὴ πολλὰ τὰς οὐρανὸς ἰσχυρὸς καὶ. Plato in Timæo.

⁴ Pope's Essay on Man, ep. i, and ii.

⁵ Ibid. ep. ii, ver. 5.

To have light enough to see how he may, with a sufficient certainty, from known premises, draw many important conclusions, but not light enough absolutely to ~~not~~ satisfied in the sufficiency of his own wisdom.⁶ The poet gives us many rational intimations, that man must originally have been formed in this line of being, that there might be a just gradation in the works of God :

—— that progressive life may go
Around its width, its depth extend below,
Vast chain of being! which from God began,
Nature's ethereal, human, angel, man,
Beast, bird, fish, insect! what no eye can see,
No glass can reach! from infinite to thee,
From thee to nothing.⁷——

The poet farther expatiates upon the subject :

Far as creation's ample range extends
The scale of sensual, mental pow'rs ascends.
Mark how it mounts, to man's imperial race,
From the green myriads in the peopled grass!——
How instinct varies in the grovelling swine,
Compar'd, half-reas'ning elephant! with thine:
'Twixt that and reason what a nice barrier,
For ever sep'rate, yet for ever near!⁸

And he farther hints, that we ought not to think it wrong, that man, made to be of this order, has not a large share of reason to guide him :

—— say not man's imperfect, Heav'n in fault,
Say rather man's as perfect as he ought:
His being measur'd to his state and place.

Presumptuous man! the reason would'st thou find,
Why form'd so weak, so little, and so blind;⁹
First, if thou canst, the harder reason guess,
Why form'd no weaker, blinder, and no less.

What would this man? would he now upward soar?
And, little less than angel, would be more?

—— on superior powers
Were we to press, inferior must on ours;
Or in the full creation leave a void,
Where one step broken, the great scale's destroy'd.
The gen'ral order since the whole began,
Is kept in nature, and is kept in man.⁹

These sentiments do, I think, most clearly lead us to see, that, in the reason of things, there must be somewhere in the universe a being of such, and no greater powers of reason, than are here supposed to belong to man. And that this is ⁶ The stoic's pride, here hinted at, is, I think, what is expressed in the latter part of the following sentence: Judicium hoc omnium mortalium est; fortunam a Deo petendam esse, a seipso sumendam esse sapientiam. Vide Cic. de Nat. Deor. lib. iii, c. 36.

⁷ Pope's Essay on Man, ep. i, ver. 235.

⁸ Ibid. ep. i, ver. 207, and 221.

⁹ Ibid. ver. 35—163, 233.

our true standard has been the opinion of the best writers,¹ and has been confirmed in fact by the experience of all ages.² So that to talk of man having unerring reason, or of our wanting no farther instruction³ than a careful attendance to the result of our own judgment, is a vanity, which might be sufficiently exposed in the sentiment mentioned in the Book of Job: Vain man would be wise, though man be born like a wild ass's colt:⁴ such an independence of understanding is a height for which we were not made. We may think of ourselves as we please; but from the beginning to this time, even from the time when Adam was brought into the world until now, *he that has thus absolutely trusted in his own heart*⁵ has been a fool. How peculiar then is it to the nature of man, that God, as soon as he was created, made to him, as Moses relates, an especial revelation? If the perfection of man could have arisen merely from his reason, without doubt no such revelation would have been given him; for the all-wise God does nothing superfluous or in vain.⁶ Therefore, since a revelation was in fact made to man in the beginning; hence we know, that it was necessary, and that his original reason was not alone sufficient for him. As to those who say, that the narration of a revelation made to the first man is a mere allegory and fable; let them not pretend to argue, that, if the original reason of man was not alone a sufficient guide, then it must follow, that God did not sufficiently provide for the creature made thus imperfect; for the answer hereto is, that the revelation given to Adam, and intended to have been continued over and above his natural reason, would have been sufficient for man's natural weakness, and have thoroughly instructed him more and more unto every good work, if it had not been set aside and disregarded by him.

¹ It is the sentiment expressed by Cicero, that we are not creatures made able by nature, "naturam ipsam intueri et perspicere, eademque optima duce cursum vitæ conficere;" but that we want for this purpose, what he calls rationem ac doctrinam, having only igniculos, which, if not properly fed and cherished, will fail and be extinguished. See Cic. Tusc., Quæst. lib. iii, in princip. sup. cit. Quartus autem gradus et altissimus eorum est, qui natura boni sapientesque gignuntur: quibus a principio innascitur ratio, recta constansque, quæ supra hominem putanda est, deoque tribuenda. Cic. de Nat. Deor. lib. ii, c. 13.

² Our Scriptures rightly tell us, that there is no man who may not sin: 1 Kings viii, 46. There is not a just man upon Earth, that doeth good and may not sin: Eccles. vii, 20. The philosophers say, Sapientiam nemo assequitur. Vide Cic. de Nat. Deor. lib. iii, c. 32.

³ Nam, ut nihil interest, utrum nemo valeat, an nemo possit valere, sic non intelligo, quid intersit, utrum nemo sit sapiens, an nemo esse possit. Vide Cic. ibid.

⁴ Job xi, 12.

⁵ Prov. xxviii, 26.

⁶ The argument used by the apostle concerning the law, might, I think, be justly accommodated to the topic before us, in words as follow: for, if there had been any reason given unto Adam, such as, or so sufficient, that it might have given him life, verily his righteousness would have been by his reason. See Gal. iii, 21.

CHAPTER VII.

Some farther Considerations concerning the original State of our first Parents; the Nature of the first Command, or Prohibition made to them; and wherein consisted the Sin of their not observing it.

THE point we considered in the foregoing chapter was, how far we may reasonably conjecture, from the rank and order of being in which man was formed, that he was made a creature not of absolute independent understanding. I would here observe, that a most excellent writer has hinted to us this very thing. The author of the Book of Ecclesiasticus enumerates those endowments with which, and the direction under which God thought fit to bring our first parents into the world. *The LORD, he says, created man of the earth—they received the use of the five operations of the LORD, and in the sixth place he imparted them understanding, and in the seventh speech, an interpreter of the cogitations thereof: counsel, and a tongue, eyes, and ears, and a heart, gave he them to understand.*¹ In these and the three following verses, he remarks, how God gave unto man his five senses, his ability of speech and understanding. But he had before observed, that when God made man in the beginning, *he left him in the hand of his counsel.*² The question is, in whose counsel was man now left? The Latin version says sui consilii, his own counsel; but very absurdly; the Greek text, is ἀφῆκεν αὐτον εν χειρι διαβολης αυτου not his own, but αυτου his, i. e. God's counsel. Now this truly agrees with what follows in the next verse, if man would have conformed to it; his duty was to have kept the commandments, *και αις εν ποιησαι ευδοκίας.*³ He was to have paid unto God ὁπακοην της αις ενς, the obedience of faith; which imitation is no other than what is the substance of all revealed religion; that without faith it was impossible man should please

¹ Eccclus. xvii, 1—9.

² Chap. xv, 14.

³ Ibid.

God;⁴ for, not to follow absolutely the counsels of man's own heart;⁵ but to fear God, and to keep his commandments, was to have been the whole of man.⁶ This is what Moses sets before us, who tells us, that God made man; but over and besides making him a living soul, and creating him, as Solomon speaks, jashar, aright, having nothing in him unmeet for an intelligence of his order and rank in being; having given him senses and understanding in such measure as his Maker thought fit to bestow:⁷ over and above all, he gave him a commandment, which, if he would have faithfully kept to and observed, would have led him unto every thing sufficient for him. But,

The difficulty, which objectors raise against interpreting literally what Moses relates of the command here said to be given, lies in their conceiving the command itself as in nowise rationally conducing to man's perfection. It is impossible, they think, that such a being as God is, should appoint so great a weight, of the happiness or misery of mankind, to depend upon a matter in itself of such little real importance, as the eating or not eating of the fruit of a particular tree.⁸ Here I confess they start, what ought to be examined very considerably, and is not to be so hastily determined as some imagine; who, I think, add to, instead of removing the stumbling-block by their unaccountable ratiocinations. They say, "God had laid the whole stress and weight of his authority upon this one command: if," say they, "you suppose a case so circumstanced, that if a son's disobedience to a father, in

⁴ Heb. xi, 6.

⁵ The following our own counsels is, in Scripture-meaning, the deserting or departing from what God has revealed, to do what seemeth right in our own eyes. See Psal. lxxi, 11, &c., and many other places, which might be cited.

⁶ Eccles. xii, 13.

⁷ Eccles. vii, 20. His imperfect reason would have been the occasion of no evil, if he had not departed from observing the commandments of God. Adam's ability of reason was such as it ought to be in one of his rank in being, and the important thing to him was, to Know thy own: point this kind, this due degree

Of blindness, weakness, Heav'n bestows on thee.

Forz, ubi sup.

He ought not to have aimed to be knowing as God, but obeying what God commanded; thereby to have learned and done the duties of his life, but,

— In reas'ning pride our error lies,
All quit their sphere, and rush into the skies:—
Men would be angels, angels would be gods:
Aspiring to be gods, if angels fell;
Aspiring to be angels, men rebel:
And who but wishes to invert the laws
Of order, sins against th' Eternal Cause.

Forz, ubi sup.

⁸ Id utique videtur gravissimum et asperrimum quod gentem humanam plexisse, imo perdidisse dicatur Deus ob rem exiguum. Burnet, Archæol. p. 206.

some one particular, in itself of no moment, will infer not merely a neglect, but even a contempt of his parent's authority; be the matter of the offence what it will, will it not deserve the severest resentment? What the son thinks a trivial thing, and in common estimation may pass as such, he will presume his father will think so too; but had his father expressly laid the whole weight of his authority upon this one thing; had he expressly said before-hand, 'Son, whatever else you may think to do to please or show regard to me, shall have no acceptance, unless in this one easy thing, which I make and appoint to be the test of your duty, you carefully obey me; for, upon your failure herein, I will most absolutely treat you as a rebel'—should the son, after all this, presume to offend in this one point, would any reasonable man plead that it is excusable? I confess, such a defence as this shocks me exceedingly; for it is obvious that the unbeliever will readily reply, "Should a man build the most magnificent habitation in the world, and add to it in estate every desirable possession; but in some one room of his house should set up a piece of wood, with this strict prohibition to his son: 'As a mark of my authority, as a test of your obedience to me, your father, I command that this one piece of wood be never touched by you: for I have made it my will, that if ever you touch it, an absolute disherison shall take place against you and your posterity for ever'—should the son now offend herein, I will not," says the free-thinker, "ask so much as a question about the son: I give him up for a fool, to receive the fruits of his trifling impertinence. But I must inquire concerning the father: what may posterity, considering such a ruin of a whole family unto all generations, think of him, who made so trifling an injunction so peremptory and so penal?"

It will not be admitted that we write worthily of God, if we suppose that he gave Adam a commandment of no real moment; only to make his neglect, if he should happen to neglect it, most terribly destructive. God is not man, that he should lay the stress of his authority in caprice; upon a matter of no moment, whether it be observed or not. Therefore, if we would give him the honour due unto his name, it will be proper to inquire, considering the nature of man, such as God had made him; whether such a command, as Moses describes in the prohibition of the forbidden tree, was not highly fit, I might say, necessary to be given him? and whether, this command being broken, it could otherwise be, in the reason and nature of things, as God had made them, unless he had created them anew, than that the punishment and ruin threatened for man must take place; for otherwise, he might not have had a way back to honour, glory, and immortality. If we can, in such examination as this, search and find any grounds to believe that God, in what Moses writes, had dispensed to our first parents no otherwise, than what was suitable and agreeable to their natures, we shall see great reason for all that is set before us concerning the proceedings of his providence, as Moses has related them.

The prophet Jeremiah argued with the Jews, that God spake not unto their fathers—*concerning burnt offerings and sacrifices: but this thing commanded he them, saying, obey my voice, and I will be your God, and ye shall be my people.*⁹ Hence arises a directing intimation, that the great end and design of the legal institutions were to discipline and to exercise the Jews to obey God. In like manner, when God thought fit to make the covenant of circumcision with Abraham; the declared design of what was instituted was, that Abraham should walk before God, and thereby *be perfect.*¹ Thus we are to consider the commandment given to Adam concerning the forbidden tree; not as if God spake to him concerning a tree, merely to preserve it inviolate; but herein he commanded him this one thing, namely, obey my voice indeed; to do whatever I shall declare to be the duties of thy life. Not that God required, that man should obey his voice merely for the sake of, and to lay a stress upon his own authority; but, because it was necessary for man, not to be left to his own guidance, but to be kept in the hand of God's counsel. Adam, when created, was not so made, that directions absolutely right in themselves would occur from his own judgment of things, for the whole guidance of his life; and therefore God gave him a command not to eat of a particular tree, as he afterwards gave to Abraham the command of circumcision. As Abraham received the command of circumcision to be *the sign, a seal of the righteousness of faith,*² so Adam received the command of not eating of the forbidden tree to be a sign, an attestation, a standing and inviolate memorial, that he was not to follow his own inventions, but truly and faithfully to obey God.

If we consider the commandment, concerning the forbidden tree, in this light; the narration will be greatly cleared from those difficulties, which are surmised to be in what Moses hath said. In every revelation, which God hath made unto men, it is observable, that some positive institution or institutions are enjoined, for the receivers of such revelations truly to pay unto God, in obeying them, the obedience of faith; i. e. to believe and do whatever God is pleased to declare or demand of them. Thus we receive the two ordinances, which CHRIST hath appointed us in the New Testament, baptism, and the communion of bread and wine. Thus the Jews were bound to observe the rites, and to make the sacrifices of the law by Moses; even as Abraham before received the command of circumcision.³ And thus unto Adam was given the injunction not to eat of that particular tree, which was called the tree of knowledge of good and evil. Of which command we can no more say, that God did not literally enjoin our first parents not to eat of that tree, than we can say, that he did not literally enjoin Abraham the circumcision of the flesh; or the Israelites to offer the sacrifices, which are directed in the law; or us Christians the washing of water in baptism, and the eating of bread and drinking of wine in remembrance of our Saviour, as they are enjoined by him. Upon the whole, the interpreting literally what Moses says of the prohibited tree, and afterwards of the tree of life, does not make the texts that speak of then εἰδίας ἐπιλυσεως;⁴ it sets up no singular or peculiar notion in religion, which has nothing like it in the other Scriptures: but rather it is so truly κατὰ ἀναλογίαν, τῆς πίστεως,⁵ hath such an agreement with what is read of a like nature from faith to faith, in all the subsequent revelations, which God hath been pleased to make unto men; that it approves itself in showing that the way of God to lead man through the world hath been in this point none other than one and the same in principle, though diversified in circumstances, as the different ages might require, from the very beginning down to these last times, and is to continue the same until our state here be fulfilled.

⁹ Jerem. vii, 22, 23.

² Rom. iv, 11.

¹ Gen. xvii, 1.

The objectors to a literal interpretation of Moses's account of the two particular trees of the garden, do therefore vainly think, that they have an insuperable difficulty in asking, How could there be in nature trees which could bear such fruits, as seem, by a literal interpretation of Moses, to be ascribed to the tree of knowledge, and the tree of life? For if any one should ask us concerning baptism, What sort of water can that be, which can give the washing of regeneration? or concerning the Lord's Supper, What can we conceive of natural nourishment or juices in that bread and wine, from the eating and drinking of which we may be made partakers of the body and blood of CHRIST? Would any one, who thinks soberly upon the benefits ascribed to the doing these things, as God hath commanded them, find himself at a loss to answer in these matters? Or would he apprehend that the things so commanded are a mere allegory; and that we are not enjoined literally to use real water, or to eat and drink real bread and real wine? Rather, how much more reasonably may we see and apprehend, that as we eat the bread and drink the wine, which God hath commanded, in assurance of the faith, that, if we obey God, it will be unto us according to his word, to give us eternal life, to raise us up at the last day;⁶ even so might Adam, having done the will of God, when God should direct it, have literally put forth his hand, and taken of the tree of life, and eaten and have lived for ever.⁷ And as we are to be washed with water as CHRIST hath required, and God will give us of his Holy Spirit, both to think and to do, above what we otherwise would be able of our own sufficiency, presumptuously assuming to stand in our own strength without him; so if Adam, literally speaking, had not eaten of the forbidden tree, he would have continued in the hand of God's counsel, and not have corrupted himself and his way before God. Not that meat, or abstaining from any kind of meat, recommendeth unto God; not that the washing or not washing with water is in itself any thing; rather, we may, and Adam and Eve might have eaten, or not eaten, and therein have been neither the better nor the worse, had there not been the commandment of God. The tree prohibited was, I apprehend, like other trees of the garden, pleasant to the eyes, and good for food; but the point to be considered was, whether, in observing the prohibition not to eat of this one tree, the man was not to keep himself in the hand of God's counsel, not to take upon himself to be his own independent director; but to have obeyed absolutely, whereinsoever God was pleased to give him special directions, to live according to every word which should proceed from the mouth of God.⁸ If man had persevered herein, as God gave him one law for a relative duty,⁹ he would, in like manner, as occasion required, have given him others also, which otherwise, through man's inexperience of the nature of things, he would have erred in investigating for himself; until God's word having thus been a lantern to his feet and a light to his paths, man might, through it, have attained a right understanding, and having, as long as, and whereinsoever he might want them, been guided by God's counsels,¹ be thereby made gradually wise, meet, and fit to be received unto God in glory. But on the other hand, man rejecting this, the counsel of God towards him, and taking upon himself to judge absolutely for himself; hence it came to pass, that not having a light of actual knowledge of his own, sufficient to preserve him from error, he would find, that however God had created him (jashar) able, under the directions designed him, to walk aright in the duties of his life; yet now, not keeping himself within this guidance, but following his own thoughts, he would become a creature full of error; and be in the end both wicked and vain. We must conceive that God not only sees us, but sees through us; knows us, and knows the point upon which the issue of our lives will turn. He thus knew the Israelites, when he commanded them to expel the Ca-

³ Rom. iv, 11.⁵ Rom. xij, 6.⁴ 2 Pet. i, 20.⁶ John vi, 54.

⁷ Gen. iii, 22.

⁸ Deut. viii, 3; Matt. iv, 4.

⁹ I have before observed, that God gave our first parents the law, that man and wife should not be twain, but one flesh. Mark x, 8, vide quæ sup.

¹ Psalm lxxiii, 24.

naanites out of their land; that, if this one thing was not carefully observed and performed by them, however they might resolve to keep his law, yet they certainly would be drawn away into idolatry by the remains of that people. The Israelites would not apprehend this, but made the experiment; and the event proved to the full what had been foretold.² In like manner, how easy is it to see, that God might know, that the active and busy faculty he had given our first parents, which we call reason, not given in a greater measure than he had endowed them with,³ would never have been kept within its proper bounds, unless at first exercised under some such especial command as he thought fit to give them; and therefore gave such command, to be the standing inviolate memento of their lives, that, *whether they ate, or whether they drank, or whatsoever they did,*⁴ they should in nothing *turn aside from what God commanded, either to the right hand, or to the left.*⁵

² See Exodus xxiii, 33; Judges ii, &c.

³ Motum istum celerem cogitationis, acumen, solertiam, quam rationem vocamus. Cic. de Nat. Deor. lib. iii, c. 27.

⁴ 1 Cor. x, 31.

⁵ Deut. v. 32.

CHAPTER VIII.

Concerning the situation of the Garden of Eden.

THE writers, who contend that Moses only designed an instructive apologue and not a real history, would represent, that his very description of the situation of the garden of Eden hints this to us. They set before us the variety of opinions, which different writers have had concerning the situation of this garden;¹ and would thence argue, that most probably no such spot of ground ever really existed. Plato, they tell us, feigned Διὸς κήπον, a Jupiter's garden, wherein he relates how Porus and Penia became the parents of Eros.² Plato formed a mythologic tale, of the origin of the principle, which he termed Eros, or Love; and supposes, that a garden, which he calls Jupiter's, had been the scene of the fable narrated by him. Of this sort they would have Moses's garden of Eden, a fictitious scene, the supposed place where Moses's mythological account of the origin of sin was transacted; no more a real spot of ground, than Jupiter's garden, in which Plato represented love to have had its origin. They say, divers of the early fathers of the Christian church understood Moses in this manner; and they cite a very learned one, Eusebius in particular, for this opinion. To this we may well answer, that what sentiments some of the fathers sometimes had of divers parts of Moses's writings is not very material. Our inquiry is, what we may reasonably admit from the Scriptures to inform us concerning the matter before us. However, I would observe, that Eusebius certainly did not mean what is inferred from him. We find, in our editions of him, these words, Μωσείως κατὰ τινὰς ἀπορρητὰς λόγους—τίνα παραδεισον

¹ Dr. Middleton justly remarks, that it would be tedious to collect the strange variety of conceits, which have been invented about the single article of a paradise; the reader may find enough of them in Burnet's Theory, both the Latin and English.

² Plato in Sympos.

γεγονεῖναι φαντος.³ From hence it is said, that Eusebius represents Moses as having written of his paradise mythologically; whereas I apprehend that whoever will duly examine Eusebius will see, that he here hinted Plato's sentiment of Moses, but not his own. Eusebius represents Plato as an allegorical writer, and the passage cited from him has some defect,⁴ or is obscurely worded; but it seems to me, that he aimed to set himself ἀντιπρὸς Μωσέως; in a point of view over against Moses; to appear such a writer as he (Plato) took Moses to have been before him. Accordingly, though Plato changed the facts related by Moses,⁵ and did not narrate the very same which he read in Moses's writings, but adopted others; yet he thought he would write as elegantly of Porus and Penia, as he deemed Moses had written of Adam and Eve; reputed Moses, as well as himself, φαντος κατὰ τινος ἀπορήτους λόγους, writing not as a historian, but in the mythic style of allegory. The sentiment of the whole period cited from Eusebius is different, if we understand Μωσέως φαντος to mean, that Moses really wrote in allegory, and that Eusebius so thought of him, from what it would appear, taking those words as referring to Plato, and intending only that Plato so thought of Moses. The Greek sentence may, I think, admit the latter sense;⁶ an English reader may be apt to catch the former: and Dr. Burnet hereupon endeavours, in a manner unworthy a scholar, to palm the former upon us. We may fully see the opinion of Eusebius concerning Plato's imitating Moses in the chapter following what is cited. Eusebius tells us, how Plato formed his fable of the Androgynes, from what Moses had related of God's making the woman out of the man.⁷ Plato changed the fact related by Moses, and used a fiction, as he thought, similar to it, and reputed it as warrantable; supposing that Moses herein, as well as himself, had written allegory. But Eusebius hereupon tells us expressly, that Plato did not understand Moses's intention,⁸ and was ignorant of his way of speaking.⁹ Here then we come to

³ Vide Euseb. Præp. Evang. lib. xii, c. 11. Hunc hortum Dei apud Mosem eundem esse volunt nonnulli ac Διὸς κήπον, Jovis hortum apud Platonem, et eandem esse utrobique historiam vel allegoriam κατὰ τινος ἀπορήτους λόγους Μωσέως, secundum arcanos sensus Mosis inquit Eusebius. Burnet's Archæol. p. 87

⁴ I should suspect that Eusebius wrote, Μωσέως ὡς κατὰ τινος ἀπορήτους λόγους — φαντος. Mosis, quasi secundum quosdam arcanos sensus loquentis. The meaning of the place would thus be clear; but perhaps the unskilful transcriber dropped the second ὡς, not seeing the meaning of it.

⁵ Τα ῥήματα μεταποίησας ὁ Πλάτων.

⁶ The words of Eusebius in our present copies of him, are, Μωσέως κατὰ τινος ἀπορήτους λόγους ἐν τῇ ἀρχῇ τῆς τοῦ κόσμου συστάσεως Διὸς τὴν Παράδεισον γρηγοῖναι φαντος. καὶ [κ' α'] ταῦτα τοῦτον ἀνδρῶν ἠπατηθῆναι διὰ τῆς γυναικὸς πρὸς τοῦ ὅψεως, ἀντιπρὸς μοινοῦναι τα ῥήματα μεταποίησας ὁ Πλάτων, ἵστασθαι οὐκ ἐν Συμπόσιῳ καὶ αὐτὸς ἀλλήλους τεθῆναι. Euseb. b. Præp. Evang. lib. xii, c. 11.

⁷ Euseb. Præp. Evang. lib. xii, c. 12.

⁸ Μη συνεῖν ὁ Πλάτων ὅτι αὐτῶν κινήται διάνοια. Euseb. ibid.

⁹ Ἄλλος μὲν ἔστιν ἢ ἀγνοῦντας τοῦ λόγου. Id. ibid.

Eusebius's sentiment concerning both Plato and Moses: he plainly shows, that he knew Moses had written fact, and history, but thought Plato mistook him, and supposed him an allegorist; and that, in writing in that style, he was an imitator of him. Accordingly, we ought so to construe what was before cited from Eusebius, as to make it agree with what he has thus plainly declared.

But to return from whence I have digressed: the writers, who do not admit, in a literal sense, what Moses relates of the garden of Eden, remark, that the ignorance of all ages, concerning its true place and situation, must be deemed a considerable argument, that no such real place ever existed.¹ It is not likely, they say, but that some of Adam's early posterity must have found in the world some traces of the mansion of their first parents, if so remarkable a place of their abode had ever been; but, if it be in fact true, that, choose where we will, we can hear of no spot of ground so situate and bounded as Moses describes, why should we think his garden any other than a mere scene of fancy, which no real geography could ever mark out upon the face of the whole earth?² But these writers are in all this guilty of the most shameful carelessness. They first call for an inquiry, whether any of Adam's posterity could ever trace out any marks of the situation of the place where Adam first lived? and then, overlooking, that, ages after Adam, Moses gave his contemporaries a very particular designation of it, they run away to a modern disquisition, whether we can now find charts of the world, that may perfectly agree with the descriptions of Moses? But the best method we can take to clear the whole of this inquiry will be to examine, 1. Whether we can reasonably admit, that any situation of places in the world before the Flood could possibly be found the same in the postdiluvian Earth. 2. To examine whether Moses does, or does not, settle the boundaries of his garden, such as they were known to be after the flood. 3. Whether it appears, that the site of the garden, as Moses describes it was known in the world before, in, and after, the time of Moses. 4. To determine what his description of it precisely is. 5. Whether there has not happened, since his time, such alterations in the countries bordering upon its situation, as may give us reason to think, that we cannot now ascertain the local spot described by him; yet, notwithstanding all the changes in the face of the Earth, that we may still find the country in which Moses's garden of Eden may be reasonably concluded to have had its situation.

I. Our first inquiry ought to be, whether any spot of ground in the first world could possibly be found again after the flood? Here we have to combat with two opinions: one, that the first world was made so very different from the postdiluvian Earth, that it cannot be thought there was such a situation in it as Moses describes. The other, that if there had been originally such a primitive situation, the earth must have suffered such alteration by the flood, that, after that catastrophe, no traces of what had been before could ever be found. For the former of these we may read Dr. Burnet's Theory; that there were no hills; no such rivers in the first world as now water the earth.³ But we shall find this a mere fancy of his philosophy, into which he would not have fallen had he kept to what he proposed should conduct his inquiries, namely, the light he might have had from the holy Scriptures.⁴ The sacred writers have ever accounted mountains and hills as coeval with the world. The writer of the Book of Job was of this opinion; who speaks of the first man as made before the hills;⁵ not meaning before them, in point of time; for the expression is, made in the sight of the hills;⁶ that is, when as yet not men, but the hills only were spectators of his coming into being. The expression intimates what the Psalmist also suggests, that the mountains were brought forth as soon as the earth was made; for to these he appeals as to the most ancient things, to argue from them, that He, who was before them, is God: *Before the mountains were brought forth, or ever thou hadst formed the earth, even from everlasting to everlasting thou art God.*⁷ Agreeably hereto, Moses speaks of hills, which had not their rise from the deluge, but were more ancient; were the heights of the earth, over and above the loftiest of which the waters of the flood, he tells us, prevailed fifteen cubits upwards; to cover all the high hills then under Heaven.⁸ But it was in Dr. Burnet's imagination, that a fluid mass, rolled round upon its axis, might gradually throw outward its earthy particles, and become incrustated over a huge body of waters, and growing more and more firm and compact, have its surface naturally formed in an even oval.⁹ But how small a mote became here a beam in our author's eye; from his not considering the greatness of this work of God! He does not treat (though he is not willing to allow his conceptions to be so narrow¹) his mundane egg suitably to the real amplitude of the world.² Geometry shows, that the height of the highest mountains of the earth bears no greater proportion to a semidiameter of our globe, ³ Theory, book i, c. 5.

¹ See Middleton's Essay upon the allegorical and literal interpretation.

² Middleton's Examination of the Lord Bishop of London's Discourses, p. 133.

⁴ Adducamus in concilium naturam et rationem, præeunte semper, quæ licet, sacrarum literarum lumine. Tell. Theor. Sac. lib. i, c. 5

⁵ Job xv, 6.

⁶ לפני נִבְנוּ. Ibid.

⁷ Psalm xc, 2.

⁸ Gen. vii, 19.

⁹ Theory, vol. i, c. 4.

¹ Id. c. 11.

² Id. c. 5. 'Tis the doctrine of the mundane egg. I do not know any sym-bolical doctrine so universally entertained by the Mystæ. Id. book ii, c. 8.

than as about 1 to 860.³ Therefore, though to us many of the mountains are vast objects, as they take up great room in, or, if we approach them, more than fill the little orb of our sight; yet they are in truth no greater prominence on the face of the Earth, than an excrescence of about the one hundred and forty-third part of an inch high would be upon a ball a yard round. Our sight is not minute enough to reach so insensible an irregularity; and were it even large enough to take a comprehensive view of a whole hemisphere of the Earth, it could not spy so little an object as the hugest mountain.⁴ Had our author thus considered the bigness of the Earth, cavities for the seas impressed upon the formed orb of it, to receive the gathering together of the waters, which were to run from among the hills, and the mountains and hills raised upon the face of the antediluvian globe, might have been deemed by him to be no more than what the ϕ δ ϵ ω γ ϵ ω μ ϵ ρ ϵ ρ ω , the divine workmaster, who gave every thing its due weight and measure, knew was proper to balance the parts of the Earth one against another, to give a due libration to our globe.

But the other opinion is, that, if the Earth was indeed originally made such, as to have hills and rivers like what are mentioned by Moses; yet that such alterations of our globe must have happened from the universal deluge, that any of the same mountains and rivers which were before the flood, cannot be supposed to have remained, or be found after it. This sentiment is thought supportable either by considering, 1. What a fracture must have happened in the Earth, to bring forth the abyss of waters produced by God's breaking up the fountains of the deep;⁵ or, 2. The strata of the relics of a flood, which are said to lie everywhere deep in all parts of the present Earth.

1. Moses tells us, that at the deluge all the fountains of the great deep were broken up.⁶ Our ingenious theorist, having observed what a quantity of water must otherwise have been created, to fill a sphere extended fifteen cubits every way higher than the summit of the highest hills,⁷ represents the old world as having been arched over a vast abyss of waters inclosed around its centre, laid up here as in a store house,⁸ contained as in a bag⁹ against the time when God called them forth to destroy the world that then was. God then, he says, broke up the fountains of this deep; caused the compass of the world set over it,¹ i. e. the Earth² established upon these floods, to be broken down, and in huge

³ Varen. Geogr. sec. iii, c. ix, prop. vii.

⁴ Varenius's proposition is, Montium altitudo ad semidiametrum telluris non habet sensibilem proportionem, sive adeo exiguum, ut rotunditati telluris non magis officiat, quam punctum in globi artificialis superficie notatum.

⁵ Gen. vii, 11.

⁶ Ibid.

⁷ Theory of the Earth, vol. i, c. 2.

⁸ Ibid. c. 7; Psalm xxxiii, 7.

⁹ Ibid.

¹ Psalm. cxxxvi, 6.

² Psalm xxiv, 2.

fragments to fall into this vast cavern, whereby the waters, forced out of it, were added to the rain of forty days, to drown the world. He adds, in lively descriptions, that the face of the present Earth, overspread with broken mountains, craggy precipices, ragged and mis-shapen rocks, looks apparently to be such a world of ruins; and shows us, that we live upon the remains of a thus fractured globe. He concludes, that if we admit his hypothesis, or such a disruption of the Earth, we cannot expect to find rivers now, as they were before; the general source is, he says, changed, and their channels are all broken up.³ It is surprising that this ingenious author did not reflect, that even his own hypothesis does not make it certain that the ruins he supposes occupied the face of the whole Earth. Might not divers enormous fragments fall into the abyss represented by him, in many different parts of the world, and for vast and extensive tracts of country together: and yet in other parts vast plains, and a well watered champaign, such as are found, and have been found in all ages in many countries, have remained not disfigured, as not having suffered, in these ruins? The disruption of the world was local, here and there in places, as the rocky precipices are found to be, which are scattered over, but do not everywhere cover, the whole face of the Earth. And if Moses's Eden was in a tract of country, which did not break and fall in such disjointed fragments into the deep, its primitive situation might remain, and be well described by him in the postdiluvian world. In like manner,

2. If we examine what is offered by others concerning the several strata in the bowels of the Earth, occasioned, as they represent, by a universal deluge; we shall find nothing in their speculations, to prove that Moses might not be able to describe the local situation of the garden of Eden, by such boundaries as might really exist in the postdiluvian Earth.

Some writers speak of shells and exuviae of fishes, of teeth and bones of some animals, often found buried under the surface; many times deep in the bowels of the present Earth; and sometimes inclosed even within the mass of the most solid stones, or beds of minerals. They suppose that the Earth, at the universal deluge, was so long soaked in the water which overflowed it, that the crustation or concretion of all its parts was absolutely loosened, and the whole orb liquidated into a universal fluor. In this, trees, animals, fishes, and all sorts of vegetables, not of a contexture, such as that water was a proper menstruum to dissolve, were variously tossed about and carried, until, when God was pleased to quiet the floods, and the agitations of the waters became a dead calm, things began regularly to subside. They suppose the earth to concrete again, and the bodies rolling here and there in the turbid and ³ Theory of the Earth, vol. i, book ii, c. 7.

THE BLACK SEA

et al.
of the present Channels of
The RIVERS HIDEKEL or TIGRIS & EUPHRATES
Exhibiting the Site of MOSES GARDEN & RIVER of EDEN.

thick waters, to sink and lodge deeper or nearer the surface of the accrescing earth, in proportion to their specific gravities. Then that the bed of earth, in which they became thus situated, hardening daily, suitably to the nature of its respective soil, some strata became in time a chalk; others vegetated or were concocted to stone; to ore of minerals in concretions of various sorts, such as might be formed according to the different nature of the parts of which they were compounded: that the undissolved bodies, which subsided, and rested where the surrounding matter answered their gravity and sustained them, became, as that hardened, inclosed in it; and are therefore, wherever the earth is ransacked down to the beds where they lie, found sometimes whole and entire, where no air has been introduced to loosen the contexture of their parts, or any menstruum has been generated, to corrode and dissolve them. And many times, where the shells or animals are dissolved and gone, such a print appears in the yielding and soft substance of the strata where they lay, as to exhibit even in what now are the hardest stones, impressions of various kinds, more perfect than the best matrices which the highest art of foundery could ever have made to cast their forms in. In this manner they suppose that the liquidated earth, being full of all that perished in it, has gradually become again a round lump, precipitated to the centre of the waters in which it was immersed. And they say, that after this subsidence, God raised the earth again above the waters by breaking the round orb, and elevating some parts into hills, making deep channells for rivers and seas, and thereby draining great tracts to be dry land for a new habitable world. They assign this to be the reason, why in some mountains, and sides of hills, the relics are found lying in lines perpendicular, and not, as in other parts of the earth, in horizontal strata.⁴ These mountains, they say, were raised up from their flat and recumbent situation, set as it were on edge, so as to have what originally was their horizontal surface now placed sloping or perpendicular to the horizon, and accordingly to have their whole contents in a like situation. In this manner we are apt to think ourselves able, speculatively, to destroy and make a world. But whether in fact these things were thus done, must be more than doubted by any one who attends to the history of Moses. If the earth, within six generations of Adam, was found to abound in such ore of metals, as could employ every artificer in brass and iron, of which we read Tubal-Cain was an early instructor;⁵ we cannot conceive that the whole globe had been, at the Flood, of so loose and dissoluble a contexture, that forty days' rain, and the waters which came from the great deep, should altogether melt it away. And if, as an ingenious friend observed to me, in a conversation upon this subject, the dove which Noah sent out the second time from the ark, came to him in the evening, and, lo! in her mouth was an olive leaf pluckt off, so Noah knew that the waters were abated; some trees, at least, which were before the Flood, stood their ground, and therefore their ground was not absolutely washed away from them. Their summits or tops of boughs appeared as the flood decreased, for the dove to alight on, and to bear away the spoils of them.

⁴ See Woodward's Theory.⁵ Gen. iv, 22.

The world, such as it subsided during the increase of the Flood, such it appeared again in the parts where the ark rested, rising by degrees out of the waters; the summits of trees upon the hills, from one of which Noah's dove plucked an olive leaf, emerged first; the tops of hills next became visible; the earth, and what was upon it, came gradually into sight, until the face of the ground was dry. The heathen poet seems to describe this great event more suitably to what the providence of God caused to be the fact, than our modern philosophers have done. Ovid tells us, that upon the abating of the Flood,

Flumina subsidunt, colles exire videntur,
Surgit humus: crescant loca decrescientibus undis:
Potsque diem—nudata cacumina silvæ
Ostendunt, limumque tenent in fronde relictum,
Redditus orbis erat.

OVID, MET. lib. i.

The world was restored to the remnant of mankind; not a new world, created over again, upon a total dissolution of the former; but a globe, which, though the waters left everywhere sufficient marks of an inundation, was in nowise so entirely stripped of its trees, its herbs, and all its other garniture, that the sons of Noah could not know it to be the same, or could think it absolutely another Earth.

We may well account for all the phenomena of which our naturalists are so full, without running the length of their imagination for a solution. If we consider the accounts and effects of many lesser inundations, which have happened in divers parts of the world, we may explain such effects as are mentioned by the poet:

Vidi ego, quæ quondam fuerat solidissima tellus
Esse fretum, vidi factas ex æquore terras:
Et procul a pelago conchæ jacuere marinæ,
Et vetus inventa est in montibus anchora summis:
Quodque fuit campus vallem decursus aquarum
Fecit, et eluvie mons est deductus in æquor.

OVID, MET. lib. xv.

Great tracts which were formerly dry land, may be now in the sea; and much, of what the waters formerly covered, is in many parts of the world become dry and habitable ground. The shells of sea-fish are often seen in parts very remote from any seas, and ancient anchors have been found upon the tops of mountains: a flow of waters has gullied plains into deep valleys; and hills have been washed down, and borne away into the ocean.

Our own country might afford many demonstrative facts of this nature. In the levels of Cambridgeshire there are many reasons to think, that there was formerly a surface, which now lies buried some yards deep under the present soil. The bottom of some rivers show it;⁹ and in setting down a sluice there has been found, sixteen feet deep, a smith's forge and the tools thereunto belonging, with several horseshoes. At Whittlesey, in that county; in digging through the moor, at eight feet deep, they came, we are told, to a perfect soil of what is called sword ground. Timber trees of several kinds, it is said, lie deeply buried in other places; and, in some parts, skeletons of fishes, whole and entire; lie many feet under ground in a slit. From all these appearances our naturalists inform us, with great show of probability, that some ancient land floods have brought down from the higher countries a prodigious wash of soil with their waters; that these waters, not finding a sufficient outlet to run off with a strong current, spread over the whole level the adventitious earth brought with them, which in time hardened and incrustated to a new surface over the old ground, covering whatever was overflowed upon the former lands, and containing the exuviae of whatever fish or animals were choked and buried in it. From these lesser effects of lesser causes, we may, I think, well trace the greater effects of greater. If an inundation, of so small a country as an inland level, heaped a soil over the face of it yards deep, why might not the universal deluge of the world, in places where the drain from them might let away the water, but retain the sediment, lodge vast and mountainous tracts of adventitious earth; in which might be buried all the layers of the exuviae, which are the noted curiosities of their strata, and over which the earths they were buried in were at first but wet mud, loose mould, gritty sand, loam or marl; little particles of stony substance; some of all aptitudes for all sorts of accretion, concoction, and vegetation; and which have accordingly, in the maturation of ages, remained sandy and sabulous earth in all kinds, or become rocks or minerals, veins of metals, or quarries of all sorts of stone, according to the respective natures of their component particles and constitution? The hills, as the waters surmounted all, might in many places, where their summits were plain and extensive, and the fall from them but little, have their tops hugely heaped, and their sides every way loaded with these incrustations. In countries, also, where a great fall was open for the waters from high hills, and a spacious outlet for their currents into the sea, mountains of this adventitious soil might be carried off through the channels of large rivers, deepened by the torrents borne through them, and the face of the adjacent lands, scoured indeed of some of its own surface, might have its boundaries left much the same after as before such deluge.

⁹ See Dugdale's History of Embanking.

The depths to which the labour of man has, or ever can explore the Earth, are, comparatively speaking, a mere span; for how little do the deepest mines approach towards the centre of our globe? It may probably be true, after all our naturalists have offered upon these subjects, that none of the shells and exuvix they talk of, such as really are or have been what they take them for, have ever been found anywhere in the earth, but where the deluge heaped and left the soil where they are found. In other parts of the world, where the Flood did not make new ground, if these parts were dug and opened to proper depths, undoubtedly we should find different layers or strata of earth, quarries of stones, or veins of minerals, such as may have been forming from the origin of things, but no such exuvix in these as are found in like beds in the other places. And where the exuvix are found lying perpendicularly or aslope, and not in horizontal lines, I suspect that earthquakes, since the deluge, may have variously broken up these places from their deepest foundations; subverted the old, and made a new position of huge fragments of them.

If in thus examining, all that has been suggested, we can, after all, find such a situation in the present world, as Moses describes, which hath all appearance of being the tract where he marked out the boundaries of his land of Eden, and its garden; I conceive, that, if those parts were dug up and explored, such exuvix of the flood would be found in them as to induce us to think, that such a spot of ground, as described by Moses, has existed both upon the antediluvian and postdiluvian Earth. But let us consider,

II. Whether the description of Moses does not plainly tell us, what were the marks or bounds of his garden of Eden in the first world; and also as plainly, that these boundaries remained, but had new names, and were well known in the second. A river, he tells us, went out of Eden to water the garden, and it was a river of four heads:⁷ this was the run and streams of the river of Eden, when the garden was first planted, and the man put into it. The words of Moses must have this, and can have no other intention. But Moses does not rest his description here; he proceeds to tell us what these rivers were called, and what countries they washed upon in after-ages. He calls the first of the rivers Pisq̄n, the second ⁷ Gen. ii, 10.

Gihon, the third Hiddekel, and the fourth Euphrates.⁶ He tells us of the first river, that it compasseth the whole land of Havilah,⁹ a country noted for its gold and precious stones;¹ of the second, that it compasseth the whole land of Ethiopia, or Cush;² of the third, that it runs east into Assyria;³ of the fourth, that it is the Euphrates.⁴ These names of the rivers here mentioned by Moses, three of them, at least, are not, that I know of, mentioned anywhere by profane geographers; but the most ancient of these are mere moderns, comparatively speaking, with regard to the ancient Scripture geography.⁵ The author of the Book of Ecclesiasticus mentions both Pison and Gihon;⁶ and hints, that both were rivers, which at particular seasons of the year abounded in their flow of waters,⁷ and as not unworthy of being named with the Tigris and Euphrates;⁸ therefore we may think, that in his day they were noted, and in nowise inconsiderable streams. The Pison, Moses tells us, encompassed the whole land of Havilah,⁹ a country well known by this name from after Abraham's day,¹ and in the times of Saul,² although not thus called in the antediluvian world, for it must have been thus denominated from its having been planted after the Flood by Havilah, one of the sons of Jocktan;³ or perhaps originally by Havilah, a son of Cush.⁴ We can find no more of Gihon, than that it compassed the whole land of Ethiopia, or land of Cush.⁵ The country called the land of Cush was what the sons of Cush first planted,⁶ most probably Babylonia;⁷ undoubtedly not called the land of Cush until after the Flood, when Cush, the son of Ham, and grandson of Noah, had been an inhabitant of it. The river Hiddekel was known to Daniel; it was a great river in his days, and one of the visions he saw was made to him in the third year of Cyrus, king of Persia, upon its banks.⁸ The fourth river of Moses's Eden was the Perath, or Euphrates,⁹ a river so known as to want only to be named to be sufficiently distinguished from all others. It was called, by way of eminence, The Great River, in Abraham's days,¹ and ⁶ Gen. ii, 11—14. Moses having told us, that the garden was watered by a river from four heads, proceeds here to make, as it were, a new terrier of it, by giving it streams, and the countries they washed upon those names by which they were called after the Flood, &c.

⁹ Gen. ii, 11.

¹ Ibid.

² The word we translate Ethiopia is Cush in the Hebrew. Gen. ii, 13. See Connect. Sac. et Prof. Hist. vol. i, book iii, p. 110.

³ Gen. ii, 14.

⁴ Ibid.

⁵ Vide quæ post.

⁶ Ecclus. xxiv, 25, 27.

⁷ Ibid.

⁸ Ibid.

⁹ Gen. ii, ubi sup.

¹ Chap. xxv, 18.

² 1 Sam. xv, 7.

³ Gen. x, 29.

⁴ Ver. 7; see Connect. vol. i, book iii, p. 112.

⁵ Gen. ii, ubi sup.

⁶ Gen. x, 7; see Connect. vol. i, book iii, p. 112.

⁷ Ibid.

⁸ Dan. x, 4.

⁹ Gen. ii, 14.

¹ Chap. xv, 18.

so in like manner by Moses at the exit out of Egypt.² It is well known throughout the Scriptures by the same name,³ and the heathen geographers are all very full in their accounts of it.⁴ In this manner, therefore, Moses describes the situation of the garden of Eden, not as if he had thought the Flood had washed it away, so that the place of it could nowhere be found; but he remarks what names the rivers of it had from after the times of the sons of Noah, what countries they bounded; and he so remarkably observes, that it had been situate in the neighbourhood of the most known river in the world, the river Euphrates, that it must be evident, he had no thought of placing it in some obscure corner, which surely he would have done, if he had intended a mere fiction. And I apprehend, considering him as describing a real place, that he would have added more, if he had thought what he wrote was not clear enough to leave no doubts, at the time he wrote, concerning the situation which he described.

III. The site of the garden of Eden, as Moses describes it, seems to have been well known in the world, both before, and in, and after Moses's time. The Scriptures are generally concise; every part is confined to the matter it treats of; therefore the garden of Eden being situate beyond the Euphrates, and near the river, upon whose banks Daniel was, in his captivity at Babylon, it must at first sight be obvious, that the land and garden of Eden were in the neighbourhood of Babylonia. But the history of the Bible, from after Abraham's days to about the time of the captivity, has no accounts relating to any thing beyond the Euphrates; therefore it is no wonder, if we meet nothing remarkable relating to places of this country in all this interval. But Abraham and Lot came into Canaan, from Haran;⁵ and before they dwelt in Haran, they had left a farther part of the country of the Chaldees, for they came from Ur.⁶ They were not young men⁷ when they left these parts, but may well be supposed to be no strangers to a country in which they and their fathers had for many generations lived. Accordingly we find them readily agreeing in a material point concerning the subject of our inquiry. They sojourned together in Canaan, between Bethel and Hai; their flocks and herds were so large, that they could not conveniently live together, but were now to separate;⁸ and Lot, we read, chose to live in the plain of Jordan, because it was everywhere well watered, even as the garden of the Lord, ² Deut. i, 7.

³ The reader may find it thus named in all parts of the Old Testament.

⁴ Vide Strab. Geogr. lib. xi; Plinii Nat. Hist. lib. v, c. 26; lib. vi, c. 9, &c.

⁵ Gen. xii, 5.

⁶ Chap. xi, 31.

⁷ See Connect. vol. i, b. v, p. 168. Abraham was seventy years old, when his father removed from Ur to Haran, and seventy-five when he came into Canaan.

⁸ Gen. xiii.

and like the land of Egypt.⁹ Abraham and Lot had been together in Egypt, so that this country was well known to them;¹ and from the whole course of their travels, it must appear, that they could have seen no parts of the world so well watered as the plains of Jordan, except the lands adjoining the waters of the Nile, and the waters of Babylon. They speak expressly of the one; and respecting the garden of the Lord, in the country of the other, they agree, without any farther mention than its name, as being a place familiarly known to them both.² The comparison between the plains of Jordan and the spot of ground watered by these rivers, said by Moses to be the rivers of Eden, was so just, that the writer of the Book of Ecclesiasticus, afterwards, allowed it to be a true one. The waters of Tigris, and Pison, and Geon, and Euphrates, are by him, as Abraham and Lot had long before agreed, very properly compared with the waters of Jordan.³

But it may be doubted, whether by the garden of the Lord, mentioned by Lot to Abraham, was meant the garden of Eden, as described by Moses. Let us consider how far these places, retaining this very name in the countries where it was situate, down to the captivity, may be of weight to clear this matter. Ezekiel, in his prophecy against Tyre, whose merchants traded to all parts of the Earth, observes, that they had been at the garden of God.⁴ Where now was the place so called? In what land? He plainly tells us, it was in Eden.⁵ I would observe what the merchandise was, which the Tyrians brought thence; it was, saith the prophet, many precious stones, and amongst them the onyx-stone and gold;⁶

⁹ Gen. xiii, 10.

¹ Ver. 1.

² It may seem to us a great retrospect, for Abraham to look back for Adam's first habitation. But let us consider the length of men's lives from Adam to Abraham; Adam lived to see Lamech fifty-six years old. See the table of antediluvian lives, according to the Hebrew chronology, Connect. vol. i, b. i. Lamech appears to have been a person, who had much considered the state of his forefathers, and the labours they had from the ground, in God's having cursed it. He therefore knew what had been the error of Adam's life; and was enabled to assure his contemporaries, upon the birth of his son Noah, that this child would obtain for them a relief of their difficulties. See Gen. v, 29. Lamech lived to within five years of the Flood. See the table above cited. Shem, the son of Noah, was one hundred years old, two years after the Flood, see Gen. xi, 10; and therefore was born ninety-seven years before the beginning of the Flood, and ninety-two years before the death of his grandfather Lamech. Shem lived five hundred and two years after the Flood; see Gen. xi, 10, i. e., the Flood happening A. M. 1656. See Connect. vol. i, b. i, p. 57. Shem lived to A. M. 2158. Abraham was born A. M. 2001; see Connect. vol. i, b. v, p. 168; so that Shem lived to see Abraham one hundred and fifty years old. Abraham therefore might converse many years with Shem, Shem with Lamech, and Lamech with Adam; and though a knowledge of where Adam first lived may seem to have travelled into a vast tract of time, to come down to Abraham, yet we may observe the links of the chain of tradition of it were so few, that we may think it really not more remote from his having a full account of it, than it may be to know the habitation of our father's grandfather.

³ Eccles. xxiv, ubi sup.
⁵ Ibid.

⁴ Ezek. xxviii, 13.

⁶ Ibid.

the very commodities which Moses tells us was the produce of this country.⁷ Shall we doubt where the prophet supposed the situation of this country of Eden, and this garden of God, was? We may see he placed it near Babylon, and amongst the domains of the Assyrian empire. Eden seems to have been beyond Haran and Canneh, near to Shebah and Ashur;⁸ all which well agrees with Daniel's being upon the banks of the river Hiddekel, one of Moses's rivers of Eden; when he was among the children of the captivity at Babylon.⁹ These are very plain hints; and if any one will say they do not amount to demonstration, I shall not contend with him; yet, at the same time, I think I may venture to propose a serious consideration, whether they do not concur, and induce us to admit, that the garden of God in Eden, was a place, well known by that name to Abraham and Lot, and many ages after by the Jews in the days of their captivity, known to be situate not very far from the waters of Babylon, and in a situation very well agreeing with Moses's description. This seems more reasonable than all the trifling suggestions, which can be offered to make us think otherwise.

IV. Let us consider what Moses's description of the land and garden of Eden precisely is: and if we attend carefully to his narration, we shall find that it plainly gives us the following particulars: 1. That a river went out of Eden and watered the garden.¹ Eden, then, was the country higher up the stream than the garden; for the river ran down from Eden to the garden. 2. And from thence it was parted;² after the river had ran past; i. e. at or below the farther end of the garden, it was parted; the meaning of the words is sufficiently clear; the river, after it came out of the land of Eden, was one single or undivided stream to, and all along the garden; but when it had passed the garden, then it divided, and branched into more streams. But, 3. what next follows seems more confused: it became into four heads.³ Heads of rivers are the springs or origin from whence they have their waters; so that to say of rivers, that the current of their stream proceeds, and becomes into four heads, or comes to four heads, seems to be an inversion of nature, a kind of describing them as running upwards to their fountains; when, on the contrary, all streams must run down from, and not to or into, their heads. The Hebrew particle used by Moses, and which we translate into, is indeed le,⁴ which generally signifies to or unto; but the translators ought to have observed, that it sometimes also signifies from, and so it ought to have been rendered in this place. In the Book of Chronicles we read, when Solomon was made king, he, and all the

⁷ Gen. ii, 11, 12.

⁸ Dan. ubi sup.; see chap. iii, and v.

² Ibid.

³ Ibid.

⁴ Ezek. xxvii, 23.

¹ Gen. ii, 10.

² נָחַלָּה Heb. text.

congregation with him, went [לִבְמֶה] to the high place that was at Gibeon; for there was the tabernacle of the congregation of God, which Moses, the servant of the Lord, had made in the wilderness.⁵ Here the particle le is prefixed to bamah, and signifies to or unto the high place. But in the 13th verse we are told, Then Solomon came. [לִבְמֶה,] (the same prefix and word is again used,) our English version says, from his journey to the high place, that was at Gibeon, to Jerusalem; but the Hebrew text has no words for from his journey. The vulgar Latin, therefore, renders the passage more truly, "venit ergo Salomon ab excelso Gabeon in Jerusalem:" the Septuagint say, Καὶ ἦλθε Σολομὼν ἐκ βάρης τῆς ἐν Γαββὼν εἰς Ἱερουσαλὴμ. The fact was, Solomon had been at the high place at Gibeon, and was now returning back again to Jerusalem, which the Hebrew text expresses by, then Solomon came, labbamah, from the high place, that was at Gibeon, to Jerusalem. Here the particle le, prefixed to bamah, signifies from; though it is as plain, that in the 3d verse, prefixed in like manner to the same word, it signifies to or unto; i. e. this particle in the Hebrew tongue may have either of these significations; and the necessary sense of the place must guide us when to give it the one, and when the other: and under this direction in the text of Moses, which we are considering, it must signify from, and not into. The words of Moses are, vehajah le arbanah rashim,⁶ which should be rendered, and it was from four heads. This, then, is the express account, which Moses gives of the river of Eden. It came from Eden to water the garden; from thence it parted; from Eden, downwards to the garden, it was but one stream; beyond the garden it parted, and branched into more streams. Moses does not say how many these were, nor what the courses in which they ran; but he returns to give an account of the one stream which ran down to the garden, which he tells us was made by the confluence of four rivers, afterwards named by him, Pison, Gihon, Hiddekel, and Euphrates.⁷

V. We are to consider, whether such alterations in the face of the country and rivers of Moses's Eden may not have happened since his time, as to render it impossible to trace every mark of the garden or land of Eden, as he described it. Let us inquire, nevertheless, how far we can find sufficient marks of its situation.

⁵ 2 Chron. i, 3.

⁶ וַיֵּצֵא לָהֶם אֶרְבַּע רָאשִׁים

capitibus e quatuor et fuit

⁷ We may here observe, that Dr. Burnet most egregiously mistook Moses's expression. He asks, insulting, "Dic ubi in terris—quatuor fluvii nascuntur ab uno fonte?" Archæol. p. 287, 288. In his English works; "Where are there four rivers in our continent, that come from one head?" Theory of the Earth, vol. i, b. ii, c. 7. He would insinuate that Moses had been guilty of an absurdity; but he did not understand Moses; the absurdity is his own.

It was evidently near to or upon the Euphrates,⁸ upon the Hiddekel,⁹ a river not far from ancient Babylon.¹ It was in the country where the mighty empires of Assyria had their seat, their height of grandeur, and their ruin. Now, when we think of the amazing works performed by the ruling powers in these countries, in their alterations of the course of rivers; building and removing even great cities; all which are since become no better than a vast tract of stupendous ruins; we see it must be impossible to find in these parts any face of things, to such a minute degree as Moses described, ages before what has been their glory in all the various works of art, and labours of empire, which adorned them, and which are now their desolation.

The two great rivers in these countries are the Tigris and the Euphrates; which have been always noted by all geographers, who have written about these parts of the world. The Euphrates was, without doubt, the Perath of Moses; and we may well allow that the Tigris was his Hiddekel, considering that it is called by Daniel the great river.² This was the eminent title of the Euphrates,³ and it is not likely it should be given to any lesser stream, which could not be compared with it. But can we offer a similar conjecture, to find out what river was the Gihon or the Pison of Moses? I confess I think not. The memorial of both these rivers seems to have been distinctly kept up, to the time of the author of the Book of Ecclesiasticus, who, according to Dean Prideaux, wrote in Hebrew, about two hundred and fifty years before CHRIST,⁴ what his grandson, above a century later, turned into Greek. This writer appears to refer to all the four⁵ rivers mentioned by Moses as well known in his time, and known to have their extraordinary flow, annually, like the river Jordan; but those geographical writers we have now extant, are but modern in comparison of the age even of this author; none of them being so old by above two hundred years, and some who are often cited as old writers, falling short of him by many centuries. A vast change began to be made in the face of this country, before the writing of the Book of Ecclesiasticus, when Seleucus built Seleucia on the Tigris, which proved the desolation of old Babylon.⁶ What the rivers of this country were, before the province where Babylon had stood began to become a heap of deserted ruins, might be recollected when the writer of Ecclesiasticus mentioned them; but be lost, in much ⁸ Gen. ii, ubi sup.

⁹ Ibid.

¹ Dan. x, ubi sup.

² Ibid.

³ Gen. xv, ubi sup.

⁴ Prideaux Connect. part ii, book v. Anno ante Christum 132. At this time the learned Dean says it was translated into Greek. It was, he says, originally written in Hebrew by the author of it, about the time when Onias, the second of that name, was high priest at Jerusalem, which was about anno ante Christum 250. See his Connect. part ii, book ii.

⁵ Eccles. xxiv, 25—27.

⁶ See Prideaux, Connect. part i, book viii.

confusion, before the earliest writers of geography after his time, whose works are now extant, made their inquiries into the state of the world. For I think Strabo's is the most ancient work, at least of any figure, we have of the kind, and it was not composed before the times of Tiberius. If Dionysius Periegetes lived about the same age, Pliny and Ptolemy were much later, and the Nubian geography is still more modern. And we may observe, that from whatever more ancient writers Strabo, or any who followed him, had to collect, even these had difficulties about the waters of Babylon. They had no clear accounts what were the original ancient rivers which might here concur; or what were the artificial lakes, streams, and canals, cut from and into the Euphrates, for the ornament or convenience of that superb, and, beyond comparison, great and populous city.⁷ In the confusion arising from hence, and in length of time growing inexplicable, we may reasonably allow that all knowledge of the true channels of these rivers, Pison and Gihon, has been lost; and we should greatly trifle were we now to pretend, through curiosity, to find them. The material point is, whether we have not enough left, indisputably certain, to convince us that Moses's description is not such a romance as our modern allegorists suppose.

The garden of Eden bordered upon a river made up of a confluence of four streams, one of which was the Euphrates, the other Hiddekel.⁸ The question is, Is there a place in the world where these two rivers and other streams join? I answer, there is; viz. at the south-east extent of the province of the now Irak Arabi of the Turkish empire, which was the ancient Chaldæa; at the place where the Turks now have a fortification, called Korna; at which place, the Hiddekel, or Tigris, and Euphrates, with some other lesser streams, fall in and make one river. Let us inquire farther, do these rivers, thus joined, continue to run in one stream, as Moses mentions that his river of Eden ran down from Eden to the garden of God? I answer, they run in one undivided channel down to Bassora; from whence they are parted, and run in streams, navigable even by large ships, in different channels into the Persian gulf. An inspection of the map, which I have here inserted, will exhibit what I offer in the clearest view.

Whether these rivers were so large in Moses's time as they are now, I do not pretend to say; though it is obvious, that ⁷ Qualis facies Euphratis fuerit, priusquam manu factis fossis et alveis distraheretur, difficile est delineare; nam et illæ fossæ antiquiores pleræque sunt, quam Græci, a quibus et naturæ rerum, aut ab hominibus gestarum memoriam habemus, ad scribendum et historias componendas, aut res naturæ tradendas se composuerunt. Cellarii Geogr. lib. iii, c. 16. Strabo makes many complaints of the incorrectness of the Greek geographers in many parts of his work.

⁸ Gen. ii, ubi sup.

Hiddekel was a great river in Daniel's days,⁹ and the Euphrates¹ was reputed eminently so in the times of Abraham. It was the taste in the days of Moses to think a ground well watered, which lay, as the land of Egypt did, upon the confines of some great and overflowing river; so that a man might water it with his foot,² might trace out furrows, or channels, which might be filled with the flow of it, and convey water to the plants wherever he might design lines for its conveyance. But, leaving the reader to consider and determine, as he thinks fit, whether, in the first world, there were any snows covering, in their season, the hills or mountains whence these rivers take their rise; and, if there were not, whether their flow might not be less, and their channels not so wide and deep in Adam's days, as they became afterwards, when greater currents made their way through them; I might remark, that this augmentation of their waters may, in the hand of Providence, have been one mean of keeping their channels open and known even until now, and likely to continue so to the end of the world.

The course of the Euphrates may be traced in all noted writers of geography; and is plainly to be seen, in all the tracts of country through which it passes, that in no point, but that one which I have mentioned, can it be found to form a confluence with other rivers, to make one stream, as Moses describes; and to part again, before it runs into the sea. And if, as I measure it, from Korna to Bassora be not above sixty miles, our inquiry after the earthly paradise is brought within a narrow compass; and however inconsiderately some may be disposed to ridicule the inquiry, we may reasonably conclude, that we cannot be far from the spot which was the garden of Eden, any where in the confines of the flow of this river, between Korna and Bassora.

⁹ Daniel, ubi sup.

¹ Genesis, ubi sup.

² Deut. xvi, 10. Thus Ezekiel hints, a vine so planted in a good soil by great waters, that it might be watered by the furrows of her plantation. Ezek. xvii, 7.

CHAPTER IX.

Concerning the Temptation of Eve by the Serpent; and her and Adam's eating of the forbidden Tree.

WE left Adam and Eve in the garden of Eden; the day after their creation was a Sabbath, to be employed in considering the bounty and goodness of their Creator; what expectations he had given them; what duties were enjoined them, and how they might perform them. Now when this day was over, and they began to employ themselves in what God had appointed them to do, namely, to dress the garden and to keep it: it is very natural to think that they went out to their work desirous to see and consider the creation of God, and fully purposing to revere and obey him, in every thing he had said, or should farther speak to them. Dr. Burnet supposes, that the temptation befel them instantly on the very day of their creation;¹ but it is observable, that, although the narration of Moses is very concise,

Semper ad eventum festinat——

Hon.

although he has related to us only a few events, upon which all the whole affairs of the first world turned; and relates them in their order as they were done, omitting all that was intermediate between the particulars recorded by him; yet the intervals of time between the facts recorded must have been filled up in a manner reasonably agreeing to the nature of the things related, and the character of the persons concerned in them.

¹ Istoc die creavit omnia pecora, omnes feras, et omnia reptilia—denique creavit Adamum,—finita hac opera fabri fecit feminam; eodem die conjugium ineunt mas et femina recens nati.—Eodem die nova nupta, nescio quo proposito, vagata inter arbores nemoris, incidit in serpentem: ille serpens colloquium instituit cum femina: argumenta jactant hac illuc de quadam arbore aut quodam fructu, edendo, vel non edendo: illa tandem rationibus aut lenociniis victa fructum comedit; neque id tantum, sed eundem deferret marito, qui pariter comedit. Archæol. p. 295.

Both a just writer, and a judicious reader,

Reddere personæ scit convenientia cuique, will know how to say, and, where it is not necessary to be expressed, how to think what is suitable to every character. But it is hard to think, that God should permit a temptation, of so great consequence, to break forth upon our first parents, before they had had time to form any sort of thoughts of things about them. And we give Adam and Eve no character at all, if we suppose, that, whilst the voice of God, strictly charging them not to eat of the tree, had scarce ceased speaking to them, they would eat, because they heard a serpent say they might safely do it. If Moses had expressly told us, that they thus instantly fell into the sin which caused their ruin, he had, I think, laid before us a great rock of offence against his narration. For to suppose, that as soon as God gave the prohibition, Adam and Eve would immediately transgress it, implies not only a total want of all consideration in our first parents, but something incredibly prone not to regard Him, who had showed himself to be the only proper person to be regarded. But Dr. Burnet takes up the sentiment only that he may tragically complain of Moses's narration:² had not this bias possessed him, he would have seen, that, notwithstanding any thing said by Moses, many days might intervene between Adam and Eve's creation, and their breaking the commandment of God.

HOR.

Our English poet took a view of the subject in a better temper and disposition; and accordingly, though what he supposes is a mere fiction of his own, not at all warranted by Moses, or suggested by an inspired writer, nor do I think it true in fact, yet I would observe, it seemed natural to suppose that the angel Gabriel had spent half a day with Adam and Eve, after the night in which he represents Eve as having had a troublesome dream,³ and that the temptation happened the day after the angel left them.⁴ He tells us, that on the day when the angel visited them, they had in the morning said

Their orisons each morning duly paid
In various style.—————

² Intra unius diei spatiolum hæc omnia confecta legimus: magna et multifaria negotia. Sed ardeo dolore, cum tantillo tempore omnia inversa et perturbata video, totamque rerum naturam vixdum compositam et adornatam ante primi solis occasum, ad interitum ruere et deformari. Mane diei Deus dixit, omnia esse bona: sub vespere omnia sunt execrabilia. Quam fluxa est rerum creaturarum gloria! Opus elaboratum per sex dies, idque omnipotenti manu, infamis bestia totidem horis perdidit. Archæol. p. 295.

³ See Milton's Paradise Lost, b. v, &c.

⁴ Ibid. b. ix.

⁵ Ibid. b. v, ver. 145.

Which implies, that he conceived they had had divers mornings, in which they had diversified their devotions. I cannot tell how any one, who will think reasonably upon the subject, can be satisfied with the shocking view of it which Dr. Burnet sets before us. But, as I before hinted, what misled him is obvious, namely, his disposition to represent Moses intimating, in his narration, that the works of God's infinite wisdom, displayed for six days together, by creating and forming a wonderful system in the fabric of a world, were all ruined and undone by a low reptile, a serpent, in as few hours.⁶ The reflection is so offensive, that if some strange perversion has not seized our hearts, we must hesitate and consider, whether what is thus said was indeed thus done: and hence we shall be easily led to remark, that the ruin which happened was not so absurdly precipitate as our author represents it.

Our first parents went out daily to take care of their garden, and made their observations of the things which occurred to them. They named the living creatures as they found opportunity to see and consider them. And upon the serpent's coming in their way, and being observed by them, he, in a human voice, spake unto Eve.⁷ They were not now such novices as not to have remarked, that no other creature could thus speak, which occasioned them to think, what is recorded, that *the serpent was more subtle than any beast of the field, which the Lord had made.*⁸ Had the serpent's speaking to them happened early in the beginning of their life, before they had made observations of the other creatures, they would have had no notion of the serpent's being herein superior to other animals; for they might have expected, that all other animals could speak to them in like manner. Therefore it may reasonably be inferred, that many days had passed between their creation and the serpent's thus speaking to them; as many, as we can judge, must have intervened, before they could know in general concerning the living creatures, that none of them, except the serpent, had any power to speak. But we ought to remark, that they were not yet masters of so much science as to know, that thus to speak could not be within the natural powers of a brute creature, for it gave them neither fear nor amazement. Had they apprehended, that the serpent's speaking had been an incident miraculous and unnatural, they would, as Moses did, when he saw the bush burning with fire, and not consumed,⁹ have turned aside to see this great sight; and would have been greatly confounded at what could be the meaning of so unnatural a prodigy. But, as Moses represents, they heard what was said to them as undisturbed and unmoved as they would have been by any other new but ordinary incident, which could have come under ⁶ Burnet, sup. citat.

⁸ Ibid.

⁷ Gen. iii, 1.
⁹ Exod. iii, 3.

their observation. Therefore, agreeably to this, we ought to fix the time of Eve's being tempted as not happening until she and Adam had observed in general concerning the animal creation, that none of them had the gift of speech; and they could not have observed this of the several species of creatures in the world in a very few days. It happened before they knew it to be a miraculous thing for an animal to speak, and therefore it unquestionably did happen early in their lives.¹

Moses calls the serpent wn (nachash);² it is the general word for a serpent used throughout the Old Testament, and was, perhaps, the original name, which Adam gave this animal, if we make allowance for some variation in pronouncing the word, after words became of more syllables than one.³ The word signifies an augur, diviner, or foreteller of things to come.⁴ It appears that Adam's manner, in naming things, was to consider some particular property in them, and from that to name them. Thus knowing that Eve had been made out of him, himself being aish,⁵ man, he called her aishah,⁶ which we render woman. And thus he afterwards gave her another name, and called her Chaiah, or Chevah, Eve; as soon as he was told she was to bear children, and be the mother of all (chai) living,⁷ of all their descendants, who were to derive life from them. So here, the serpent speaking, and foretelling, that they should have their eyes opened, and be as gods,⁸ Adam called him the diviner or foreteller of what was to come (nachash.) If this may be admitted, it will farther hint, that Adam had lived some time before the temptation; for in the first moments of life, before he had had any kind of practice both of eyes and understanding, to consider the difference between seeing and knowing imme-

¹ Syncellus cites some Minutes of the Book of Genesis, which supposes seven years to have passed before the transgression. The passage cited by Syncellus is in these words, under the title of Ἐκ τῶν ἀρχαίων Γενεσιῶν: Τὸ ἰδόμενόν ἐστι παρὰ [Ἀδάμ,] καὶ τὸ ὅσον ἐξήρτησαν τῆς παραδείσου, ὡς εἶπεν, μεταποσσεύοντα πάντα ἡμέρας τῆς παραδείσου, ἐν τῇ ἡμέτῃ τῶν Πλειάδων. Syncellus, p. 8.

8. What may be the authority of the antiquity of this fragment, or whether it was originally written in a language more ancient than its present Greek, I cannot say; but by its mentioning the Pleiades, I should think it is not, in any language, as old as the time of Moses. For however early asterisms, or a combined plurality of stars, were formed, as they certainly were very early, because such are mentioned in the Book of Job, yet as Moses hints nothing like them in his books, I think we must look for this astronomy in times later than his days. This citation then gives no authority to warrant our saying, that seven years passed before Adam's transgression; though, in the reason of things, we will allow, that a competent time must have passed, before our first parents could know enough to excite in their hearts even a conceit of desiring to be wise, or a notion of becoming so, without, or in opposition to, their Maker.

² wn. Gen. iii, 1.

³ See Connect. vol. i, book ii, p. 86.

⁴ The verb wn, from which the word denoting the serpent is derived, signifies, where it is used in the Old Testament, "Auguratus est, augurium fecit, divinavit, ominatus est: certas conjecturas habuit."

⁵ Gen. ii, 23; see Connect. vol. ii, book ix, p. 245.

⁶ Gen. ii, 23.

⁷ Chap. iii, 20.

⁸ Ver 5.

diate objects, and considering and pronouncing things, which should afterwards come to pass; he could not in anywise give the serpent a name, implying such a determinate sentiment concerning him.

Milton represents Eve as being alone, without Adam present, when the serpent spake to her; but we ought to observe, that Moses does not say this, nor is there any thing any where hinted by the sacred writers to induce us to admit it. Milton's design was to make

Ex noto fictum carmen.—⁹

Hon.

He took the fact, as Moses related it, for the ground of his poem; but ornamented it in his own way, by a variety of episodes, such as he thought might naturally coincide with what Moses had related, and thus both to edify and entertain his reader. And he has nowhere, in his performance, worked up a scene more natural, than by representing the vanity of Eve desiring to work apart by herself; the manner of the temptation, and success of it; her address to Adam after she had eaten the forbidden fruit; his foreseeing, better than she had done, the ruin into which she was fallen; the fond but rash resolution he took, rather to perish with her than live without her; the turbulent scenes of passion and disgust, of mutual accusation and resentment, which soon arose, when both were become guilty; elegantly expressing how certain it is, that the being partakers in sin will not satisfy but disturb the soul. But however elegantly Milton may have represented these things, if we truly judge of the subject, as Moses relates it, we must plainly perceive, that all this is Milton's imagination, and not the history of Moses. Moses does not hint, that Eve had to go any distance from the place where she had eaten, to carry the fruit of the tree to her husband; but *she took of the fruit of the tree, and did eat, and gave also unto her husband with her, and he did eat.*¹ The point here treated proceeds without any discontinuance: her husband was with her at the time; she ate, and reached to him; he partook of what she had taken,² and ate also. The serpent indeed spake only to Eve, and she only replied to him; she admitted his temptation, and added a sentiment of her own to strengthen it. The serpent told her she would become wise in eating; she had no fear of being overwise, though the danger threatened was, that she would thereby destroy herself. She perceived, that the tree was good for food, that it was pleasant to the eyes, and a tree to be desired to make one wise; but did not consider nor know, that there could be no wisdom, nor understanding, nor counsel against God: and Adam, we read, hearkened unto the voice of his wife.³ Thus far we may say, in the words of the apostle,⁴ Adam was not deceived; not meaning, as the poet intimates, that Adam had such superior sense and judgment beyond Eve, as absolutely to reject the temptation, if, after she had eaten and was thereby ruined, he had not rather chosen to die with than to live without her⁵ (for this is entirely Milton's fiction;) but the woman, being deceived, was in the transgression: the serpent through his subtilty deceived Eve.⁶ The words spoken by the serpent were all the subtilty they knew of him; these caught Eve's imagination first; Adam was first formed, then Eve; ⁷ but Adam was not deceived; the apostle means, Adam was not deceived first. Here Eve unhappily took the pre-eminence, and, by adding to what the serpent had said, led her husband also to be deceived. This I take to be the true meaning of what the Scriptures declare upon the subject. But it will be said, there are much greater points, than what I have mentioned, which ought here to be well explained: as,

⁹ Paradise Lost, b. ix.

¹ Gen. iii, 6.

² If she had carried fruit to her husband, he not being upon the spot, to eat at the same time with her, this would have required other words, than those used by Moses, to express it.

I. How is it possible, that a serpent should speak, as Moses supposed? I answer, we can form so clear a judgment of the natural capacity and ability of the brute creation, that I may be allowed to say, 1. That the serpent could not, of himself, speak the words, which, according to Moses, came from him. But, 2. The tongue of the serpent might be so vibrated, or moved, by some superior, invisible agent, as to utter the sounds, or words, which Moses tells us Eve heard. This, I think, must readily be allowed by any one, who considers how the tongue of Balaam's ass was moved, speaking in man's voice, to forbid the madness of that prophet.⁸ But, 3. I would add here what I have considered more at large upon that case,⁹ that we cannot reasonably suppose, that the serpent here speaking to Eve, any more than the ass there speaking to Balaam, understood the meaning of one word which it spoke. Both their tongues were moved otherwise than of themselves they would have moved them; they were so moved, that such sounds proceeded from them as were significant words to the person, who heard and understood such words when spoken. But these sounds conveyed no meaning to the serpent, or to the ass; both of whom, I apprehend, had spoken without any apprehension or intention of the sounds which came from them. In all this there was plainly a miracle; for, that the thing was impossible, cannot reasonably be asserted, unless we can assert, that the air could not be, by the power of any agent whatsoever, in using the ³ Gen. iii, 6—17.

⁴ 1 Tim. ii, 14.

⁵ Paradise Lost, book ix, ver. 896, &c.

⁶ 1 Tim. ii, 14; 2 Cor. xi, 3.

⁷ 1 Tim. ubi sup.

⁸ 2 Pet. ii, 16.

⁹ See Connect. vol. iii, book xii, p. 177.

tongue of a serpent, put into this or that motion, to cause what words such agent designed to be sounded by it. But, 4. Was it then God, who miraculously caused the tongue of the serpent to utter the words spoken? In the case of Balaam, the text tells us, that the LORD opened the mouth of the ass:¹ shall we here say, the LORD GOD opened the mouth of the serpent in like manner? I answer, No: the deceiving our first parents by a miracle cannot be deemed a work worthy of God; but seems much more suitable to him, whom our New Testament denominates, that old serpent, called the Devil and Satan, who deceiveth the whole world.² The falsehood, spoken by the serpent to Eve, seems to come naturally enough from him, who, when he speaketh a lie, speaketh of his own; he being the original author of falsehood; for he is a liar, and the father of it;³ and our blessed Saviour hints, that he was the real person who deceived Eve, for he was a murderer from the beginning;⁴ and it was by him that death came into the world.⁵ Therefore, we have such intimations, that it was not God, but Satan, who spake to our first parents by the serpent. But the question, which will here occur, is, 5. Can we then say, that there is any power in the universe, except the power of Him, who is God over all, blessed for ever, that can make alteration in the natural faculties of any creature, or cause a mere serpent to be heard speaking in man's voice, whatever he may purpose to have spoken? If we say there may be any such power, it will be queried, whether, in supposing it, we do not set up two opposite and contending powers, each able, beyond our capability to distinguish their limitation, to create or give things a new nature contrary to their true one? And do we not hereby lay a foundation for great confusion of sentiment concerning God, and his power over the world?

I answer, 1. I apprehend there was no change made in the nature of the serpent, by his speaking to Eve, from what, in every respect, he was before. He was the same reptile; went upon his belly, even then, as a serpent now does;⁶ had the same mouth, and tongue, the instrument of speech, which a serpent still hath. His tongue was, indeed, moved in a way which he had not been accustomed to move it, and made such sounds as he never made before nor since. Adam and Eve, who heard him thus speak, and understood what he spake, but did not yet know that it was not natural for a serpent to have this faculty, readily apprehended, as indeed they well might, not knowing by what power he spake to them, that he was a creature of greater sagacity, than all other creatures of the animal world; all the rest appearing to them to be dumb, and not capable of such conversation. Yet all this while, I cannot conceive, that the serpent was at all wiser when he was speaking, than whilst he was dumb. • For, as the vibrations of tongue, which gave the sounds he uttered, were just as involuntary and unconceived by him, as any mechanical or convulsive motions can be; the serpent knew no more what his tongue had uttered, than if the words spoken had been blown across by a wind, which had no connection with him.

¹ Numb. xxii, 28.² Rev. xii. 9.³ John viii, 44.⁴ Ibid.⁵ Wisdom ii, 24.⁶ Vide quæ postea.

2. That Satan, that spiritual being, who, in the New Testament, is styled the Prince of the air, may have a power to make in the air, by the tongue of any bird, beast, or animal, sounds of significant words, if God shall permit, does not, as far as I conceive, contradict any principle of true philosophy; any more, than that he might inflict⁷ on Job, or may inflict on any of us, boils, sickness, or many other evils, if permission be given him. But herein the dependance of all powers upon God is preserved and acknowledged; herein we guard against all notions of two independent principles, the one good, and the other evil: by showing, in all that has been done by the great agent of evil, that no one thing was ever done by him, but just so far as God permitted him to go, and no farther. Of the great adversary, who seduced our first parents, let us consider all that was done by him: Did he speak to them from Heaven, in a voice, as God spake to them? No. Why did he not? He was not permitted to speak in this manner. Did he appear to them in person; in a similitude that might carry dignity, and create himself respect? No; any thing of this sort was not allowed him. Did he cause some noble and respectable creature of the world to propose his insinuation? This he was not suffered to do. Did he create even a serpent suitable to the intention he designed to serve by it? This can in nowise be pretended. He was allowed, indeed, to use a creature of this very low species, but to use it only at a time, when the persons tempted had not such knowledge of the nature of a serpent, as to think it at all miraculous to hear one speaking. And when he had liberty to use this animal, was he able to make it speak elegantly, what great parts and capacity would have invented upon the subject? Not at all. What Milton has intimated, may abundantly show a field to expatiate in,⁸ if the tempter

⁷ The author of the Book of Samuel had this notion of the agency of the wicked one, that he could do nothing, but under the permission and control of God; and, accordingly, says of David's numbering the people, that God moved him to do it, 2 Sam. xxiv, 1; when, in fact, the instigation came immediately, not from God, but from Satan. See 1 Chron. xxi, 1. But the author of the Book of Samuel intended to establish it as an universal truth, that God was supreme, and nothing could be done without him. Had not God permitted, Satan herein could have done nothing; and this, and nothing but this, was intended in saying, that he, the Lord, moved David to number the people.

⁸ Milton carries on the temptation in a fine process of reasoning, supposed by him to have been artfully used by the serpent; any part of which must have been infallibly too much for our first parents, in the state of their knowledge had been suffered to argue copiously upon the point proposed. But, in fact, the tempter was only permitted to bring, from the mouth of his agent, little more than a bare negation of what had been affirmed by the voice of God. In the event, indeed, little as he said, he said enough; for he succeeded. But all this while, an impartial examiner must allow, that no temptation was suffered to befall our first parents, which could have had weight with them, unless they gave up the great principle, without which nothing could be wise or strong in them; namely, that they were to obey God. They had heard Him; who made them, say they should not eat: they heard a serpent, a low and creeping creature, vastly beneath themselves, say they might eat. They apprehended nothing wonderful in this animal's speaking, so that no thought of a miracle had any weight with them. What then determined them? We are told, Adam hearkened to the voice of his wife;⁹ and it is plain, that though the serpent was the occasion of Eve's falling, yet judging for herself, contrary to the direction of God, that as the tree was pleasant to the sight, and good for food, so it was to be desired to make one wise, was what made the temptation too hard for her. But when the apostle tells us, the serpent beguiled Eve by his subtlety,¹ does the expression, here used by him, absolutely coincide with what I have been now saying? I answer, perfectly so: the apostle only represented a plain and real fact, as it was most evidently done; and it is a very proper way, thus to speak of things being done as they are evidently seen to be, without always diving to the bottom, or true springs and causes of them. Moses relates, that the serpent was subtle, and said—; his speaking was the subtlety remarked of him; from his speaking to her, Eve received sentiments by which she was deceived. What now could be said with more propriety of diction, than that the serpent, who really and truly spake to her, beguiled her? The apostle was no more obliged to discuss here, whether the serpent spake sua, or, nicely distinguishing, non sua verba; whether subtlety used by him was of his own natural sagacity, or of another's suggestion; or, whether the persons beguiled by him, did not add sentiments of their own to his intimation, than if his converts had suffered what he was afraid of, namely, their being corrupted from the simplicity of the gospel by any one speaking to them things contrary thereto; he must, if he had charged the person so speaking with having corrupted them, have strictly determined, whether what such person said to them was his own contrivance, or only words of the reason of things, to be able to gainsay or contradict. But all this is Milton's fancy; for Moses in nowise represents them as having been thus tempted above what they were able. See Milton, book ix, ver. 532—722.

⁹ Gen. iii, 17.

¹ 2 Cor. xi, 3.

dictated to him by some other; and whether no improvement of what he said came into the minds of those who were seduced by him. This might be a matter proper to be considered, if the nature of the guilt of him, who had deceived them, was the subject inquired into; but was in nowise necessary, if the fact only was to be related, viz. by whom they had been deceived. *The serpent beguiled Eve through his subtlety.*² The apostle barely recognizes a fact, really done, as Moses had recorded it; the words, which Eve had heard from the serpent, were all she knew of the serpent's subtlety. Therefore we carry the apostle's words to a view farther than he designed, if we suppose him deciding from whom originally, and by what manner of reasoning, the temptation offered to Eve proceeded; for he only reminds us, from whose mouth the words actually came, which ministered the temptation which proved her ruin. But the next point may have greater difficulties: for let us consider,

II. Whether it can be conceived, that the infinitely good God, the God, not only of all power, but of all truth, and all rectitude, should admit, as it were, the throne of iniquity to have fellowship with him, to frame mischief by a law? Can we think, that God would make a law intrinsically of no importance, and then suffer a throne of wickedness, a power or principality of darkness, the Devil or any of his angels, to frame mischief from it; to contrive to have it broken, only to bring thereby labour and sorrow, sin, misery, and death, upon men? Can we think that God, having made a rank of creatures of a lower degree of light and understanding, but such, that, if not tempted by some other, they would have persevered in their obedience to him, and been happy, would permit a wicked spirit, of higher abilities than they, to attack these creatures in a way, wherein, without his permission, he could not have had access to them, and thereby beguile and ensnare them into ruin? Should we not rather think it more reasonable, that, if God gave our first parents such a law as has been mentioned, and if, being left to themselves, they would not have swerved from it, he should not have permitted any agent to have herein perverted them? The objection has in it a variety, that ought to be considered in several parts, if we would fully and truly answer it.

² 2 Cor. xi, 3.

³ Psal. xciv, 20. There are passages in the Book of Psalms, which, though we may inattentively overlook them, hint at and refute ancient abstruse notions, which obtained amongst the then sages of the world, who were not possessed of the true religion. One of these sentiments, recorded by Theopompus, as being a tenet of the ancient magi, that ἀνακτισσόμεθα τὴν ἀδύναμιν, καὶ ἰσχυροὺς ἀδυνατούμεν, καὶ τὰ ὄντα τὰς αἰσῶν ἐκκληνοῦσι δαίμονας (see Diogen. Laert. &c. in Præm. p. 7.) seems to be considered and refuted in Psal. xlix, in what the Psalmist offers, for due observation, how wise men die, likewise the fool, and the brutish person, perish, and leave their wealth to others; contrary to what he intimates as the inward thought of some, who seemed to suppose, that their houses should continue for ever, and their dwelling-places to all generations, and they call their lands after their own names—&c. In like manner; as the power of God and of Satan in the affairs of the world appears to have been a subject not unthought of, in, and before, David's times (see Job i and ii; 2 Sam. xxiv, compared with 1 Chron. xxi, above cited;) I cannot determine, whether the throne of iniquity, mentioned by the Psalmist, and what is said of it, had a view only to wicked earthly rulers, as the commentators seem to take it, or might be designed to explode false doctrines of a higher nature, concerning the two principles, which some very early sages supposed to have each its share of power over the world: Προεβύτην εἶναι τὴν Ἀγγέλων, καὶ δευτέρην αἰὶν εἶναι Ἀρχάς, ἀγαθὴν δαίμονα καὶ κακὴν δαίμονα. Laert. ubi sup.

CHAPTER X.

The Objection last stated considered and refuted.

The objection above stated will, I think, require us to consider,

I. Whether it can be reasonable, that our first parents should be permitted to be tempted, by any being of a superior intelligence above themselves, in any manner whatsoever: but, if we determine this in the negative, how greatly may we err, not seeing sufficiently into the creation of God.

He, who through vast immensity can pierce,
See worlds on worlds compose one universe ;
Observe how system into system runs,
What other planets, and what other suns,
What varied being peoples ev'ry star,
May tell why Heav'n made all things as they are.
But of this frame, the bearings and the ties,
The strong connections, nice dependencies ;

POPE.

the knowledge of them may not lie within our reach; and we may therefore determine very wrong concerning much of what we can only partially consider in forming our judgment.

Respecting man, whatever wrong we call,
May, must be right, as relative to all.

POPE.

The circle of our own agency wonderfully operating over and by the powers of the creatures beneath us, though, in all they do, they have an intention of their own, distinct from us, may reasonably argue to us, that,

When the proud steed shall know why man restrains
His fiery courser, or drives him o'er the plains ;
Then shall man's pride and dulness comprehend
His action's, passion's, being's, use, and end :
Why doing, suff'ring, check'd, impell'd—

POPE.

An analogy to one another runs through the powers of all intelligences in creation. The universe is but one whole in the hand of God; we are not independent principals, unconnected with others. Rather, the various spheres of action of all the innumerable orders of intelligent spirits, that exist among the works of the supreme God, are to have, under his direction and control, their line, their weight and measure, to affect and be affected by one another. And the event, resulting from all, is to afford a true judgment of all; when all the evil, which may hence have come in, shall have had its course, and be cast out; and the sum of all be found the greatest possible good, upon the whole, to the Creator's glory.

In human works, tho' labour'd on with pain,
A thousand movements scarce one purpose gain;
In God's, one single can its end produce,
Yet serves to second too some other use:
So man, who here seems principal alone,
Perhaps, acts second to some sphere unknown;
Touches some wheel, or verges to some goal;
'Tis but a part we see, and not a whole.

POPE.

We in nowise see the scene of the demerit of apostate spirits; nor how far it may be requisite they should be permitted to fill up their own measure, within just and wise limitations (and in such we find the tempter of Eve greatly restrained,) to answer the great ends of the infinite and eternal Providence. Sin, indeed, and death, have thereby come into our present state; and death must reign upon all, until the state we are in be accomplished; but let us

Wait the great teacher, Death,
POPE.

and we shall, in time, be able

To look through nature up to nature's God;
Pursue the chain, which links th' immense design,
Joins Heav'n and Earth, and Mortal and Divine.

POPE.

We shall then see, beyond what we are now able to conceive, that, whatever hath befallen us, all will display a most amazing height, and depth, and length, and breadth of the wisdom, and power, and goodness, and glory of Him, who will hence bring those, who shall be meet to be partakers of it,¹ through the *one man, whom he hath ordained, Jesus Christ, to the kingdom prepared for man from the foundation of the world;*² and the wicked, whether they have been men or angels, shall go to their own place.

II. But it may be said, "What, if it were fit, and might answer a great end, that an intelligent evil spirit, higher than they, should be permitted to tempt our first parents: is there not a natural impropriety in supposing, that the particular access of such a spirit to them hath been as Moses describes, and that the temptation hath been of that sort which he records? To suppose that an intellectual spirit, not visible to our first parents, should speak to them, not in a voice that might have been thought his own, but by the tongue of a serpent seen by them; and this to persuade them to do a thing in itself neither good nor evil, to eat of the fruit of a tree, only because God had forbidden them to eat of it; is there any thing, that appears natural in this procedure? Has it the colour of a rational endeavour to bring moral evil into the world? If our adversary, the Devil, had been permitted, as he is a spirit, to have had a spiritual access to the minds of our first parents, to suggest to them evil thoughts and evil desires, to fill them by degrees with all uncleanness, to bring them to destruction, both of body and soul; this would have seemed a reasonable procedure for such a spirit of darkness: he has for ages thus worked, and even still worketh thus, in the children of disobedience.³ But, to suppose that the Almighty had set, as it were, a spell over our first parents, to require them not to eat of a particular tree; had determined, that, whilst they kept within this injunction, no evil spirit should get within them to hurt them; but, if they would be seduced to break through it, that neither they nor their posterity should ever after be able to be proof against the evil one; does this look like the way of supreme understanding, according to the reason and nature of things, and therefore to be the way of God with man?" I have, I think, given this objection all the strength of which it is capable; at least I am sure, that I have endeavoured so to do. If I could find words, which would express it more advantageously, I would use them; for I take this, in reality, to be the whole hinge upon which all that is to be said against the religion of the Bible can turn. Let us now attentively consider how far we can answer it.

¹ Col. i, 12.

² Acts xvii, 31; Matt. xxv, 34.

Here the material point to be considered is, whether the particular manner of the temptation objected to was not, in reality, exactly suited to the economy, or manner and measure in which the Creator had made man? God, the divine workmaster, must have so ordered his dispensations, as to be suitable to the measure and nature of his works, for which they were designed. Such as he made man, to such he dispensed, that he might have the progress and procedure of his being exactly suited to what were his original native powers and endowments. Had God made man such a being, that a true and ³ Eph. ii, 2.

Qualis ab incepto procederet, Hoc.

right intelligence of the nature of things would, at all times, instantly have occurred to his mind to give him a right judgment concerning them,⁴ the natural way of temptation, to such a being, might have been to admit a perverted spirit to try his better judgment, to draw him, if he could, from his own right sentiments into evil. But, if God at first made man with lesser powers, such a permission would have subjected him to an unequal conflict indeed; for, however reasonable it may appear, that the wicked one should be permitted to attempt to catch away that which is sown in our hearts;⁵ when we need not lose that which is sown, if we be willing to preserve it; it cannot follow, that it could be fit, that he should be admitted, before any thing was sown in the heart of man, so to possess the heart, as to make it naturally impossible, that any good thing should find a place in it. Had God made man, at first, such as our rationalists assert, left absolutely to the guidance of natural light, to discover thereby the duties of his life; expecting no service from him, but what his own reason would suggest; it would seem unnatural, I might say, a contradiction, to assert, that, before man had done, or even thought good or evil, God should interpose, by giving him a law, which no reason of his own could, without God's interposing, have laid before him; and, permitting him to be tempted by the voice of a serpent to break this law, absolutely to defeat all he might otherwise have done, in pursuing what his natural powers would have led him to see to be the reason, and reasonable conduct of his life. But if, on the contrary, we may affirm, from what is written by Moses, that God did not create man with this beam of actual understanding, but gave him only the information of his senses, and a capacity of mind, free, as not being under an over-ruling instinct, and yet not having power to be so perfect, as to want no external information; and that God designed, wherever man should want it, to give him this information, by causing him to hear his voice from Heaven; requiring him to have faith in him; to believe and obey whatever he should thus hear from his Maker; it is absolutely consistent with this economy, that he might give man, thus far, but no farther, endowed, such a command as Moses mentions, to be to him both a sign of what he was to expect from God, for the direction of his life, and an inviolate standard and remembrancer, to pay unto God, in every thing he should command, the obedience of faith. The faith of man in believing God, being thus derived from hearing,⁶ it could not be meet, that the temptation to disobey should come to him otherwise than by hearing; that, unless he would choose to pervert himself, no other should have a more intimate admittance to corrupt him. Now, if the temptation was thus to come to him only by hearing, surely we must allow, that what he heard from God, and all that he heard to tempt him to disobey God, must appear, in all the circumstances of both, to be very sufficiently distinguished, so as to leave our first parents without excuse, for not strictly adhering to obey the one and reject the other. Thus the whole apparent reasonableness, or seeming contrariety to the reason of things, in what Moses relates, taken to be historically true, depends upon whether it be fact, that God did at first create man to guide his own life, as himself should devise, left absolutely to himself to find out the reason of those duties, which he should investigate and practise; or, whether God made man to hear his voice, in order to be directed by it; to receive whatever God should, by external revelation, make known to him; to make this the rule and guide of his actions. This, therefore, is a point so material, and so really the whole of man, that I hope I do not digress from the intention of my undertaking, if I now and then repeatedly endeavour to prove, that this ought to have been the ruling principle of our first parents in their lives.

⁴ Si tales nos natura genuisset, ut eam ipsam intueri et perspicere, eademque optima duce cursum vitæ conficere possemus. Cic. Tusc. Quæst. lib. iii.

⁵ Matt. xiii, 19.

⁶ Rom. x, 17.

But, it is asked, "Was the prohibition a sort of spell, that, whilst our first parents observed it, so preserved them, that the evil one, although he was a spirit, could not approach to hurt them, nor they fall into evil, to their undoing; but that, as soon as they had broken through this charm, they became so liable to all evil, both from without and within, that henceforth all men would inevitably sin, and freedom from guilt would be now no more?" I answer, the dressing up a proposition in terms of ridicule is not a just and reasonable way to discover what is true, or detect what is false.⁷ It is raising an inconsiderate contempt of what ought to be brought to the bar of more deliberate examination to be there approved or rejected, as a right and well weighed judgment of things may appear for or against it. Now, if instead of using frivolous words upon the occasion, which prove nothing, we take the point here to be considered under due inquiry, we shall see, that the prohibition given to our first parents, as Moses relates it, was no spell or charm, but what was naturally both necessary and sufficient for them. Our first parents were made living souls; they had outward perception and inward understanding, but both only in such a degree, that if, in using them, they would admit the voice of God to direct them, wherever he should see they wanted direction; hereby they would be kept in the hand of God's counsel, so as not to fall into any error to their undoing. Their knowledge of life, and experience of their being, could not yet show them their moral situation: how suitable then was it to have some one plain inhibition to teach them that they were not to do any thing, whatever, which God should think fit, by his express voice, to prohibit? And as God was pleased to add hereto his express command, enjoining them the duties of their lives;⁸ what could they have wanted now, if they would truly have⁹ made this their wisdom, this their understanding, to keep and observe all that the LORD their God should declare? The natural event of their herein preserving themselves could be no other, than that using all the powers of their own minds, whereinsoever God did not think fit specially to interpose, but strictly conforming to whatever he directed; man, though made with lower powers of reason than angels, being guided by his Creator, and ripening himself, might have gradually advanced unto all truth. But when, instead of thus proceeding, our first parents deviated from obeying the voice of God, to hearken to the words of a lower speaker, and to break the commandment of Him, who made them, because it seemed to be pleasant to their eyes so to do, and a thing to be desired to make them wise; what else did they herein, but take themselves out of the hand of God's counsel, into the hands of their own? And what could this possibly lead to, unless they had been created with greater actual knowledge, or with the powers of a more unerring understanding, but to all mistake, and by degrees, unto every evil work.

⁷ See Mr. Brown's very excellent Essay on Ridicule.

Another part of the objection is, "that, if our first parents had not been tempted from without by a deceiver, they would not have broken the commandment of their God." But we see things very superficially indeed, if we do not perceive enough to apprise us, that if we say this in our heart, we certainly do not inquire wisely into this matter. That, in fact, a serpent speaking in man's voice, occasioned in our first parents (whilst they two were all of mankind as yet in the world) a sentiment, that what God had prohibited was both pleasant and desirable, in the reason of the thing, to be done, to make them wise, is indeed true; and that this sentiment was too hard for them; but it can in nowise follow, that, had it not been thus incidentally occasioned, earlier, perhaps, than otherwise they might have thought of it, it would never have had rise in the heart of man. If we consider its nature, no thought here took hold of them, but what is common to man;¹ for it has in all ages been a captivating point in human theory, that what seems to us contrary to what we account wisdom, may not be a real revelation from God. And, if the breaking of the commandment concerning the forbidden tree had not happened until our first parents had gradually formed their hearts more deliberately to reject it, how do we know but a thought might have been raised in them, which could never be changed,³ in the way and manner in which it must be ever fit, that God should govern, but not absolutely force the moral world. Or, had it not taken effect until the sons of men were many, until mankind were multiplied upon the Earth, can we say, whether the fall of mankind would, in the measure and manner of it, have been so suited to the great and deep purpose in the hidden counsel of God, to bring man out of all his evil to salvation at last?³ The nature of virtue or vice in moral agents must require, that it be really in our own choice, to do the one or the other; but the times and seasons, when the incidents shall happen, that may give us an opportunity of standing or falling by our own choice, are best left unto God, to have them ministered to us as he sees to be most proper. The Jews were permitted to complete our Saviour's death, whilst yet they protested, that, if he would have come down from the cross, they would have believed in him.⁴ Whether they really would or not, we cannot say; but, if God knew they would not, it was a mercy to them, that he let their transgression be finished, whilst yet it might be prayed for.⁵ That mankind would not so govern that spark of reason, wherewith God had endowed them, as not through it to break away from that dependance, which they ought to have on him, was undoubtedly foreseen by God before the worlds were; which, duly considered, will suggest a thought to us, that, if we could be admitted to see the whole counsel of God, we might find, that in permitting sin and death to come by one man into the world, as related by Mosès, he best knew how to link and connect his design of bringing mankind unto salvation by the obedience of one.

⁸ God's adding to the prohibition of not eating of the tree, his command for the relative duty of man and wife, Gen. ii, 24, shows in what manner he would have been pleased to inform them, as time and the incidents of their lives should require, in their other moral duties.

⁹ Deut. iv, 6.

¹ See Connect. vol. iii, b. xi, p. 99.

But there remains one suggestion more, which I think a few observations may very clearly refute. It will be said, "What if our first parents did break this positive command, concerning the tree, of which no reason could tell them it was intrinsically good or evil; will it follow, that they therefore would have disobeyed God in any one moral law, which he would have been pleased to make known to them?" Although Adam and Eve did not keep inviolate the observance, not to eat of the tree; we do not see that they proceeded, or had any desire to think of breaking the law concerning man and wife, which God declared to them;⁶ might they not have been as punctual in observing every moral law for the duties of life, whenever such law should have been made known to them? I answer, we may judge very rashly in this great matter; and, in all we thus say of it, only darken the coun- *sels of the Most High, by words without knowledge.*⁷ The Israelites, I question not, believed, that both they and their posterity would keep their solemn resolution⁸ to serve their own God, and not be corrupted to go after the idols of Canaan; although they did not so strictly expel the Canaanites out of their land, as God had commanded them;⁹ but the event soon showed, that their imagination was only vain. God, who sees into us, and sees through us, knows best what observances, may be necessary to exercise us to our duties; and could best judge, whether, whenever our first parents would go beyond the restraint he had prescribed them, they would not therein cherish a thought which would naturally fill apace every measure of error, and heap it up, to run over into their bosom. The principle intended to be established by the command concerning the tree, was, as I have said, that our first parents, having no actual science of life, should proceed in the hand, under the direction of God's counsel, to make it their wisdom and understanding, strictly to practise whatsoever God should enjoin them. And the consequence of rejecting, to be under this direction, to follow, instead thereof, what seemed agreeable in their own eyes, and desirable in their own judgment; might naturally plant in them the root, from whence all these shoots have sprung, which have been the great perversion of human life. This being duly considered, must lead us, not to think of the positive command given our first parents as a thing indifferent, or of no real moment; rather, to use the words of St. Paul, as equally applicable to this the beginning of revealed religion, as to the end and completion of it. God, in giving our first parents the law of the prohibited tree, abounded towards them in all wisdom and prudence,¹ to give them, such creatures as he had made them, a law, which, observed as it ought, would, in its natural event, have been their life and salvation.

³ Wisdom xii, 10.⁴ Matt. xxvii, 42.⁵ See Eph. i, 4—12; iii, 11: Rom. v, 12—19.⁶ Luke xxiii, 34.⁷ Gen. ii, 24, ut sup.

We may speculate at random as we please upon the subject; but, if fact is at all to guide us, we must observe, this beginning of error being once admitted, notwithstanding God's immediately proceeding to denounce and ascertain the terrible punishment he had declared should be the wages of it; yet the error itself did not cease, although it could not be again committed in the same fact, which was Adam's transgression; but rather grew luxuriant, and abounded in the world. We read of one person in the first world, who most eminently walked with God,² in the obedience of faith; Enoch herein so pleased God, as to be translated.³ There were others, who were found faithful in their generations, in what had been revealed to them;⁴ but, in general, the principle of doing

⁷ Job xxxviii, 2.

⁸ See Judges i; Numb. xxxiii, 52, 55.

⁹ Gen. v, 22.

⁴ Gen. v; Eccles. xlv; Heb. xi.

⁸ Joshua xxiv, 21—25.

¹ Eph. i, 8.

³ Heb. xi, 5.

what seemed right in their own eyes, appears to have so greatly prevailed, that Lamech, a descendant from Cain, some centuries before Adam died,⁵ thought so differently from what God had most expressly commanded, concerning man and wife,⁶ that he introduced polygamy.⁷ And the world in general, in little more than the then age, and half an age of man, was become so corrupt, in man's departing from God and his laws,⁸ to follow the imaginations of their own hearts,⁹ that, to preserve right and truth from perishing from off the face of the Earth, it became the wisdom of God, eight persons only excepted, to destroy the world.

⁵ Lamech was grandson of Cain : perhaps not born later than Enos, the son of Seth : and, if so early, was born almost seven hundred years before Adam died. See the tables of the lives of the antediluvian fathers, Connect. vol. i, book i, p. 57, 58.

⁶ Gen. ii, 24.

⁷ Chap. iv, 19.

⁸ The life of man, at this time, was about nine hundred years. See Gen. v.

⁹ Gen. v, 5 ; Job. xxii, 17.

CHAPTER XI.

The immediate Consequences of our first Parent's eating of the forbidden Tree: and the Sentence which GOD passed upon the Serpent, on account of their Transgression.

NO sooner had our first parents eaten of the tree forbidden them, but we are told their eyes were opened, and they knew they were naked.¹ We must here ask, what sentiments could our first parents receive from what they had done, to affect them in this manner? And it is amazing how many writers have most absurdly trifled upon this topic.²

If we would know truly what Moses here intended, we must carefully attend to what he himself has expressed. And here let us observe, that Moses does not say, that what the serpent had promised our first parents was fulfilled to them; they understood the serpent as telling them that some great advantage of sight would be given them;³ but the event certainly did not answer their expectations. The serpent had said unto them, your eyes shall be opened: Moses observes, that their eyes were opened; so indeed they were, according to a true meaning of Moses's expression, though not at all according to what they hoped for. A fact, related by a heathen historian, may show us the manner of speaking here made use of by Moses, in the case of our first parents.

When the Lacedæmonians consulted the oracle at Delphos, whether they should make war upon the Arcadians; Herodotus tells us, that the oracle answered them,

¹ Gen. iii, 7.

² Videtur ingenerasse, nescio quo succo, vel qua alia virtute, novos sensus pudoris et modestiæ, vel nuditatis ut dicitur; quasi nullum pudorem habuissent in rebus venereis ante lapsum, hodie tamen in rebus istiusmodi innocuos maxime comitatur pudor. Burnet. Archæol. p. 292.

³ Vide quæ sup.

Δῶσα τοι Τεγεην σποσιπρότον ὀρχησάσθαι,
Καὶ παλὸν πειδίων σχοινφ διαμητρησάσθαι.

That he would give them to march over the country of the Tegeans, and to measure its fair plains with a line.⁴ The Lacedæmonians expected that they should over-run and absolutely conquer Tegea, and divide and set out their lots in that country as they pleased. But the event was, that the Lacedæmonians were beaten and taken prisoners by the Tegeans; and were employed by them as their slaves, to measure their lands, and to labour in them; and, says the historian, measured with a line the Tegean plains; a remark severe, but true in fact, though not in the manner it had been expected. And this was Moses's observation upon our first parents; their eyes were indeed opened, in a true sense of Moses's expression; but in a manner very different from what they had conceived, would have befallen them.

What Moses here intended to say was the real event, which happened to our first parents, must be gathered from the use he makes elsewhere of the expression, eyes being opened. We find it remarkably used in the case of Hagar, in the wilderness of Beersheba;⁵ who had wandered there with her son Ishmael.⁶ The water she had brought with her in a bottle was all spent, and both she and her child, with her, were in danger of perishing for want of a supply. But Moses tells us, the Lord opened her eyes, and she saw a well.⁷ We are not to suppose a miracle here done; the well is not said to have been created at this time; for, undoubtedly, it was in the same place before she saw it, as it was afterwards; and her eyes might be, in reality, as open, before she saw the well, as when she espied it. But she now turned her eyes to the place where the well was, and saw what before she had not observed; and this, in Moses's expression, was having her eyes opened. In this sense, likewise, Moses writes it of our first parents; after eating of the tree, their eyes were opened; they saw a circumstance of their condition, which, before, they had not remarked, and which led them to a thought, as new to them, they knew that they were naked.⁸

The question now is, in what sense did they know themselves to be naked? And here, both later commentators, and many ancient and grave writers, have, as I above hinted, immodestly trifled. It is generally thought, that nakedness now first became a shame; but Moses in nowise gives any such intimation: he tells us of a very different passion here raised by it; it gave them fear. Adam was not ashamed, but afraid,⁹ because he was naked, and therefore hid himself; and it is obvious to see the just reason he had for this sense of his con-

⁴ Herodot. lib. i, c. 66.

⁷ Ver. 19.

⁵ Gen. xxi.

⁸ Chap. iii, 7.

⁶ Ver. 14.

⁹ Ver. 10.

dition. The word, which we render naked, has, indeed, in general, this, its most obvious signification; but it is used in other senses, by a sort of metaphor, in many places of Scripture; and, in the place before us particularly, we ought to take it as it is used in the Book of Job. Hell, says that writer, is (narom) naked before him, and destruction has no covering:¹ i. e. Hell and destruction lie open, not concealed from the eye, nor in any way covered from the vengeance of God. This sense of the place is just and elegant, free from the shameful fooleries, which writers, not carefully considering, have ingrafted upon it. Adam and Eve had taken upon them, not to rest satisfied in what God had commanded; but to begin to think for themselves, contrary to what He had said to them. And their thoughts taking this turn, one sentiment brought on another; they were now to be wise for themselves, without, nay against, their Maker. Now, how natural was it for them, going in the paths of this theory, to be reminded, and consider how to guard against Him, who had severely threatened what they had committed? Alas! their eyes now told them they had no covering; neither could they think how to find a shelter, which might protect them. However, they attempted to do the best they could; they sewed fig leaves together, and made themselves aprons.²

They made themselves aprons. Here again Moses is supposed to say, what no one would have thought of, unless he imagined that our parents had reasons of shame to cover some particular parts of their bodies. But Moses hints nothing like it: his words are, vagithperu naleh teenah, vejanashu lehem chaggoroth.³ We may observe, that the word, which we render leaves, is, in the text, not plural, but singular; and, I apprehend, that both here, and in some other places of Scripture, it should be rendered, not leaves, but a foliature, or intertwining of leaves, and that the whole paragraph should be thus translated: they wreathed together a foliature of the fig tree, and made themselves enwrapments; i. e. they wrapped themselves up in them. What they wanted was to hide themselves from God. An apron, or a cincture about their waists, would in nowise answer this purpose; therefore they could have no thought of so partial a covering; but the casing themselves up within boughs full of leaves, to look like trees, and thereby to escape his observation,—this might be a

¹ Job xxvi, 6.² Gen. iii, 7.³ חֲתָוּ
Vestimenta circumligataוַיַּחֲתֹוּ עֲלֶה הָאֵנָה וַיַּעֲשֶׂוּ לָהֶם sibi et fecerunt ficus foliaturam insuerunt
i. e. intexerunt.

As the text may be thus construed, Dr. Burnet's low ridicule of the beginning of the art of a seamstress, of their having neither thread nor needle, is without foundation. "En!" says he, "primordia artis sutoris: sed unde illis acus, unde filum?" Archæol. p. 293. There was no want of any instruments to try to entwine tender boughs into one another, and it must seem a very natural thought for them to attempt a work of this nature.

sentiment not too weak for a first thought of persons, who, when they found their investments inconvenient or insufficient, were still so ignorant and foolish before God, as to conceive, that they might possibly be hidden from Him behind the trees of the garden.

What Moses therefore relates, thus explained, is highly natural; they had broken the commandment of the Lord their God; and now it came into their mind, how shall we escape his observation? Will he not soon see us? and when he sees us, will he not punish? Every thought about themselves now was a new terror; their eyes were opened, and they saw they had no covering; their hearts were alarmed, they considered they had nothing wherewith they might protect themselves against him; whither now could they fly from his presence? or what should they do to ward off his displeasure? Had they now known the world, and the hiding places which are therein, they would have gone into the dens and rocks of the mountains, and said to the mountains and rocks, fall on us, and hide us from the face of Him, and from his wrath to come.⁴ But they had, as yet, been little farther than the compass of their garden, and knew of no thicker cover than the leaves and shelter of their trees; with some of these, therefore, they tried to wrap up and disguise themselves, as well as they could; and herein they seemed to amuse themselves, until towards the evening of the day: they then heard the voice of God moving from one part of the garden to the other;⁵ which struck them with fresh confusion. Their fears came now upon them like an armed man; they were not able to abide in the way of the voice of God, but gat themselves into the closest thicket of trees they could find, and here they hoped to lie hid. But the voice of God, calling now more peremptorily, Adam, where art thou? darted terrors quite through him; he could no longer think that he was concealed, but came forth, confessing, that he was afraid because he was naked, and had therefore hid himself.⁶ The transaction is a most natural progress of conscious guilt; and the words, which Adam now spake, are as natural, and a deep humiliation of himself before God. They are, as if he had said, I was afraid, and hid myself; but I see I am naked, I have no cover from thine eye; I know also that I am farther naked, unarmed against, having nothing to oppose to, or protect me from thy power; I submit, Lord, do unto me as thou wilt.

It is very obvious to remark, how our translators and commentators came to have a notion of Adam and Eve's shame for their nakedness. In the last verse of the second chapter of Genesis we have this observation, that, they were both naked, the man and his wife, and were not ashamed. It being here observed, that no shame attended their being naked before they ate of the tree, it was concluded that a shame of being naked entered with sin into the world. But I would, hereupon, offer to the reader's consideration,

⁴ Rev. vi, 16.

⁵ Gen. iii, 8—10.

⁶ Ver. 10.

1. That what is expressed in this 25th verse of the second chapter of Genesis, is an observation that has no manner of reference to, or connection with, any thing before said, which might give occasion for it; nor does it any way lead to introduce what follows in beginning the next chapter. It seems, in its obvious sense, quite an independent remark, which might indeed be made by any one who considered, that at that time they were not clothed, but had mankind never worn clothes at all, nothing was yet said which could have occasioned such an observation. Every thing, which Moses had related, or proceeded to relate, would have been as full and complete without it as with it.

2. There are several observations of this sort, in many parts of the Old Testament, and in the Book of Genesis particularly, which the learned agree were not originally in the text; but were hints written⁷ in the margin of ancient copies, as observations from, or upon, the text; and that transcribers from these copies, not carefully distinguishing, took them into the text; that such transcribers, not being modern, but more ancient than any printed copies, or, indeed, any manuscript Bibles now extant, perhaps we have now no copies without some of these insertions in the text. If, indeed, the meaning of the verse we are treating was, that Adam and Eve were not ashamed at their wearing no clothing, and I could have any warrant from any one copy to omit it, I should be inclined to think it an insertion of this nature.

3. But I apprehend the truth is, that this verse was not intended at all to speak of their being naked, in respect to clothing. As the word naked has metaphorical senses in some passages of the Old Testament, so also has the word, which we here translate ashamed.⁸ It is far from signifying, in all places, being affected with what we call the passion of shame; it often means, being confounded or destroyed. The word here used is a termination of the verb buosh (בוש,) and this is the verb used by Isaiah, where, recollecting how God had destroyed the kings of Canaan before the Israelites, and laid waste their fenced cities into ruinous heaps, he tells us, that their inhabitants were of small power; they were dismayed (בושו, veboshu.) He does not here mean that they literally had the passion of shame affecting them, but were confounded; were, as he proceeds, as the grass of the field, and as the green herb, as the grass on the house-tops, and as corn

⁷ See Prideaux's Connect. part i, b. v; Connect. Sac. and Prof. History, vol. ii, b. vii, p. 150; vol. iii, b. xii, p. 260.

⁸ The Hebrew text is, וְלֹא יִבְּשׁוּ.

*blasted before it be grown up.*⁹ And this was Moses's meaning in the word here used ; a meaning of it perfectly coinciding with what afterwards appeared to be his sentiment of man's standing personally to hear the voice of God. Moses, elsewhere, speaks of it as being no ordinary mercy, that a man should hear the voice of God and live;¹ therefore he might here leave us this observation, concerning our first parents; that God spake to them, and that, although they stood naked before him, i. e. in his more immediate presence, under no covert, nigh to him, to hear the voice of his word talking to them, they experienced what Moses always reputed a very extraordinary thing, that God did talk with man, and they were not confounded, but lived.²

Thus far we have no difficulty: we are now to consider what the voice of God said to Adam upon his confessing himself thus naked before him. *And he (i. e. God) said, who told thee that thou wast naked? Hast thou eaten of the tree whereof I commanded thee that thou shouldest not eat?*³ The words point very clearly to what I have explained to be the meaning of Adam's thinking himself naked. Had Adam intended by that expression, that he was ashamed to appear before God, upon account of his having no clothes, here would have been something said hugely trifling, and no way pertinent to any circumstance of his condition ; but take him to mean by naked, not covered from the sight of God, and without any defence or protection against his power ; and the reply from God here is, as if he had said, You say you are without cover from, and without defence against me: have you never been so before me until now? Have you hitherto wanted any cover or defence? Who tells you, that you now want them? I never threatened you, but for one thing; art thou afraid? Hast thou done that one thing, to be afraid of me? This now speaks itself to be the reason and explanation of what God was pleased to say to Adam, and refers evidently to what Adam had done to occasion this being said to him. Adam hereupon denied not, but confessed his guilt; the woman, said he, whom thou gavest me, she gave me of the tree, and I did eat.⁴ The woman being interrogated, answered without evasion, the serpent beguiled me, and I did eat.⁵ All this, I think, can want no comment ; we may therefore proceed to examine the sentence, which God hereupon passed upon the offenders.

And here we read, that the LORD God said unto the serpent: because thou hast done this, thou art cursed above all cattle, and above every beast of the field: upon thy belly shalt thou go, and dust shalt thou eat all the days

⁹ 2 Kings xix, 26; Isaiah xxxvii, 26.

² Chap. v, 24.

⁴ Ver. 12.

¹ Deut. iv, 33.

³ Gen. iii, 11.

⁵ Ver. 13.

*of thy life.*⁶ The objectors, hereupon, ask,—“ Shall we say, that the nature of the serpent was now changed? that before the serpent had done what he is here made criminal for, he was an animal that walked upright,⁷ and moved in a manner very different from what he now moves in? Were his whole make and shape, and powers of moving, upon the sentence now passed upon him, totally altered? If they were not, he was, before this sentence, just the same reptile, as he was after it; and if so, then no punishment was inflicted. If we say, God changed his make and form, and degraded him to a low reptile for the mischief he had done; how can this be?⁸ For, where there was no fault, how should God punish?” If, as I have observed, the words, which came to Eve, from the mouth of the serpent, were, in reality, not the serpent’s words; were words he in nowise intended, nor had any sense of, or meaning in them,⁹ wherein could the serpent be criminal? and, if he was not criminal, why should he be so execrated and degraded? They, who oppose our understanding Moses in, a literal sense, seem here to triumph; and I cannot say, that those who answer them, do speak so clearly as might be wished in this particular. The true fact, in what had been done, undoubtedly was, that the serpent had been no moral agent in the affair, had really done nothing; for he was only a mere tool, an instrument in the use of an invisible agent; and therefore cannot be thought either accountable, or deserving to be punished, for any thing which had happened; so that we ought carefully to examine the words of Moses, whether he says any thing which intimates that God had really called the serpent here to an account, or inflicted any punishment upon him.

It is, indeed, observable, that not only our English, but all versions of the text of Moses, render the place, as if great guilt was imputed to the serpent, and punishment thereupon denounced against him; but if the reader be apprised how the Hebrew particle כִּי (ki), in the text, which we translate, because, ought to have been rendered, not because, but although; the passage will appear to have a different meaning.¹

The words used by Moses are, ki nashitha, zaoth;² we

⁶ Gen. iii, 14.

⁷ Vide Critics in loc.; Rivet. exercit. in Gen.

⁸ De pena serpentis non levis est quaestio: si diabolus rem totam egit sub specie serpentis; vel si coegit serpentem, ut ea ageret vel pateretur; quid serpens luit penas criminis a diabolo commissi? Dein quoad modum et formam pena in serpentem irrogata, nempe quod in posterum pronus iret in ventrem, quid hoc sibi velit non est facile explicatu: erectum antea fuisse serpentem, aut quadrupedum more incessisse aegre quis dixerit. Quod si vero ferebatur pronus in ventrem ab initio, ut hodierni angues, ineptum videri possit id pro supplicio, et in penam singularis facti, huic animali imponi aut attribui, quod semper et a natura habuit. Burnet. Archæol. p. 291.

⁹ Vide quæ sup.

¹ The Arabic version seems to specify, that the serpent designedly beguiled Eve; cum feceris hoc scienter, in the Latin version of the place. But how groundless is this fancy?

² כִּי נָשִׁיתָ זָאוֹת render them, because thou hast done this: the particle ki has often this signification, and possibly may be thus taken, where Adam is spoken to, in the 17th verse (ki shamanta),³ because thou hast hearkened unto the voice of thy wife.—But it must be rendered otherwise in other places. In Genesis viii, 21, The LORD God said, I will not curse the ground any more for man's sake; for (ki,) the imagination of man's heart is evil from his youth. Had we here rendered the particle ki, because, we had darkened the sense extremely; and the translating it for, does not entirely clear it. The words truly rendered are as follow: I will not curse the ground any more—ALTHOUGH the imagination of man's heart is evil:—This is the true meaning of the words: God was pleased to determine, not to curse the ground any more, although the wickedness of man was such as deserved its being again cursed. Thus again, in another place: Israel stretched out his right hand, and laid it upon Ephraim's head, who was the younger, but he laid his left hand upon Manasseh's head; ki, we say, for Manasseh was first born.⁴ Surely the reason intimated is a little confused: but if we had rendered the words, ALTHOUGH Manasseh was the first born, the expression would be just and significant. And thus in Psalm xxv, Pardon my iniquity, ki, we say, for it is great;⁵ but we should better express the Psalmist's meaning, if we translated it, ALTHOUGH it is great. Our version has, in one place, given the particle this its true meaning: God led them not through the land of the Philistines; we here render the particle ki, justly, ALTHOUGH it was near.⁶

And thus the verse concerning the serpent ought to have been translated: And the LORD God said unto the serpent, ALTHOUGH thou hast done this, thou art cursed above all cattle, and above every beast of the field; upon thy belly shalt thou go, and dust shalt thou eat all the days of thy life. The words in nowise imply, that a change of the nature of the serpent was now inflicted on him; he remained the same animal as he was created. But they are, as it were, an apostrophe to the serpent, in the hearing of Adam and Eve, designed to evince to them, what a folly, as well as crime, they had been guilty of, in being deceived by so low a seducer. The words are, as if God had said to the serpent: “Although thou hast done this great mischief, yet thou art no lofty and respectable creature; thou art one of the meanest of all animals; thou art not raised to any high form, but art a mere reptile, and shalt always continue to be so; upon thy belly thou art made to go; and shalt feed low all the days of thy life, in the very dust.”* Adam and Eve had conceived high

³ Gen. iii, 17.

⁴ Gen. xlviii, 14. כי נשנה הבכור

⁵ Ps. xi, 1. כי רב חטא

⁶ Exod. xiii, 17. כי קרב

* Was there ever a second person of the above opinion? Surely such a far-fetched interpretation of a text never saw the sun.—EABT.

notions of the serpent, *above all the beasts of the field which the LORD had made;*⁷ but God here reprehends their foolish fancy, and sets before them, what their own eyes might have told them, that the serpent was a creature made only for a very low life; and that no such elevation as they imagined should ever belong to him.⁸

The translators of the Bible were, I dare say, led to think a punishment was here inflicted upon the serpent, from the expression of his being cursed above every beast of the field. To be cursed, may be to have some signal mischief or great evil, either wished to, or inflicted upon, the person cursed. This is indeed the general signification of the word; but it ought to be considered, whether it is contrary to the nature of the Hebrew tongue, to call a thing cursed, when such circumstances belong to it as are so extremely bad, that it might be deemed as unhappy a thing, even as a most severe curse, to be under them, though they be not inflicted as a particular judgment. In this sense the Jews, in our Saviour's time, called their vulgar or common people cursed,⁹ who, they thought, could not know the law. We cannot suppose them, here, as meaning that the body of their people were under any particular curse or judgment of God, which deprived them of all possibility of knowing their duties; rather they thought of them in the sentiment of the prophet; *Surely these are poor; they are foolish, for they know not the way of the LORD, nor the judgment of their God; I will get me to the great men, and will speak unto them, for they have known the way of the LORD.*¹ The prophet here looks upon the poor, not as particularly cursed of God; for this he could not think,² but they were in such circumstances as might not have afforded them any considerable information concerning their duties, and he therefore said, he would get him to the great, as reputing it more likely to find them ready to hear and understand. In this way the Jews held their estimation of the common people: they imagined it not likely that these should know the law; therefore they deemed them so despicably ignorant, that though no particular judgment of God was in the case, yet they held them in no kind of regard, but as in a cursed or most contemptible condition. It is no unnatural way of speaking to say of poor, barren, and unprofitable land, that it is cursed ground; not only where God may have been pleased to make a fruitful land barren, for the wickedness of them that dwell therein,³ as was par-

⁷ Gen. iii, 1.

⁸ The ancient naturalists have largely considered the propriety of the motion of a serpent, to its whole make, and construction of the nature of its body: ἐκ τούτων γὰρ φαίνεται, ὅτι τὸν ὄφιν οὕτως ὅσα κατὰ μίαν ἀσχημότητα εἰσι πρὸς τὴν ἀλλήν τὴν σωματικὴν φύσιν, καθάπερ οἱ ὄφεις, οὕτω αὖτε τὰ αὐτῶν ἰσχυρῶς αἰσθ. Aristot. lib. de Animalium incessu, c. viii.

⁹ John vii, 49.

² See Prov. xxii, 1; Deut. xv, 11.

¹ Jerem. v, 4, 5.

³ Psalm cvii, 34.

ticularly the case of the earth that was cursed upon our first parents' having sinned,⁴ but also ~~when~~ the land is very sterile and unfruitful, though no particular curse of God has ever been denounced against it. In the Hebrew tongue we often find things, eminently excellent in their kind, said 'therefore to be of God; cedars of Lebanon, highly flourishing, to be, for that reason, of God's planting; so on the contrary, the word cursed may as reasonably be used, as it were in contrast, where God had given no appearance of a blessing. Adam and Eve were thinking highly of the serpent; the design of what God now said was to show them, that he was a creature deserving their lowest notice; they thought him above any beast of the field which the Lord had made. The words here spoken were to tell them, that he was not above, but beneath all others; so creeping and abject, that his make and form might be spoken of in terms, as if they were a curse upon him.⁵

But the words 'that next follow have greater difficulties: *And I will put enmity between thee and the woman, and between thy seed and her seed; it shall bruise thy head, and thou shalt bruise his heel.*⁶ The inquiries I would make concerning these words are, I. Whether Adam and Eve understood them? II. Whether they conceived that they had any reference to the animal, the serpent from whose mouth they had heard the words which had beguiled Eve? III. What may be the true and literal meaning of them?

I. Are we sure that Adam and Eve understood what God now spake to them?⁷ They are words, which, I hope, I shall be able reasonably to explain, and show to be the first prophecy which was made to the world. I call them a prophecy, as speaking of events to come; and that for many days to come, referring to what was to be accomplished in times that were afar off.⁸ Therefore though it seems obvious that Adam and Eve might understand, from what was spoken, that the enemy who had hurt them would at length be conquered; yet it does not appear that they were precisely informed who this enemy was, nor what the contest was which should be with him and against him; nor how, or by whom in particular he should be subdued. What had been said in their hearing, concerning

⁴ Gen. iii, 17.

⁵ I do not know whether I might not observe, that the death of being hanged on a tree, was said to be a cursed death in this sense of the word. See Deut. xxi, 22, 23. There were other deaths inflicted by the laws of God; such as stoning with stones till a man died, Levit. xx, 2, 27, &c. Whoever came under the sentence of this, or any other death inflicted by God's law, was as really accursed of God, as he that was hanged on a tree; but the ignominy of this death was despicable beyond others: it had a shame belonging to it, hard to get over and despise; it was stigmatized, low, and base, beyond other punishments, and therefore had peculiarly this term of reproach annexed to it.

⁶ Gen. iii, 15.

⁷ Ibid.

⁸ Ezek. xii, 27; see Dan^x xii, 8, 9, 13; x, 14; viii, 26, 27; vii, 28.

the cursed or very low and grovelling nature of the serpent, must have apprised them, that they had been much mistaken in their notions of this animal. Whether it caused them to reflect, although they did not before think so, that the serpent did not perhaps speak of himself; but that they had some greater enemy whom they had not seen, nor known, I cannot say; but that our first parents, though their experimental knowledge could as yet be but little, were not of slow parts, but able to turn every thing hinted to them over in their minds, to conceive of it all that a lively imagination would, as far as they could know things, present to them, must, I think, be admitted as unquestionable; and that they henceforward acquitted the serpent of all guilt towards them, seems to me to appear from what I shall presently consider, viz. that we have no hints in history, that either they, or their immediate descendants, commenced any particular enmity or hostility against the animals called serpents, any more than against any other animals of the world. But, that Adam and Eve knew the real meaning of what was here said to them, any more than the ancient prophets perfectly understood what was revealed to them, to be by them declared unto the world, is what I see no reason to conclude. Are we to think that Daniel, after he had written down what had been revealed unto him concerning the seventy weeks determined upon his people,⁹ could have exactly determined what manner of time was here signified beforehand; or how that which was testified, was to be fulfilled in the sufferings of Christ, and the glory that should follow?¹ Or shall we think, that David, to whom it had been foreshown, that *his soul*² should not be left in Hell, neither should God's holy one see corruption, could have hence been able to declare, that Jesus Christ, or even any one of his (David's) descendants, should be dead and buried, and on the third day be raised from the dead? Or that even Moses, who recorded the words, which God had thus spoken to our first parents; and afterwards, that in Abraham's seed all the nations of the Earth should be blessed;³ and afterwards, that Shiloh should come of the tribe of Judah;⁴ and farther, that God would give the Israelites a prophet from among their brethren like unto him, that they should hear him;⁵ can we say, that Moses could have explained, as St. Paul was able afterwards to show, who the particular person was, that was to be this seed of the woman; the seed of Abraham; the Shiloh; the prophet who was to come; and in what particular manner all that had been foretold should in him be fulfilled?⁶ Prophecy was designed to point beforehand to something, which was afterwards more fully to be revealed; to create in those, unto whom it was given, an expectation of things not yet fully explained to them; which things were, in the progress of ages, to be farther added to and opened, as God should think fit more and more to show the contents of them; until, when the time was come that the whole was fulfilled, they, unto whom the things foretold were accomplished, might look back, and, by seeing from the beginning what had been said, before any one but God knew how these things should so be, might hereby have a surer word,⁷ than could possibly have been contrived for cunningly devised fables, to show them, that the things thus foretold, and thus accomplished, were of God. Such is that series of promises or predictions began in the words now spoken by God to our first parents; enlarged, and more specified as to their meaning, by some farther prophecies given in after ages; until, at the end of about four thousand years, a person appeared, in whose life and death, resurrection and glory, the whole of what had been foretold was clearly seen to be truly and literally fulfilled; but yet so foretold and so fulfilled, that no one, before things were come to pass, ever so understood the prophecies as to think, that thus would be the event of them. Whereby it was the more demonstrably proved, that the whole was God's work; for, as he only could declare the end from the beginning,⁸ mark out truly beforehand the traces of his own deep counsels and designs; so, what had been foretold by him, was always so imperfectly understood, as to be looked for by men quite otherwise than it came to pass: and herein it became evident, when it was come to pass, that no human contrivance was in the fulfilling it, any more than in the foretelling it; for, had there been human contrivance in it, it would have been brought about to have been fulfilled in quite another manner. The words therefore before us, now spoken by God, are, as a most excellently able and learned prelate has pointed out to us,⁹ the first of "a chain of prophecies reaching through several thousand years, manifestly subservient to, and gradually opening, one and the same administration of Providence from beginning to end;" of which our first parents knew no more, than to think that they literally had hopes herein, so far seen by them as to give them reason to trust and depend upon God; but not enough explained to them, to show what the ⁷ 2 Pet. i, 19.

⁹ Dan. ix, 24—27.² Psalm xvi, 10; Acts ii, 25—35.⁴ Gen. xlix, 10.⁶ Gal. iii, 14—16.¹ 1 Pet. i, 11.³ Gen. xxii, 18.⁶ Deut. xviii, 15.

⁸ Remember the former things of old, for I am God, and there is none else; I am God, and there is none like me; declaring the end from the beginning, and from ancient times the things that are not yet done: saying, my counsel shall stand, and I will do all my pleasure. Isaiah xlii, 9, 10.

⁹ Bishop Sherlock's Preface to the third edition of the Use and Intent of Prophecy.

particular things were which they were to hope for, or how or when they were to be accomplished.

II. But did our first-parents apprehend, that any thing here said concerned or related to the animal, to the serpent from whose mouth the guile came, which deceived them? I answer, I think they did not. Had Adam and Eve understood God as meaning, that there should be continual war between mankind and the serpents; that the serpent should bite the heels of men, and that men should crush and bruise to pieces the heads of serpents, would not ancient history have given some account of the endeavours of mankind, in the first ages, to destroy these their enemies? It is observable, that God does not speak of the serpent as a creature of enormous size, but rather as so contemptible, that Adam could have no reason to be afraid of it,¹ but might have easily perhaps stamped it under his feet. How then came it to pass, that neither Adam nor Eve, if they understood that they were to destroy serpents, did instantly bruise the head of this their enemy? Or, if it may be said, having no weapons, they might be afraid he should bruise their heel, is it not wonderful that they should never afterwards contrive how to afflict this hostile creature? and that it did not become the heroism of the first generations of the world to commence a sort of religious war against these devoted animals, to extirpate the whole breed of them from off the face of the Earth? In after ages, and in countries where the clearing them of serpents was thought a public good, exploits of this kind had their glory:

—— diram qui contudit hydram.

Hoz.

The subduing a serpent was one of the labours of Hercules:² nay, he was said to have killed two serpents in his very cradle:³ a story which implies, that the killing serpents was at this time of such public utility, and therefore so highly estimated, that no greater thing could be said of this hero, to ¹ We are told by heathen writers of serpents of a most incredible size. Pliny relates from Livy, that, when Regulus commanded the Roman forces in Africa, he was infested by a serpent one hundred and twenty feet long, and so invulnerable, its scales being impenetrable, and its breath so infectious, that he was forced to use the military engines, which they used against towers and the walls of towns, before they could subdue it; and says the skin of it was hung up at Rome, and remained there until the war with Numantia, i. e. about one hundred years. Vide Plin. Nat. Hist. lib. viii, c. 14. Liv. Hist. lib. xviii, c. 15, 16. And the same naturalist speaks of serpents twenty cubits long in other places. Vide Nat. Hist. lib. xxxi, c. 2. And of so large a size, as to draw away oxen and stags whole. Lib. vii, c. 14. Whether these accounts did not exceed what was strictly the truth, ought to be considered. The Scriptures hint, that serpents in Moses's time had been of a more common measure, such as might lie in the way and bite the heels of horses, Gen. xlix, 17. And we have no reason to suppose the serpent that spake to Eve to have been larger.

² Apollodor. lib. ii, c. 4; Mart. Ep. lib. ix, ep. 104.

³ Apollodor. ubi sup.

give high expectations of his future achievements, or to evince his origin to be more than mortal. Can we then think, in the first world, of which the history, though very short, is not so imperfect, but that the inventors of useful arts,⁴ of the entertainments of life,⁵ as well as the names of those, who were eminent for religion, are come down to us;⁶ if one great instance, of performing what God had declared, had consisted in destroying serpents, we should not have had the name of some one worthy, at least, who had exerted himself in this warfare? But, in truth, the animals called serpents were as yet little in size, contemptible in figure, not understood to be marked out by God, for men to make it their employment to destroy them; and accordingly nothing more is told us, of the serpent's having to do with man, or man with the serpent, until the flood came, and took away man and beast from off the earth. The serpent, which tempted Eve, is reckoned amongst the beasts of the field, and not a water animal;⁷ and therefore we may suppose that his kind had been preserved in the ark, and accordingly had come to Noah⁸ as innocuous

⁴ Gen. iv. 20, 22.

⁵ Ver. 21.

⁶ Chap. iv, 26.

⁷ Gen. iii, 1. The water-snakes are mentioned in all writers: the two serpents related in Virgil to have killed Laocoon, are described as having come over the sea.

Ecce! autem gemini a Teuedo tranquilla per alta,
(Horresco referens) immensis Orbibus Angues
Incumbunt pelago, pariterque ad littora tendunt:
Pectora quorum inter fluctus arrecta, jubæque
Sanguineæ exuperant undas: pars cætera pontum
Pone legit, sinuatque immensa volumine terga.
Fit sonitus spumante salo: jamque arva tenebant,
Ardentesque oculos suffecti sanguine et igni,
Sibila lambebant linguis vibrantibus ora.

VIRG. ÆN. lib. ii.

The annotators observe, that the Latins called the water-snakes, angues; the land-snakes, serpentes; and, when these animals were consecrated and in temples, dracones: angues aquarum sunt, serpentes terrarum, templorum dracones. And so Virgil styles these very serpents, when they were said to be hid at the feet of Pallas;

At gemini lapsu delubra ad summa dracones
Effugiunt, sævæque petunt Tritonidis arcem,
Sub pedibusque dæx, clypeique sub orbe teguntur.

Id. ibid. ver. 225.

The Hebrews had a different word for serpents of the water, from that which they used for the land kind. The river serpent they called תַּנִּין (tennin.) Thus, when Moses's rod was turned into a serpent before Pharaoh, it was turned (תַּנִּין לֶתַנִּין) into a water-snake, as Pharaoh probably was now where he usually went in the morning, to the river. But the serpent, which had tempted Eve, was not a tennin, but a nachash, a land-serpent. It may perhaps be observed, that the serpent called tennin is also called nachash. See Exod. vii, 9, 10, 12. To which it may be replied, that nachash was the first general word used for a serpent, before the different kinds of them were distinguished: therefore the water-kinds may be sometimes called by this general name; but it will not follow, that where nachash is used above, we should think a water-snake intended. As in English, though we may say a water-snake is a snake; yet, if we should name a snake or serpent only, we would not be thought to mean a water-snake.

⁸ Gen. vi, 20; vii, 9.

to men, and had been as well received and dismissed by him as any other living creature of the world; so that I do not see the least ground to imagine that Adam apprehended, in what God now said, any thing was intimated, that there should subsist between men and serpents a perpetual enmity, to be always biting and destroying one another.

If we look into the ages after the flood, we find that serpents were, before Moses's days, becoming noxious animals;⁹ and men, when Moses lived, were in general afraid of them.¹ There might ere this time be poisonous juices in many of the herbs and plants which grew on the earth. The same alteration² of the world, which began from the flood, and conduced to the shortening the lives of men, might cause such an alteration in many herbs, that men might not perhaps now find every green herb and tree as wholesome, as they had found all in the first world: and the nourishment of some, in the concoction of some animals, might breed in them, what to man and other creatures might be malignant poison. At the going out from the ark, none of the living creatures of the world appear to have been hurtful or destructive to man. But time produced in many a ferocity, and in others, other qualities, which made them terrible; and serpents were in general such objects of terror in Moses's days, that when the miracle, which God gave him to assure him, that he sent him to Egypt, took effect, Moses, we read, when he saw his rod turned into a serpent, *fled from before it.*³ But, notwithstanding any thing that may be said of men's natural fears, from their apprehensions of the venom of serpents, a thought of God's having ever given any order in particular for man to destroy serpents, seems to be a mere modern imagination. We can find no traces of such a sentiment in all antiquity; rather, the sages of the early times, who searched into antiquity, and added to it what they thought the religion of nature,⁴ to be ⁹ Chap. xlix, 17.

¹ Exod. iv, 3.

² See Connect. vol. i, b, i, p. 49.

³ Exod. iv, 3.

⁴ See Connect. vol. iii, b, xi, p. 98. The sentiments, that led them to their notions of the divinity of the serpents, are said to be, πνευματώτατοι το ζώον πάντων των ἱερώντων και πυρρός—πυρρόνδν, παρ' ὃ και ταχος ἀντιπλάττει δια τι πνευματος παρρησίη, χωρίς ποδών τι και χερσών, ν αλλε τιος των ἱερώντων, ἔξ ου τα λεπτα ζώα τας κινήσεις ποιεῖται, και ποικίλων σχημάτων τυπῆς ἀποτίται, και κατα τιν πνευματικῆς ἰχθῆ τας ἰρμας ἢ ὁ βυλοται ταχος και πολυχρονοῦνται δι ἑσιν, ὃ μόνον τῷ ἰδιούμῳ το ζώον παρῆν, ἀλλὰ και αὐξήσει ἐκπύχονδαι μαρζονα πορῆς και ἐπύδων το ἰρσῆμῳ μῆτρον πλῆρῶν, κς ἰαυτοῦ ἀναλυσῆται ὡς ἐν ταις ἡμέραις ὁμακς αὐτος ὁ Ταυτος κατὰ τῆς γραφῆς. διο και ἐν ἡμέραις τῶτο το ζώον και ἐν μυστηρίοις συμπαραλαμβάνεται. Euseb. Præp. Evang. lib. i, c. 10. We cannot sufficiently despise the beggarly elements of this philosophy; but yet it ought to be observed, that it was reputed a height of wisdom in its day. A plain demonstration this, what may be the trifles of mere human reasoning, when it has not been enlightened by any better information. But my intention, in the citation above, was to show, that no notions had traditionally prevailed to intimate that the serpent had been originally a cursed creature, appointed everywhere for men to destroy; for that the most ancient speculative and more curious inquirers had no bias against theories, which might represent them to be representatives of the most high God.

above the common notions of the vulgar, held serpents in high honour, had introduced them' into their temples,⁵ delineated their figures in their ancient fables and formalities of worship;⁶ and gave many, such as they thought reasons, for thinking them endowed with a kind of divine nature.⁷ And what is remarkable, they had no notion of the serpent's being the representative of an evil being, in opposition to the good God; for the Egyptians, we are told, reputed the serpent to be an emblem of their god, Cneph,⁸ by which word they meant the Δημιουργος,⁹ we might render it the workmaster,¹ or maker of all things. The Phœnicians translated it αγαθὸν δαίμονα, the good deity,² and from their most ancient symbols it may be thought, that they intended to represent in their σχηματα, or mystic figures of the serpent, what some of them called the συνεκτιστον,³ I might render it, the Power by which all things consist.

I do not pretend to trace the time of the rise of these heathen superstitions; they being brought out of one country into another. They were thought to have been introduced into Greece by Pherecydes,⁴ who was contemporary with Thales,⁵ and did not flourish there earlier than about one thousand years after Moses;⁶ but Pherecydes had them from the Phœnicians;⁷ and the Phœnicians from the books of the Egyptian Taautus;⁸ and, I think, I may represent these notions about the serpent as having been in vogue in Egypt in, and before, Moses's time. For it is much to be observed, that, though Moses, when he first saw his rod turned into a serpent, was terrified and fled from it, until God bade him put forth his hand and take it;⁹ yet, when the same rod was, in like manner,

⁵ Παντες—ἱεροποιοῦσαι ὅσων προκταται καὶ τὰ μὲν πρῶτα σχήματα διὰ τῶν ὁρίων τὰς κατασκευασαμένων ἐν αὐτοῖς ἀφαιρούσας, καὶ τούτοις θυσίαις καὶ ἱερταῖς ὑποτάττας καὶ ὁρῶν. Θις τοῦ μεγάλου νεμερόντος καὶ ἀρχηγὸς τῶν ὄλων. Id. ibid.

⁶ Euseb. Præp. Evang. lib. i, 10; see the table of Isis; Montfauc. Antiq. vol. i, part ii, b. ii, c. 1.

⁷ Vide quæ sup.

⁸ Λεγούτων ἡ ἱστορία αὐτοῦ. Euseb. ubi sup.

⁹ Τὸν δαιμόνιον, ὃν ἡ Κηφ ὡς Λεγούτων προσεχρημάτισεν. Id. lib. iii, c. 11.

¹ See Wisdom xiii, 1

² Φοινίκας δὲ αὐτοῦ ἀγαθὸν δαίμονα καλεῖσθαι. Euseb. Præp. Evang. lib. i, c. 10.

³ Ἐστὶ μὲν ὡς Λεγούτων ἀπὸ τῆς αὐτῆς ἡλικίας τὸν κόσμον γράφοντες, πρῶτον κυκλὸν ἀφαιρῶν καὶ πυρρὸν χάρασσον, καὶ μετὰ τὸτα μὲν ὁρίων—καὶ ἐστὶ τὸ πᾶν σχῆμα ὡς τὸ παρ' ἡμῶν ὄντα· τὸν μὲν κυκλὸν Κόσμον μνησκόντες τοὺς δὲ μετὰ ὁρίων συντάττας τούτων ἀγαθὸν δαίμονα σημαίνοντες. Id. ibid.

⁴ Πὰρ Φοινίκας δὲ καὶ Φοινίκας λαβὼν τὰς ἀφαιρούσας ἰδεολογίας πᾶν τε παρ' αὐτοῦ λεγόμενον Ὁρίωνος Θεοῦ καὶ τῶν Ὁρίωνων. Euseb. Præp. Evang. lib. i, c. 10.

⁵ Pherecydes was thought to have flourished about the fifty-ninth Olympiad, Thales to have died in about the fifty-eighth.

⁶ Moses died A. M. 2554. The fifty-ninth Olympiad was about A. M. 3555.

⁷ Euseb. ubi sup.

⁸ Ταυτοῦ ὡς Λεγούτων Θεοῦ προσεχρημάτισεν—τῶν μὲν οὐν τὰ δρακόντος φύσιν καὶ τῶν ὁρίων αὐτοῦ ἰδεολογίας ὁ Ταυτοῦ, καὶ μετ' αὐτοῦ αὐτὴς Φοινίκας. Euseb. ubi sup. We are to observe of δρακόντος, that a serpent was called draco when consecrated, and put into a temple. Vide quæ sup.

⁹ Exod. iv, 3, 4.

turned into a serpent before Pharaoh, and when all the rods of his magicians were turned into serpents likewise, neither Pharaoh nor his magicians appear to have been under any consternation.¹ They knew the arcana of their temples, that serpents were at this time amongst the sacra in their worship, and reputed the representatives, not of a malign, but of their good god. They might therefore think, that their gods were come down amongst them,² to support them against the demand made by Moses, and that the wonderful phænomena, before them, portended great assistance and good, but no evil to give them any terror. It ought only to be observed, that when they saw Moses's rod swallow up all the rods of their magicians,³ they ought hence to have been instructed, in the way of their own speculations, that a power appeared for Moses which literally executed judgment against the gods of Egypt,⁴ annihilating and destroying the most wonderful appearances they could imagine of their gods, to gainsay what, by Moses, was required of them.

As what I have observed does, I think, hint to us, that there were in the world no notions of serpents antecedent to Moses's writing his history, which can in any wise show that mankind had any remarkable enmity against, or thought themselves under any command to destroy them; so, I might observe farther, from what follows in the books of Moses, that serpents were not, from any thing said by him, devoted to either such odium or destruction; for I should think, if they had been so devoted, it is not likely that God would have appointed a serpent to be set up in the wilderness for the people to look up to, in order to be cured of the plague he had then inflicted upon them; because any other sign, if God had appointed it, would have been equally salutary. It does not seem agreeable to any end of a divine dispensation, that a prophet should make the figure of a creature an emblem of health and life, if he had designed that the same prophet should proscribe the whole species of that creature to be abominated and destroyed. But the fact was, the serpent spake to Eve, as the ass did to Balaam, both, as to themselves, ignorantly and without intention; and neither was the one ordered to be honoured for what he said, nor the other to be disgraced and destroyed. It was fit that Adam and Eve should be apprised how mean an animal they had admitted to be the instrument of deceiving them; and God was pleased very emphatically to tell them this in what he said of the serpent, as I have above explained it. It was in nowise reasonable, that they should henceforth be employed as killers of serpents; and, agreeably hereto, the words farther spoken do in

¹ Exod. vii, 10—13.

² Thus the men of Lystra, upon seeing a miracle, thought of Barnabus and Paul, according to their superstition, Acts xiv, 11.

³ Exod. vii, 12.

⁴ Chap. xii, 12.

⁵ Numb. xxi.

nowise order, nor were, or could be understood by them, to order this service, as will more evidently appear by considering,

III. The true literal meaning of the words, and I will put enmity between thee and the woman, and between thy seed and her seed, it shall bruise thy head, and thou shalt bruise his heel. Upon which words I would remark, 1. That nothing is said, which in any wise employed Adam. It was not said, I will put enmity between the man and the woman and thee, and between thy seed and their seed; they shall bruise thy head, and thou shalt bruise their heels. But the enmity was put between the woman only, and the person here spoken of, and between his seed and her seed. Adam was not the woman nor of the seed of the woman; for the woman was made out of him; he was made first, and then the woman. So that, whatever the enmity was, we see that Adam was remarkably not made a party to engage in it; an incident, which must have occasioned him to reflect, that the matter here intended, could not be the hating and killing the animal called a serpent; for if that had been designed, a slaughter of the then serpent would have been seen to be what might more likely have been instantly accomplished by Adam, than by Eve and her future posterity. • •

But I would observe, that, in this particular, there appears plainly what must, with all reasonable thinkers, for ever silence all pretence of reconciling an allegorical interpretation with the real meaning of this Scripture. The allegorical interpreters say, that the serpent is the symbol of lust and sensual pleasure;⁶ that Adam and Eve's being tempted by the serpent means, that they were drawn away and enticed by their own lusts and appetites, that the fact in truth was, that they were originally formed for a state of happiness and perfection, which they lost and forfeited by following their lusts and passions, in opposition to the will of their Creator.⁷ Now if this be the true way of interpreting Moses, it must follow, that the enmity appointed against the serpent means an opposition to the insinuations of sinful appetites, a striving against sin; and the declared event of this contest must be, that our sinful appetites and lusts will often hurt us; but that, if we will press forwards, though in many steps we take, we may sometimes meet defeat, yet in the end we shall capitally wound and subdue them. I promise myself, that no candid allegorist will accuse me of having herein falsified, or injured his system. Herein then is summed up all that is so highly boasted of as rational: but how obvious is it to see in all this, that it does not touch the matter related by Moses? The enmity declared by Moses to be put was, I observed, such, that no part of it was assigned to Adam: Eve only, and her seed, were the parties in this warfare: and shall we now say, that nothing more was intended, than the duty of striving against and conquering sinful appetites? Was Adam then, after the fall, to have no such appetites as well as Eve, and all who were to be born of her? or was he to have no struggle against such like passions with other men? Was he to be given up to a reprobate mind, to do whatever he should lust? This I take to be a plain fact; which all the art and subtlety of our pretended reasoners will never be able to reconcile and clear up. To this therefore I would earnestly call the reader's strictest attention: and would beg to have this one point taken into the severest examination; for I must think, if it be found to be as I have represented, the allegory must here meet its bane. It will be so clearly evident, that there is something in the text before us, which the allegorical interpretation cannot reach, that no one, who is truly ingenuous, will any more contend for it.

⁶ See Middleton's Essay on the Allegorical and Literal Interpretation. p. 132.

⁷ Ibid. p. 151.

2. But we ought to observe, that in the words here related by Moses, as having been heard from God; it was not said that mankind and serpents should have a general enmity against each other; but the Hebrew words, if truly interpreted, denote, that some one person should descend from the woman, who should capitally conquer and subdue the great enemy of mankind. If I were forced to allow, that we have now so far lost the perfect understanding of the idiom of the Hebrew tongue, as not to see that the words here used by Moses must carry this restrictive sense; yet from the Septuagint version of the place it appears, that when that translation was made, the Hebrew words were known to have that meaning.* The Septuagint version of the passage is thus: Και ἐχθραν θήσω ἀνα μέσον σου καὶ ἀνα μέσον τῆς γυναικός, καὶ ἀνα μέσον τοῦ σπέρματος σου, καὶ ἀνα μέσον τοῦ σπέρματος αὐτῆς. ΑΤΤΟΣ σε τηρήσει κεφαλὴν, καὶ σὺ τηρήσεις αὐτὸν πτερναν i. e. And I will put enmity between thee and between the woman, and between thy seed, and between the seed of her; he shall bruise thy head, and thou shalt bruise his heel. The point to be observed in this translation is; that it does not say it shall bruise thy head, the pronoun does not refer to the word seed; but it is he shall bruise, the pronoun being personal, and masculine, not agreeing with the word σπέρμα, seed, which is neuter; but denoting some one person to be the seed, and that he should bruise the head of the enemy here spoken of. Had the Greek interpreters thought the text meant that the woman's seed or offspring in general were here intended, they would have said αὐτοῦ, to agree with σπέρμα, as we say it in our English; but they more correctly rendered the place avros, HE, apprehending some one particular person to be here intended, and not the offspring of the woman in general.

* The Septuagint translation of the books of Moses was made about two hundred and seventy-seven years before Christ, about A. M. 3727. See Archbishop Usher's Annals. Pridaux's Connect. part ii, book i.

But may it not be said, that the avros here used is a mistake; that the Septuagint did perhaps not take the true meaning of the Hebrew expression; that they should have written not avros, but avro, IT, not HE? I answer, we, who believe the Scriptures, have the authority of St. Paul to assure us, that the Septuagint version is most judiciously right in this particular; that apostle having remarked a similar and subsequent expression to that which is here used, that God therein spake, not of seeds, as of many, but of seed, as one, and hereby intended CHRIST.⁹ Thus absolutely certain therefore are we, that the Septuagint translators have, in the peculiarity of the pronoun avros, given us the true meaning of the text; for we have an inspired apostle testifying, that they have therein given us what was really the mind of God. But I would consider in the next place, whether the Hebrew text does speak the very same thing.

The Hebrew words here used are, hua jeshuph ka rosh,¹ which signify not IT, but he himself shall bruise thee in the head.² The Hebrew text may not, at first sight, appear so remarkably to point out what the Greek version clearly intimates; for, in the Hebrew, the word (zeran) seed, is masculine, not neuter, as the word σπέρμα in the Greek; therefore the pronoun hua, in the Hebrew, does not, like avros in the Greek, directly vary in gender from the noun to which it should be referred. But we should here consider, that the Hebrew pronoun, hua, is specifically restrictive; to intimate what is said to belong to some one person, or one thing; and thus the Septuagint took the place as meaning, not of seeds, as of many, but of one.

I do not say that the pronoun hua, in Hebrew, may never be used, where in Greek, or in other languages, we would use a neutral pronoun, IT in English, illud in Latin, or avro in Greek; but, I think, where hua is used, it naturally speaks the thing intended in the singular number, and not referring to a noun of multitude as plural. Thus, Leviticus x, 3. Hua asher dibber Jehovah,³ we say, this is that the LORD spake, which, I think, is deficient of the true emphasis expressed in the Hebrew. The words were designed to show the error of Nadab and Abihu's offering strange fire, which the LORD commanded them not, i. e. had not commanded them; and they should be translated, this is the one thing, or ⁹ See Gal. iii, 16.

¹ The Hebrew words are,

ראש	יְשׁוּפֵךְ	הוא
caput	conteret te	ipse

² Gen. iii, 15.

הוא אשר דבר יהוה

the thing itself which the Lord spake. The words were intended to lay down one special or specific rule, which was the principle in all the laws given; they strictly required one thing only, namely; nothing to be done, but what God directed, to sanctify HIM, and him only, in them that come nigh him.⁴ We may, I think, put in itself, him or herself, in the singular number where hua is used; and thus in the text before us, hua jesuphka rosh cannot mean it, her seed, shall bruise thee in the head, taking the word seed as a noun of multitude to intend many; for in such case the Hebrew language would have been, they shall bruise thee in the head; but hua jesuphka, if we rightly translate the Hebrew, must be he himself, intending one person and no more. Thus the translators of the Septuagint rendered the place, without inspiration, and before any prophet or apostle had directed any such interpretation, by being only true masters of the Hebrew tongue, so as not to lose or vary from the precise meaning of a very significant expression in it. But I must still remark, that if I should be judged wrong in all I have here said of the Hebrew expression, the authority of St. Paul will still remain, to give us the true meaning of the place; for, in that the apostle, an inspired writer, informs us, that in the word seed, was intended, not many but one, and that one, CHRIST; God has not left himself without a witness to us, what was the intention of the words before us spoken to our first parents.

And if what St. Paul explains to be the meaning of the word spoken to our first parents was the real intention of God's purpose in them, we must admit, that God, when he caused Adam and Eve to hear the words from him, caused them so far to know the intention of the words spoken, as not to imagine from them, that he designed an idle and insignificant war, between Eve, and her children, and the serpents; but he promised them hua, him, one person of her seed, although he did not tell them who that one person was, who was to be the captain of our salvation,⁵ the conqueror here foretold to subdue him, who had deceived them.

And this was all they could possibly as yet know of this matter, no more than this being, as I have said, told them. Who the particular person promised was; what the warfare he should accomplish; who the very enemy was, to be conquered by him; when, and where, and in what manner he should appear; none of these things can be said to have been discovered to them: and therefore, as Joseph and Mary, when our Saviour, upon coming home with them from the temple, said to them, Wist ye not that I must be about my father's business? understood not the saying which he spake unto them: but his mother kept all these sayings in her heart,⁶ so our first parents did not understand the whole meaning of what God here intended; but they carefully treasured up the words in their hearts; formed hopes from them, the extent of which they could not as yet determine. They preserved the words to have their children know them; to the intent that they also might show their children the same, that future generations might see the whole of what God had spoken, and observe what might farther arise in fulfilling it.

⁴ Levit. x, 3, as above.⁵ Heb. ii, 10.⁶ Luke ii, 49—51.

We, who live in these last days of the world, unto whom, in the gospel, the kingdom of God is come, may plainly see what that purpose of God is, which was hid from ages, from the foundation of the world: but is now made more manifest.⁷ We may see JESUS CHRIST, a man ordained of God,⁸ of the seed of the woman, most literally speaking, as born of a virgin;⁹ descended from David,¹ who was of the seed of Abraham,² a descendant of our first parents: and may know of this one person, that he is to conquer that old serpent, called the Devil and Satan, which deceiveth the whole world;³ of whom we may consider the words as coming, which were spoken by the serpent to Eve; though our first parents saw him not, neither understood that they came from him. We may farther understand, that by the power of CHRIST, this, the great enemy of mankind, will be cast down;⁴ whereby will finally be accomplished, in a most literal and true sense, all that the text before us first intimated, and all that has been since said pursuant thereto, either by immediate revelation from God himself, or by the mouth of all his prophets, since the world began.

This, I think, is a true consideration of the words I have endeavoured to explain. And, in the whole of what I have gone through, as in what is to follow, I shall, I hope, be allowed to stand clear of what the objectors impute to all who write upon this subject. I do not sometimes adhere to a literal narration, and sometimes have recourse to allegory, forced to allow some part of what was said or done, not to have been as it is historically told us; but I endeavour to show, that there is no allegory in the whole, or in any part of Moses's relation: and that a material part of what he relates, that important part, in which the allegorist must absolutely lose his point, if he cannot make it out to be allegory, cannot possibly agree to an allegorical interpretation at all. I contend, that a real, a natural serpent, as truly spake to Eve, as a real ass

⁷ See Coloss. i, 26.

⁸ Acts xvii, 31.

⁹ Isaiah vii, 14; Matt. i, 18, 24, 25; Luke i, 34, 35.

¹ St. Luke, as he tells us, chap. ii, 4, that Joseph was of the house and lineage of David; so also, chap. i, 27, informs us, that the Virgin Mary also was a descendant from David.

² See Matt. i.

³ Rev. xii, 9; xx, 10.

⁴ Ibid.

spake to Balaam;⁵ but I apprehend, from what we may learn from other Scriptures, and from the considering the nature of the thing, we may know, that neither the ass nor the serpent spake of⁶ themselves; neither knew they what the words were which were spoken by them; although our first parents could not know this to be true of the serpent at the time he spake to them. I take the words, contained Gen. iii, 14, 15, to have been literally spoken by the voice of God; ~~that~~ the former part of them were in the way of apostrophe to the serpent, but for the instruction of Adam and Eve; for, that the serpent did not know the words, nor the meaning of them, nor was in any wise affected by them; but that Adam and Eve were herein admonished and informed, how basely they had been deceived, and by hearkening to how abject and contemptible an animal. It will be allowed me, that the invisible agent, whose words the serpent had^{} spoken, was at this time present before God; for, in truth, all persons and all things may, at all times, be present before him, in what manner he pleases; and I take the latter part of what was spoken, the 15th verse, to be an address of the speaker to this wicked spirit, denouncing to him, what should be the doom for which he was reserved; spoken in the hearing of Adam and Eve, though they did not apprehend the full meaning of it; yet, so spoken, as that they must have considered it could not concern the animal they had heard speak; but had a farther intention, and was a declaration which they ought to ponder in their hearts, and transmit to their children; and that from this, the first, and from several other prophecies which have followed, more enlarged and more directing, as God^{} has thought fit to give them in the several ages of the world, there has been a sure path laid, to lead from faith to faith,⁷ from one revealed declaration to another, those unto whom such prophecies have come; so that we and posterity may, if we will carefully attend to the information, have, over and besides all other arguments for the truth of it, what may show us of the gospel, that it is that one purpose of the wisdom and power of God, which he foretold, ⁵ Numb. xxii. That the ass speaking to Balaam was a real fact, and not a trance, or vision of the prophet, see Connect. vol. iii, b. xii, p. 177.

⁶ Dr. Burnet trifles most egregiously in this particular: His words are: "Aiunt nempe, sub hoc serpente latuisse diabolus, vel malum dæmonem, qui hujus animalis ore et organo usus affatus est feminam voce quasi humana: sed quo teste, quo auctore hoc dicitur? Non id præ se fert litera Moysi, cujus illi adeo sunt ténaces." Burnet's Archæol. p. 290. A plain answer to all this is, the letter of Moses says, that the serpent really spake to Eve: this unquestionably was fact: Moses does not say, that he spake of himself, or of any ability of his own, nor does he say the contrary. We see no reason to think our first parents, at first at least, apprehended that he did not speak of himself; but we have many hints from the New Testament, who it was that spake by or through him: will these now conclude, that no voice came literally from the serpent?

⁷ Rom. i, 17.

and therefore designed from the beginning of the world. In all which, I trust, I do not theologize with those, whose schemes are inconsistent with reason and themselves; but, saying none other things than what reason, fairly considering, must admit to be possible, and revelation warrants to be true, what I offer may be more fit to be impartially considered, than all the speculations of human wisdom, which cannot be truly reconciled with the Holy Scriptures.

CHAPTER XII.

The Sentence passed upon Adam and Eve, and the Consequences of their Transgression considered.

THE sentence passed upon Eve was, that it should henceforth be specially her duty, to be governed by and obey her husband;¹ that she should bear children,² be the mother of all living;³ but have herein a multiplicity of sorrow.⁴ Adam henceforth was to find his tillage of the ground a necessary but laborious employment;⁵ in or by the sweat of his face, he was to eat his bread.

It seems natural to think, that whilst there were yet but two persons in the world, a sufficient produce for two only might more easily be obtained from the fruits of the trees, from the shrubs, and from the herbs of the ground. Might not our first parents, notwithstanding it pleased God to have the earth now not so kindly fruitful, but apt to abound in thorns and thistles, unless duly cultivated for a better produce,⁶ for some time at least, respecting their diet, find the easy days, which the heathen poet ascribed to their golden age,

Contentique cibus nullo cogente creatis,
Arbutos fetus montanaque fraga legebant.

OVID. Met.

Excluded the garden, wherever they wandered into the adjacent country, may we not suppose that the earth afforded them fruits of divers trees, nuts and berries, grain of all sorts, corn of several kinds, and all salads; every thing which grew and had seed within itself, being at first created and made to

¹ Gen. iii, 16.

⁴ Ver. 16.

² Ibid.; 1 Tim. ii, 15.

⁵ Ver. 17—19.

³ Gen. iii, 20.

⁶ Ver. 18.

spring out of the earth?⁷ and might they not hence gather daily what we may suppose to be no hard and uncomfortable living, without finding a great pressure of want and distress? I answer; we read Moses too hastily, if we do not observe, 1. However our first parents were allowed within the garden to eat of every tree, except one;⁸ and the trees of the earth, as well as the herb upon the face of all the earth, were given them for food;⁹ yet, upon their expulsion from the garden, their living would be, thenceforth, chiefly of the ground.¹ Are we to think, because God planted or created within that particular spot of ground, which he had distinguished from all others to be called the garden, trees, of whatever perfection he was pleased to give them, that, therefore, all trees were of their full growth, and abounded in their fruits all over the world? Rather, may we not apprehend, that the earth, in many parts, was made only to put forth its shoots, which grew gradually up to their perfection? When Adam and Eve, therefore, were driven out of the garden, fruits of trees, acorns, and great plenty of berries, might be more rare than we may hastily imagine; a point, I think hinted, in that at first the fowls of the air, as well as every beast of the earth, were to live, not so remarkably of the fruit of trees, as of the green herb; distinguished from the trees, and said to grow upon the face of all the earth: it was of a lower growth, nearer to, and more closely covering the ground.² 2. But we cannot form an exact theory of the labours of our first parents' lives, because we cannot ascertain how long they lived in their first habitation, before they committed the transgression which caused them to be driven from it. We may observe, that one part of their employment in the garden was lenab-dah,³ to dress it;⁴ it is the same word which is used, where we are told, that God sent Adam forth from the garden, laabad, to till the ground, from whence he was taken.⁵ Adam was now put out of the garden into the adjacent country, where God created him;⁶ his tillage, expressed by the same word as his dressing the garden, seems to have been the same employment, only to be exercised upon a different soil. And if we may suppose that he had been exercised long enough in the garden, to know what the employment was which God had given him in it; we cannot think him quite a novice in what was now to be his labour. Nothing, in truth, confounds us in forming our conceptions concerning our first parents, except thinking that the Fall happened instantly, before they had lived long enough to have some experience of living. Let us only suppose it not so early; but that they might have had some months to observe of the herbs of the ⁷ Gen. i, 12.¹ Chap. iii, 17.⁴ Gen. ii, 15.⁸ Chap. ii, 16, 17.² Chap. i, 29.⁵ לעבד אדמה. Gen. iii, 23.⁹ Chap. i, 29.

לעבד.

⁶ Ibid.

garden what they liked best to eat, and how they might cultivate them to give them a due growth, and we may suppose them sent forth into the world, with this care, to find places here and there, where there were such produces as they had eaten of; to cultivate and to preserve them; to weed out the thistles, which soon began to grow amongst them; to defend and keep them from the cattle; that enough of them might be had within such distances as they could go to for the sustenance of their lives. This labour, if duly considered, will be allowed to have been a burden which they had not felt whilst they lived in the garden; and to be sufficient, although at first, before both beasts and cattle, and mankind, were multiplied on the earth, it would not be absolutely too much for them. The first husbandry was no more than gardening;⁷ and the grounds most commodious for the early tillage were reputed to be such spots as might be made gardens of herbs;⁸ and the easiest and happiest situation for these was accounted such, that a man might water them with the greatest ease;⁹ and such spots of ground abounded out of the garden, all along the land of Eden, on the borders of its rivers.¹ Upon one of these, I conceive, Adam bestowed his first pains, and by a diligent care cultivated and preserved in them enough for him and Eve, of what they had often before eaten within the garden. When mankind came to multiply, it would be necessary for them to look for farther provision; and before Adam was a hundred and thirty years old, Cain, one of his sons, began improvements in tillage.² And though iron, or brass, was not yet found out, and consequently no instruments for tillage were made of any metals; it requires no extraordinary imagination to conceive, that this early age might, by the means of sharp stones,³ cut wood and frame tools of divers sorts, such as would serve well enough to perform their less improved agriculture:

— primi cuneis scindebant fissile lignum.

VING.

⁷ Antiquitas nihil prius mirata est quam—hortos—hinc primum agricolæ æstimabantur prisci. Vide Plinii Nat. Hist. lib. xix, c. 19, sec. 1—3.

⁸ Deut. xi, 10.

⁹ Ibid. Vide quæ sup.

¹ Felicitas major Babyloniz, Seleuciz, Euphrate atque Tigre restagnantibus, quoniam rigandi modus ibi manu temperatur. Plin. Nat. Hist. lib. xviii, c. 47, ad fin.

² Adam was one hundred and thirty years old at the birth of Seth, after the death of Abel, Gen. iv, 25; v, 3. Abel was killed by Cain about the time they each of them brought an offering unto God from the improvement of their respective employments, not many years, I suppose, before the birth of Seth, Gen. iv, 2—4.

³ The great use of sharp stones made in the first unimproved ages of all countries, might be collected from all, who have written of the American Nations. It might likewise be observed, that even the use of them, to cut, with a knife, was not, in some improved countries, laid aside even in Moses's times. See Exod. iv, 25.

Or we may suppose the first men were soon able to contrive how to pull off, or to cut, from young trees such twigs as might be scraped, and reduced to fit the uses they had occasion to make of them, before they knew how, in a workman-like manner, to take down a whole tree, or wanted, or even had large trees for greater occasions. Arts and improvements grew, and had their progress: Abel began to be a keeper of sheep; and Jabal, a descendant of Cain, in the sixth descent from him, set up booths or tents in the fields, and began to order herds of greater cattle: and Tuba[Cain, about the same time, found out and instructed others to be artificers in brass and iron.⁴ And now we may apprehend, that the tillage of the earth received an increase by improvements:

Mox et frumentis labor additus ———.

VIRG.

The garden tillage would not afford a sufficient produce for the increased multitudes of mankind; nor could large tracts be managed with the insufficient implements of the most early husbandry; but, as they wanted them,⁵ human art and industry contrived better. Thus agriculture grew and increased gradually, as the necessities of mankind called for farther and larger improvements of it. In all this, one observation only is material, that the sentence of God upon man was in all these ages felt enough to keep them sensible of that part of the punishment denounced, which concerned the labour of their lives.⁶ Our first parents had not such enlarged wants as their more numerous posterity; but having less knowledge how to supply their lesser demands, sufficient for their day was the labour thereof. As the gracious purpose of God was not instantly to destroy man, but to have him ripened through a mortal life for a happier state, no wants oppressed him, but what he might by industry and labour get the better of.⁷ Yet we do not find, that any improvements in husbandry made in the first world were so great, but that the most experienced in its later times acknowledged themselves sensible of the heavy and universal burden of their lives, or the great toil and work of their hands, but before they had a grant to make use of animal food, for a farther supply than what they could reap from the ground.⁸

⁴ Gen. iv, 20, 22.

⁵ ——— Tum variz venere artes.

VIRG. Georg. i.

⁶ ——— Pater ipse colendi

Haud facilem esse viam voluit ——— ——— curis acuens mortalia corda.

Id. ibid.

⁷ ——— Labor omnia vincit

Improbis, et duris urgens in rebus egestas.

Id. ibid.

⁸ Gen. v, 29.

But the last part of the sentence denounced upon the man was, that he should die; that, as he had been taken out of the ground, so he should, after a laborious life, return unto the ground again, and become no better than his primitive dust.⁹

This sentence, we may observe, is not so particularly repeated against Eve as against the man. But as all experience testifies, that the woman is in nowise exempted from death, it must be remarked, that enough was said in the original denunciation of death,¹ as well as acknowledged by Eve herself,² to show, that, having transgressed, and the sentence of death against such transgression being in nowise reversed, it could not be supposed, that she could think it should not proceed against her. But there appears an evident reason, why the sentence of death should be thus repeated, and, as it were, re-established against Adam. He had thought, and offered it as a mitigation of his fault, that he was not the first in transgression, for that the woman had misled him to eat;³ God, therefore, denounced more particularly to him, that he should not escape the punishment denounced against what he had done; to tell him, that his plea was no excuse; for that, although⁴ he had been misled by hearkening unto the voice of his wife, yet, as he had done what had been commanded not to be done, he also should surely die.

It hath been thought by some, that the death declared against the sin of our first parents, ought, according to the plain meaning of the words in which it was denounced, to have proceeded to an immediate execution. *In the day that they ate of the tree, they were surely to die.*⁵ Can it be said with any propriety, that when Adam died, nine⁶ hundred and thirty years afterwards, that he died in the day that he ate of the tree of the knowledge of good and evil? This is a cavil too trifling to want confutation; for every one, who reads the Hebrew Bible, must see a manifest difference between the general expression bejom,⁷ in the day, and bejom hazeh,⁸ in that very day, bejom hahua,⁹ in the same day. Had either of the latter expressions been used in the seventeenth verse of the second chapter of Genesis, it might have signified, that in the very day of their eating they should, without farther delay, have been put to death; but the general expression, in the day, may very obviously claim to have a larger signification, and intend no more, than that from the time of their transgression they should become mortal; have ⁹ Gen. iii, 19.

² Chap. iii, 3.

⁴ It may be observed, that the particle ki may be even here rendered, not because, but more elegantly although, as I have before observed it must be sometimes translated. Vide quæ supra.

⁵ Gen. ii, 17.

⁷ ביום. Gen. ii, 17.

⁹ ביום חמא. Gen. xv, 18. See Gen. xvii, 23, 26; Exod. v, 6; xii, 1; Levit. xxiii, 29; Isaiah vii, 20; et in aliis ubique.

¹ Chap. ii, 17.

³ Chap. iii, 12.

⁶ Chap. v, 5.

⁸ ביום הזה. Gen. vii, 11.

in themselves the sentence of death,¹ sure to take effect and be executed in its time, which he, who made them, would appoint.

It was now determined, that they should inevitably die; but the instant, hour, or day when, was still left in God's power; and we may easily apprehend great and wise reasons, why God was not pleased to bring our first parents, and their immediate descendants, to a more early dissolution. God in nowise made man for nought;² and although he made not death for us,³ but man sought it in the error of his life,⁴ yet herein God's abundant goodness has provided for us. It could not be consistent with the liberty of reason and the freedom of our natures, that he should absolutely force upon us either wisdom or virtue. Being such creatures as he intended, it was more suitable for us to be admitted to grow up, if we would, as our faculties were capable of improvement in both, under the universal influence of his Spirit, in and by which, agreeably to their respective natures, all things are, and do consist;⁵ and consequently, time would be necessary for our increasing in all knowledge as well as virtue. What I shall here offer shall chiefly concern the former.

We have now, indeed, lives but as a shadow, short as a dream, in comparison of the duration of the first men; but we have much light from the experience of ages; all the knowledge we want for life is not so far from us as it was from them, who lived in the beginning. Had our first parents, and their immediate descendants, come to decline as precipitately as we do, their knowledge of life would have been cut down too fast for any shoots to be made, which might yield a produce of arts and sciences necessary for the improvement of the world. Therefore, if we duly think of mankind, what we came from, and how we are come up to what we now are, we may see, respecting our present life, that it is long enough, ordinarily speaking, for what is to be our work in the world;⁶ and also, that the early ages must have required a more extended period for human attainments to be gradually opened and displayed; that man, as far as he was made capable, if he should have time to come up to it, might not absolutely be cut off from, in not being allowed a sufficient term to attain it. The complaint, that life is not long enough for man to reap all the fruits⁷ of his labours under the Sun, might be as sensibly felt by our earliest forefathers, as it is by us. They lived, as I may say, nearer the ground: their prospects were not so elevated (things not having been tried for common use and benefit) as our sights of things are. The schools of

¹ 2 Cor. i, 9.

² Wisdom i, 13.

³ See and consider John i, 9; Job xxxii, 8; 2 Cor. iii, 5; Coloss. i, 17.

⁴ See Sherlock upon Death, b. iii, sec. 2.

⁵ We commonly say, "Ars longa, vita brevis."

⁶ Psalm lxxxix, 47.

⁷ Ver. 12.

• literature, or the shops of artificers, can at once put us, even in our younger years, upon a progress in science above what they could come near to in all their centuries; and excepting, that if they would fear God, and keep his commandments, they had herein all that they wanted for a life to come (and we, in all our attainments, more than this, have nothing worthy to be compared with it,) they must have felt concerning their life, when over, though they did not feel it so soon as we do, that, in comparison of what they might have hoped from it, few, after all, and evil, were the days of their pilgrimage.⁸ A pilgrimage it was, which, however long we may think it, in counting over the days of the years of it, unquestionably seemed to them, when they had passed through it, but as a tale that was told; and it brake off, at last, short of that human perfection, which they might perceive was far more extensive than what they had attained; and that, had their lives been shorter, they would not have had room to lay the foundation for what God intended they should contribute to human science and the improvement of the world.

In the day that our first parents ate of the tree they died, or became mortal. It is frivolously inquired by some, whether the food of the tree was not of a deadly or poisonous nature, deceitful to the eye, appearing to be good for food,⁹ but inwardly a ———— fallax¹ herba veneni,

VIRG.

⁸ Jacob said this of his days, when he was one hundred and thirty years old; Gen. xlvii, 9. And can we think, that, if he had lived to the days of the years of the life of his progenitors, he would have found in human life, to use Tully's language, the quod est diu? Cic. de Senectute.

⁹ Gen. iii, 6.

¹ The epithet, fallax, here used by Virgil, is, I think, peculiar. I do not remember any herb described by the naturalists as being remarkably tempting to the eye or taste, and inwardly a treacherous and deceitful poison; yet this seems the intention of Virgil's epithet. Mr. Pope well enough calls it the herb that conceals poison. See the notes on his Eclogue, Messiah. Had he had a word which would have hinted, that the herb had been tempting, to induce men to be deceived and poisoned, he had more fully come up to Virgil's expression. The annotators upon Virgil say, "Fallax herba, quia mortales fallaciter iis utuntur." I do not see the spirit of Virgil's poetry in this explanation. It rather creeps to human artifice in the use of the medicine, to represent the deceit of it, than it gives a lively hint, that the herb itself had an innate quality, both to hurt and to tempt to deceit and ruin those who should be inclined to use it. The learned generally suppose, that Virgil wrote his Pollio upon hints taken from some prophetic poems among the Romans, which had originally been formed from some sentiments taken out of the Jewish Scriptures. And as Virgil introduces the serpent in the same line, occide et serpens at fallax herba veneni, if it may be supposed, that any fragment or sacred book of the heathens had hinted any thing of a serpent's having deceived mankind, by eating what he had offered to them, or if Virgil had, by any search after the notions of the Jewish literature, formed any thought of such an ancient sentiment, he may be conceived very poetically to have thence written his fallax herba veneni.

treacherously full of those malignant juices, which would have a natural effect to cause mortality? I should rather think, that, as yet, every thing which God had made was intrinsically good;² that there was naturally nothing nocent and baleful; nothing that would hurt or destroy;³ and the mortality of man is in nowise hinted by Moses, as being the natural event of his having eaten of the tree. He rather suggests, that the frame of man would of course not be eternal, unless God was pleased farther to make it so enduring. *Dust thou art, and unto dust thou shalt return,*⁴ was the declaration now made to Adam. Undoubtedly he, who *upholdeth all things by the word of his power; in whom we live, move, and have our being, and by whom all things consist,*⁵ could have spoken the word, and the mortal of our first parents would have put on immortality; of which he gave them a sign, in the appointment of the tree of life.⁶ But this word was not as yet spoken; for they had not yet, under the direction of it, taken and eaten of the tree of life to live for ever;⁷ and this not being done, God was now pleased to prevent their doing it.⁸ Accordingly, they were henceforward to have their houses of clay, whose foundations were but dust, stand only until time would moulder them, and bring them by a gradual decay down again to the ground.

Now this, rightly understood, must instruct us to say likewise, concerning the tree of life also, that it could have no natural effect to give eternal life to those, who should eat of it. There could be no such power in it by nature. God only hath immortality,⁹ and he can give to have life in himself to whomsoever, to whatsoever, and in what manner soever he will. If he had appointed, that our first parents should, whenever he commanded it, have taken and eaten of a particular tree, and from thenceforth be immortal, the command must be rationally understood, as we understand our eating bread and drinking wine in our sacrament, in order to be partakers of the body and blood of Christ.¹ The outward action would profit nothing,² were it not the commandment of ² Gen. i, 31.

³ Things were, I apprehend, at first universally innocuous; as the prophetic writings, and best comments upon them (see Isaiah ii, 4; xi, 6—9; lxxv, 25, &c.) hint they will in their time be restored to be; of which happy state of things to come Virgil had collected many sentiments, almost verbatim, and thought them an ornament to his poem. See Pope's Notes on his Messiah; and, more particularly, Bishop Chandler's Defence of Christianity.

⁴ Gen. iii, 19.

⁵ Heb. i, 3; Acts xvii, 28; Col. i, 17.

⁶ Gen. ii, 9.

⁷ Chap. iii, 23.

⁸ Chap. iii, 23, 24.

⁹ 1 Tim. vi, 16.

¹ See Common Prayer Communion office. John vi, 51—58.

² The flesh profiteth nothing; the words, that I speak unto you, they are spirit, and they are life; John vi, 63. These words of our Saviour do, I think, plainly hint to us, that the notion of a transubstantiated body and blood of Christ in the sacrament, as the Papists hold, is a fancy, not only groundless, but in itself insignificant and vain; for that as the words our Saviour spake, the command-

God. But the doing, with a faithful heart, what God has expressly commanded, as a memorial, and in acknowledgment, that we receive the benefits we hope for, not as coming of ourselves, but as they in truth are the gift of God; may be both a reason and an assurance, that they shall be given us according to our believing and doing his word. And herein we may see, why man, having forfeited the hope of immortality, of which he was to have been made a partaker in eating of the tree of life, the liberty to eat of that tree was now denied him. We cannot be so absurd as to imagine, that if Adam and Eve, as soon as they had eaten of the forbidden tree, before God had prevented them, had taken also and eaten of the tree of life, they would thereby have defeated the purpose of God, and, notwithstanding what God had denounced, would have escaped death by having eaten of it: the text of Moses neither speaks nor hints any such thing.

The words of Moses are, *And now lest he put forth his hand, and take also of the tree of life, and eat (vechai leolam.)*³ Moses does not here use the verb vachayah, which would be rightly rendered and live, as we translate vechal,⁴ and eat; but the words used by Moses are the particle ve and the participle chai. Now ve, in many passages of Scripture, signifies, not and, but as, quasi, or sicut, in Latin;⁵ and ve chai, strictly rendered, signifies, as living: and the expression of Moses, rightly translated, is, And now, lest he put forth his hand and take also of the tree of life as one living, i. e. as if he were one who was to live for ever. The sense of the place, thus rendered, is clear and reasonable, free from those trifling insinuations, which might otherwise be deduced from it. It was not fit, that God should leave our first parents the use of the sign of immortality, when the thing signified was taken from them; therefore he now ordered them to remove out of the garden, and placed at the east of the garden of Eden cherubim and a flaming sword, which turned every way, to keep the way of the tree of life,⁶ to deter and prevent their approach to eat. God now gave them a visible evidence, such as he afterwards showed the Jews in the holy place of Sinai,⁷ that he was greater to be feared than it had as yet entered their poor imagination to conceive; that he had hosts in Heaven to execute his word; angels, that were his ministers, and a flame of fire.⁸

The facts we have considered can, I think, want no farther examination. There are, undoubtedly, other inquiries, which ment he gave was not meant thus grossly, but intended in a spiritual sense, the flesh would profit nothing. The eating the body and drinking the blood of Christ really, in his flesh, if they could do it, not being what he commanded, would be of no moment at all.

³ וְכָיָה.

⁴ וְכָלָה.

⁵ See 1 Sam. xii, 15; 2 Sam. xv, 24; et in al. loc. Noldius in partic. 62

⁶ Gen. iii, 24.

⁷ Exod. xix, 16—18; Ps. lxxviii, 14.

⁸ Heb. i, 7.

may be started. It may be asked, why, or how came it to pass, that the all-good and all-merciful God did not admit our first parents to mercy; to repent and be forgiven, especially if they should sin no more in the like manner, but become thenceforth absolutely obedient to his word; to be restored to his favour; to have, without dying, eternal life? Would not this have more clearly answered our reasonable apprehension, concerning the nature of the goodness of God, than that he should purpose to allot us to go through a life of many sins, and much original and acquired infirmity; at last, indeed, to have a way through death, unto this immortality?⁹ I answer, an inspired writer has suggested an answer to this query: *If, says he, we believe not, yet he abideth faithful; he cannot deny himself.*¹ If God had denounced that man should die, unless he would keep the commandment, which had been enjoined him, it could not be that he, *for whom it is impossible to lie,*² should, after our first parents had herein transgressed, still admit them not to know that death, which he had most expressly declared against such transgression. To this we may unquestionably add farther, that, if it had not been most fit, in the reason and nature of things, that man now should die, the unerring goodness and wisdom of God would not have threatened nor appointed this punishment; which, I think, is suggested by Moses: *behold the man is become as one of us, to know good and evil: and now, lest, —he live for ever.*³ The meaning of the words will, I dare say, by none be thought, that the man, by eating of the forbidden tree, was actually become wise as God is wise; knowing, as God is knowing. This, in fact, was not true; and, in the nature of the thing, was impossible. But they point out for our consideration, that the man, whom God had made so that he ought to be kept in the hand of God's counsel, had now taken upon him to be guided, contrary to God's directions, by his own. The creature was not made intrinsically all-wise, not endowed with a beam of unerring wisdom, not capable of being to himself a steady dictator in every thing that was right, for the guidance of his life.⁴ The creature, able indeed to reason, but liable often to *reason not aright,*⁵ had now set himself up to judge, without dependance upon what God had said or should say to him, what should be his good and what his evil; and now, lest—he live for ever—The point here intimated, seems to be, whether it could be meet, that this creature,* now subject to vanity, ⁹ Matt. xxv, 34.

² Heb. vi, 18.

⁴ Quartus gradus et altissimus eorum, qui natura boni sapientesque gignuntur, quibus a principio innascitur ratio, recta constansque quæ supra hominem putanda est, Deoque tribuenda. Cic. de Nat. Deor. ubi sup.

⁵ Wisdom ii, 1.

¹ 2 Tim. ii, 13.

³ Gen. iii, 22.

- should be indulged with a peceant immortality? And here, how ought we to consider, that to Snatch from God's hand the balance ——— to venture to define, contrary to what is, what we may think might better have been his dispensations to his creatures; to Rejudge his justice, be the God of God,

POPE.

is a most blind employment; rather examining what is declared to have been, in fact, his purpose towards us; and considering, how, although he made man upright,⁶

————— just and right,
Sufficient to have stood though free to fall:
MILTON, Par. Lost, b. iii.

Although ——— man had of God
All he could have ———
Id. ibid.

consistently with his being a free agent; I say, considering, that although man was thus created, yet God, foreknowing how our first parents would abuse their liberty, did verily fore-ordain, before the foundation of the world, a man to be the power and wisdom of God unto our salvation.⁷ We may reasonably apprehend, however apt we are to judge otherwise, that, if God had not known that our first parents, in eating of the tree, had begun a thought, which (whilst they and their posterity remained free agents) would not be so changed as we may imagine; he would not have denounced nor executed upon man that sentence of death, which obtains against us. We may observe farther, that, if this is indeed the appointment of God, as we have all reason to say of all that is so,

Whatever is, is right ———
POPE.

so it must unquestionably be true, that, if there could have been some better way provided for us, than what is appointed, such way would have been given to us. But since this is the way, and we can prove from the Scriptures, that we may, if we will, through this dispensation of God towards us, come at length to an eternal life;⁸ hence we rightly conclude, that although it doth not yet appear what we shall be,⁹ nor how ⁶ Eccles. vii, 29.

• ⁷ See Romans i, 26; 1 Cor. i, 24; 1 Pet. i, 20.

⁸ As in matters of speculation and philosophical inquiry, the only judge of what is right or wrong is reason and experience; so, in matters either of human testimony or divine revelation, the only certain rule of truth is the testimony of the revelation itself. Clark's Scripture Doctrine of the Trinity, Introduction.

⁹ 1 John iii, 2.

every particular of God's appointments doth conspire to connect and make up the one universal design of Him, of whom the whole family of the Heavens and the Earth is named;¹ yet nothing can be more commendable in us, than to believe and confess, that both great and marvellous are thy works, LORD GOD ALMIGHTY! and just and true are thy ways, thou King of saints.²

A consequence of the Fall, I apprehend, must have been, that a depravity of the mind of man gradually arose, and was occasioned by it. God, at first, made man upright, jashar, not inclined to any evil;³ but man was, when thus upright, to be immortal.⁴ After the transgression, our first parents were to die: they had now, in the body, what would by degrees bring them to decline, and, in the end, effect their dissolution; and a body, become, thus corruptible, presseth down the soul;⁵

prægravat una
Atque affigit humo divinæ particulam auræ.

HOR.

It will introduce affections grosser and less pure; irregular and distempered; other than they would have known, had they never been incumbered with such a decaying tabernacle. The sages of the heathen world would readily have admitted this truth. St. Paul himself, in describing the state of the unregenerate man, speaking in this person, saith, I know that in me, that is, in my flesh, dwelleth no good thing; for to will is present with me, but how to perform that which is good, I find not; but the evil, which I would not, that I do.⁶ This is hardly more express than Plato;⁷ who says, "As long as we have the body, and our soul is intermixed with such an evil, we shall never satisfactorily possess ourselves even of what we desire." The philosopher, we see, and others who followed him, would readily have allowed, that it is of the utmost consequence to a divine spirit, whether it be joined to a mortal or an immortal body.⁸ Our first parents might have had in the heart, in that which was not corruptible,⁹ what might render them superior in affections and inclinations to

¹ Ephes. iii, 15:

Man, who here seems principal alone,
Perhaps acts second to some sphere unknown,
Touches some wheel, or verges to some goal:
'Tis but a part we see, and not a whole.

POPE.

² Rev. xv, 3.

³ Sup. 73, &c.

⁴ Vide quæ sup.

⁵ Wisdom ix, 15.

⁶ Rom. vii, 18, 19.

⁷ Έως αν το σωμα βλαβηται, και συγκαταρτισται η ψυχη η ψυχη μετα τα τοιαυτα κακη, ου μικροτε κτισσιμενα ιναται ου επιδουμινα. Plat. in Phæd.

⁸ Ipse animi, magni est, quali in corpore, locati sint—Tanta vis est ad habitum mentis in iis, quæ gignuntur in corpore. Cic. in Tusc. Disputat. lib i, c. 33.

⁹ See 1 Pet. iii, 4.

what naturally became their appetites, when a bondage of corruption began to work in them, a nature below the liberty of the sons of God.¹ We may, herein, easily reconcile the Scriptures with true philosophy; for the body and the soul are so intimately joined in our composition, that both must have a considerable influence, the one upon the other; and having herein intimated what our first parents now became, it is obvious, that, as was the tree, such must be the branches; that, henceforth there would be 'no natural descendant from these now mortals, who would not have in him a sensuality of nature,'² such as must render it very reasonable, not only to a master in Israel,³ but to any one, who duly estimates the composition of man, admit what our Saviour argued, namely, that we must be born again, if we would see the kingdom of God.⁴ Our first parents now came to have, and their descendants to be born to, that duplicity of nature elegantly described by Plato,⁵ as well considered by St. Paul.⁶ Mankind came now to have inclinations arising from the body; which would often run contrary to the better sense of the mind; and give every one the unhappiness to know of himself in looking back upon his life, that he had done, thought, and said, so many things below what his own mind and sentiments would tell him ought and might have been his conduct,⁷ as to see in himself as clearly as in a glass, that we greatly want to be delivered from a body of sin.⁸ In this point, therefore, reason and revelation agree, and bear testimony to one another; that we are, in fact, imperfect, not only in our knowledge, but still more imperfect, in oftentimes having a will not to act so well as we know it to be our duty. The history of Moses proceeds to show this in the actions of men; particularly, that before Adam came to be a hundred and thirty years old, evil

¹ See Romans viii, 21. Φαμεν δι τούτο, ἀλλοθεν μίμνας μὴ γὰρ ἡμεῖς ἀσυχίας παύειν το σωμα—ἰμποδίζουσι ἡμῶν τῇ τε ὄντος θανάτῳ ἔρωται τι καὶ ἐπιθυμῶν καὶ φόβῳ καὶ εἰδωλῶν παρτοβάσαν, καὶ φλυαρίας ἱμετιμπλησι ὅμας πολλὰς· ὥς το λεγομενοι ὡς ἀλλοθεν τῷ ὄντι ὑπ' αὐτῆς αὐτὴ φρονεῖται ἡμεῖς ἔγγρηγνται οὐδατοσι αὐτῶν. Plato ubi sup.

² The XXXIX Articles: see Art. ix.

³ See John iii, 10.

⁴ Ver. 3.

⁵ Διπλῆς δι οὐσης τῆς ἀνθρώπου φύσεως, τὸ πρῶτον εἰν γένος τῶντων, ὃ καὶ ἐκείνα καλλίστω ἀνὴρ ὅποτε δι σωμασιν ἐμφυτευθῶν, ἐξ ἀνάγκης καὶ το μὴ προσι, το δι αἰσῶν τε σωμασιν αὐτοῦ, πρῶτον μὴ αἰσθῶσι ἀναγκασί εἰν μὴαι πασὶν ἑκὼ βῆσιον παθῶματων ἐμφυτοῦ γρηγνῶναι αὐτοῦν δι ἰδὼν καὶ λυτῇ μῆμεγμῶν ἔρωτα· πρὸς δι τούτοις φόβῳ καὶ θυμῶν, ὅσα τι ἰπορῖνα αὐτῆς καὶ ὅποσα ἵνατῶν παρῶν δῶσῶντα· ὅν εἰ μὴ κρατῶσαι, ἵν διαβῶσιντο, κρατῶντες δι ἀδῶν. Plato in Timæo.

⁶ Rom. vii, 23.

⁷ 1 Kings viii, 46; James iii, 2; 1 John i, 8.

⁸ Αὐτὰρ ἀνὴρ ἀγαθός, τότε μὴ κακός, ἀλλοτὶ δ' ἰσθλός.

γινώσκει μὴ ἀνδρᾷ ἀγαθῷ χαλεπὸν ἀλλοθεν, οἷον τι μὴ τοῖ ἐπὶ γὰ χρόνοι τῶν γινώσκων δι διαμῶν ἢ ταῦτα τῇ ἑξῆς, καὶ εἶναι ἀγαθῷ—ἰδῶνται καὶ αὐτὸ ἀνθρώπων, ἀλλὰ θῶς δι μῶσις τούτο ἔχει το γῶμα. Plat. in Protag.

⁸ See Rom. vii, 24.

had got such an ascendant, where it had been indulged,⁹ that one of Adam's children became a murderer and slew his brother.¹

But Moses mentions one particular more, which I have not considered. He tells us, *unto Adam also, and to his wife, did the Lord God make coats of skins, and clothed them.*² I would observe, 1. That the word, which we render skins, is in the singular number, a skin,³ not skins, in the plural; and that we have no reason, from the Hebrew text, to put in the particle of. The verse verbally translated is, *and the Lord God made a skin coat for the man and his wife, and clothed them.*⁴ The fact was; God now appointed them to use the skin of a beast for clothing, not, I apprehend, manufactured into coats; improvements of this sort, undoubtedly, were afterwards introduced. Our first parents did no more than put about them the skin of some beast, as we read the early inhabitants of other countries, and in later ages of the world, did,⁵ whenever they wanted such a clothing. 2. Although the verse we are now treating stands prior to God's putting Adam and Eve out of the garden, and the end of the verse says, that God clothed them; yet I do not conceive that Moses here hints that God instantly clothed them and sent them into the world. The Hebrew word, vejalbasham, and clothed them,⁶ is the future tense, with vau prefixed; which prefix the grammarians observe, turns such future tense into a perfect, or to speak the thing treated of as being actually done. I may observe, that all the verbs used in this and the verses following, he made coats; clothed them; sent them forth; drove out the man; are thus in the future tense with vau.⁷ May we not understand the reason of the piece of grammar just above hinted? Some ancient writers imagine, that our first parents were permitted to stay some little time in the garden before they were put out of it into the world;⁸

⁹ Cain, undoubtedly, did not come at once to that outrageous wickedness of killing his brother. He had been a bad man before in many evil actions; which Moses hints in what he records of God expostulating with Cain, Gen. iv, 7. And the apostle farther observes it in 1 John iii, 12. Cain—slew his brother. And wherefore slew he him? Because his own works were evil, and his brother's righteous.

¹ Gen. iv.

² Chap. iii, 21.

³ עור, pellis.

⁴ The Hebrew words of the text are,

וַיַּעַשׂ יְהוָה אֱלֹהִים לְאָדָם וּלְאִשְׁתּוֹ כִּתְיֹת tunicas et mulieri ejus Adamo Deus Dominus et fecit וּלְבָשָׁם עָר et amicitivit eos. pellem

⁵ ἡ γὰρ τοῦ Ἰὼν ἀρχὴ γενέσθαι ἐκ τῶν ἀνθρώπων—ἀνθρώπος τῆς δι' ὅρας τοῦ ἡμεῶν ἀναστάσεως μοῦς ἡμεῶν. Diodor. Sic. lib. i, p. 14.

—uti

Pellibus, et corpus spoliis vestire ferarum.

LUCRET. lib. v.

⁶ וּלְבָשָׁם

⁷ וַיַּעַשׂ וַיִּשְׁלַח וַיִּדְרֹשׁ וַיִּשְׁלַח וַיִּדְרֹשׁ

⁸ ἡμεῶν τῆς ἀπαράμης, ὡς φησὶ, μετα τὴν ἀπαράμης τοῦ ἡμεῶν τῆς ἀπαράμης.
Syncl. p. 8.

may not these future tenses, with the vau prefixed, hint something of this sort? The clothing them, the sending them out of the garden, &c. were things absolutely and actually done; but some process of time, to instruct and prepare them for it, might be taken up, before it was completed; and may not the future tenses, with vau prefixed, hint this? The things spoken of had their execution; but not instantly at once; but proceeded gradually to be effected, as God thought fit to have them dispatched. If we may take them in this sense, we shall easily find an answer, 3. To what is or may be queried upon the occasion; how should our first parents get possession of the skins of beasts, and make them fit for the uses they were to make of them? I answer; I apprehend, God at this time appointed sacrifices;⁹ and if so, as he afterwards gave Moses directions for the passover, and for other institutions of the Jewish law;¹ so he now might give our first parents such instructions as they must have wanted, and which might suggest all they wanted to know upon the occasion now before them. However, I must remark, in general, that we consider things with a judgment dull and unobserving, if we can allow the mind of man no invention, but as we can trace and mark out the steps which lead to it. How Tubal Cain came to find out brass and iron, and the ways of working them; or how Jubal became² a master of music, is not to be investigated in this manner. Our minds are too lively to be accounted for by such stated deductions. Incidental sentiments often stir in us, we know not whence nor how; and lead us frequently to consequences as unexpected. They open to us trials and experiments, which produce what we had no thought of; even whilst we were pursuing them; and many times, before we are aware, throw us upon what we had no intention or even notion of seeking. The best heathen writers were ready to acknowledge, that the rise of the useful and important inventions of their lives³ had been from God; and we can never reason about these things, but we shall find it the best philosophy, as well as religion, not only to acknowledge every good and perfect gift,⁴ in all our endowments, as having come down from HIM, in whom we live, move, and have our being,⁵ ——— παντη δε Διος πεχηρημεθα παντες.

ARATUS.

but, He also, whose incorruptible spirit is in all things,⁶ is often the author of many happy turns of our mind, which lead us, in what we are apt to call fortunate thoughts, unto great and useful discoveries; which, if we had been without ⁹ See Connect. vol. i, b. ii, p. 72.

¹ See Exod. xii, &c.

² Plato in Polit.

³ Acts xvii, 28.

⁴ Gen. iv.

⁵ James i, 17.

⁶ Wisdom xii, 1.

Him in the world, might never have been made or conceived by us. But, 4. I cannot apprehend that our first parents had been so unthinking, that common sense would not have led them, after a very little experience of their now condition, both to know it decent to have, and to invent a covering for themselves. What they did, when their fears alarmed them to wish to hide themselves from God,⁷ may suggest, what they naturally would have done, to be clothed in the sight of one another. Wreaths of greens, foliages, and flowers, might have been variously combined to make them ornamental habits; and we may indulge our imagination in saying, that even Solomon in all his glory might not be arrayed, beyond what Eve, after a little trial and experience, might be able to decorate herself in these. The climate likewise wherein they lived might perhaps be such, that a clothing of this nature might be sometimes more agreeable, than to be always in a closer and warmer covering. But if it be considered, how soon leaves and flowers would fade away; that a dress of long endurance could not be had from these materials; and that the labour and other cares of their lives would not admit them to lay out all their time in this one particular; not to say, that a covering of this sort might not serve in all weathers, but at some seasons, at least, a better shelter must have been a happy and necessary accommodation; leaving our first parents to add any ornament they should like, as circumstances might admit; the provision which God was pleased to make for them was such, that we cannot see how they could continue to live long without it.

I have now carried this undertaking to the utmost extent, which I proposed to give it. It contains, I think, an account of all that Moses has related of the Creation and Fall of Man. It will perhaps be asked, did God only clothe them? Was his care such as to provide for them in this lesser, and did he not instruct them in greater and more important matters? I answer, undoubtedly he did; and, I apprehend, that both Moses suggested, and subsequent Scriptures confirm it, that God gave them a method for repentance and obtaining pardon of their sins; and, some time before Adam died, set before them hopes of another world. But to proceed in treating of these, would be to begin a new subject. All I proposed herein, was to examine what Moses has said concerning the Creation and Fall, and what possible objections may be made to his narration. I think I have omitted none of any moment; for of some, which are pretended, surely, consistently with the greatest candour, we may say, that they need not be mentioned, being too frivolous to want an answer. One, at least, of this kind I find in Dr. Burnet; who asks, "What if Adam had not sinned? could all his descendants have come from all parts of the world, in all ages, to eat of the one tree of life, planted in the garden of Eden? or could this one tree have been sufficient for all times, and for all nations?"⁸ It is most obvious, 1. That, supposing Adam had persevered to live according to the word of God, until he should have been commanded to eat of the tree of life, we cannot say whether, as now in Adam all have died, in such case, all mankind descended of immortal parents would not have been immortal. Or, 2. It must be evident, that as God knew beforehand, what events would happen in all things; it is undeniable, that he might foresee, when, and how long it would be before our first parents would transgress; and that the appointments he had made would be sufficient for what would be the duration of that state of mankind for which they were appointed. 3. That if mankind had not fallen, but proceeded to walk with God according to his laws, until they had become so instructed in all knowledge, and rooted in all truth, as never to swerve from it; if the partaking of some sign of immortality had been thought fit to be commanded for them, in using it to walk humbly with God,⁹ not arrogating immortality to themselves as their own; but receiving it, as it was, indeed, his gift; as we have considered, that the tree of life had no innate virtue in itself to give life,¹ but could be of moment only, as it was the commandment of God; so God might, as men multiplied and dispersed, have at sundry times, and in divers manners, given other commands, other signs for this purpose, as necessary and beneficial, just as he should be pleased by his word to appoint, according to what he saw most fit for distant and different parts of the world, in the counsel of his own will.

⁷ Gen. iii, 10.

I am aware that some may treat it as a topic of ridicule, to imagine that God made man so weak a creature as to want his Creator at every turn an admonisher at his elbow.² But we may readily reply, that to dress a proposition in ludicrous terms, and then laugh at it, is laughing at the dress we give it; but does not really affect what ought not to be treated with so fanciful a levity. To consider rationally the order and gradation of God's works, will, I think, abundantly show us, that man ought to be,³ as fact and experience agree to testify that he really is, a creature higher than, and above the blinder instinct of animal life. But to say hereupon, that man was made so perfect, as to want no guidance but his own, is a step ⁸ Præterea, si ex una arbore, vel ipsius fructu, perpensisset longævitas vel immortalitas hominum, quid si non peccasset Adamus? Qui potuissent ipsius posterius per totum terrarum orbem diffusi fauctus repetere ex hoc horto, vel ab hac arbore? aut qui potuissent sufficere toti humano generi unius arboris proventus? Archæol. p. 292.

⁹ Micah vi, 8.

² Dr. Middleton's Inquiry, p. 102.

¹ Vide quæ sup.

³ See above, chap. vi.

at once to a height of wisdom, which may be many ranks above us in the intellectual world.⁴ That there is a prodigious difference, between the abilities of even different men, is most apparent; and it is most evidently reasonable, that it should be so; that in the progressive order of each rank of being above that which is beneath it, some should descend almost to the species of those next below them, as others may, on the other hand, be raised to a near approach unto the orb above them. There may be, there ought to be, and there are, some men, such, that it were to be wished they never would act without an admonisher at their elbow. But, on the contrary, to say of the most intelligent of men, of those who have the most exalted human understanding, that they have a self-sufficiency of wisdom, above all want of superior direction, is — to think beyond mankind.

Porr.

It is to think ourselves possessed of powers, which are beyond that line, which is our boundary; our nature does not reach to this height:

Our reason raise o'er instinct as you can;
In this 'tis God directs; in that, but man.

Porr.

In our degree we have real perfections both of body and mind; the body has its eye, the mind its understanding; both which are of excellent use and direction: but to say of either, that they are so perfect as not in any point to want aid, or assistance, is insupportable and absurd. The eye of the body is able, in many cases, intuitively

— curvo dignoscere rectum —

Hoz.

to distinguish a straight line from a crooked; but shall we say of any man, that he has so sharp and unerring a sight (however some may excel others in this particular,) as to be able, without line, rule, or measure, by his eye alone, to raise a various fabric, just, straight, upright, and regular in all true dimensions? It is the same with the understanding, the eye of the mind: we may be able, by our reason, to deduce and judge aright of many moral duties; but if we say of the best human reason, that it ever did, without any rule but its own direction, raise the true fabric of all moral virtue;⁵

⁴ Quartus autem gradus, et altissimus est, eorum qui natura boni sapientesque gignuntur; quibus a principio innascitur ratio recta constansque, quæ supra hominem putanda est, Deoque tribuenda. Cic. de Nat. Deor. lib. ii, c. 13.

⁵ Ut sine ullo errore dijudicare possimus, siquando cum illo, quod honestum intelligimus, pugnare id videbitur, quod appellamus utile, formula quædam constituenda est: quam si sequemur in comparatione rerum, ab officio nunquam recedemus. Cic. de Offic. lib. iii, c. 4.

we must produce something to warrant such assertion, beyond what either the ancient inquirers, or our modern reasoners, have been able to evince. The wisest masters of the Greek learning could not fix the criterion by which they might know what was only human sentiment, and what more surely was real truth.⁶ The Roman philosophy was as indeterminate; the quid est virtus—the very exemplar honesti, was what they were not able indisputably to ascertain.⁷ They wanted some test, whereby they might settle, how to distinguish in the several duties of life, wherein reason and right reason might happen to differ from one another.⁸ And it is as remarkable of all our modern moralists,⁹ that, however they show a great want of precision, of determinate and indisputable direction each in one another's rule or standard, they are every one at last exactly as deficient in their own.¹

The word of God is truth;² which was to have been the rule of truth in all moral and religious duty, to our first parents and to their descendants: and a good understanding would have prevailed amongst them, if they had carefully acted according to its direction.³ Through the precepts of God, as they more and more improved in knowledge, they would have seen the error of every false way: and, in time, have been able to delineate the true religion of our nature according to it. But, although God gave them his instructions, we must not represent, that he was minutely at their elbow, to leave them in nothing to themselves, in reason to consider things; for Moses in nowise describes them in this manner. God gave our first parents one command, to be a rule for them, how they were to walk humbly with him.⁴ He gave them one more to be the foundation of their relative duty to one another,⁵ and he afterwards gave like precepts in other particulars. If now they had made these their faith; to receive and believe them, and to square their lives according to them; herein they would have had an abundant direction, and would not have erred, if they would not vary and ⁶ Εἰ μὴ γὰρ καὶ διὰ ἀλλοιῶν ὅσων δυο γὰρ. Plato in Timæo. θεοὶ αὐτοὶ αὐτοὶ δοξαζέσθαι καὶ ποιεῖν καὶ ἀλλοιῶν, ποιεῖν δὲ καὶ ἑαυτῶν. Plato in Theætet.

⁷ Sentit domus uniuscujusque, sentit forum, sentit curia, campi, socii, provincie, ut quemadmodum ratione, recte fiat, sic ratione peccetur. Cic. de Nat. Deor. lib. iii, c. 27. The author of the book of Wisdom suggests the difference. We may reason, but not aright. Wisdom ii, 1.

⁸ The test wanted is, by what shall we know when we reason aright, and when not? "A Deo," says the disputant in Tully, "rationem habemus, bonam aut non bonam a nobis." Cic. de Nat. Deor. lib. iii. We want a standard whereby to judge when we make our reason the one, and when the other.

⁹ Mr. Brown, in his very excellent Essay on the Motives to Virtue, rightly observes, that our modern moralists have said little more than what might be transcribed from the old Greek philosophers, and from Tully, after them, p. 122.

¹ See Mr. Brown's Essay.

² Psalm cxix, 142; John xvii, 17.

³ Psalm cxi, 10; cxix, 104.

⁴ Micah vi, 8; Gen. ii, 17.

⁵ Ver. 24.

decline from it. To have added knowledge to their faith, as the incidents arose, which might afford them instruction, would have been their reasonable duty, as it is ours;⁶ and a great field for them herein to exercise themselves must have opened daily unto them. For we cannot suppose that they were so insensible, as to think nothing to be their duty, but barely to observe literally the points commanded them, and no more. They were to see, and would see every thing to be wrong, which would make their lives run counter to the intention of what was directed. The being forbidden to eat of one particular tree, enjoined our first parents not only to abstain from the fruit of a tree;⁷ but in every thing, whenever and wherein soever God commanded, they were to obey his voice; as the being obliged never to separate from one another⁸ must show, that it was their duty to consider, and be rationally such in their conduct, as to live suitably to this indissoluble tie; that what God had made the indispensable condition, they should for themselves make the real happiness of their life. Thus it can in nowise be said, that revelation hath superseded reason; but that, from the beginning, it hath been no more than the necessary aid, without which human nature could not be made perfect. It was given to be a lamp to our feet, and a light to our paths; to give us what, in Tully's language, we might say are the formulæ,⁹ to mark to us the points, which, if we had been made creatures of a higher intellect, we might have intuitively seen for ourselves, in looking into the nature of things. But, if they had not been given to such creatures as we are, if we had nothing to direct our judgment but the fruits of the tree of our own knowledge of good and evil, we should, not only from the present bias of our appetites, but from (what man was subject to from the beginning) mistakes of understanding, not have found or pursued, so as to be such as we ought, in this world; or be able justly to satisfy ourselves, how we might be meet for a better.

⁶ 2 Peter i, 5.

⁷ Were we to conceive that our first parents could have imagined, that, if they but abstained from eating of the tree, they duly observed the law of God, though in other points they did not live according to the directions of their Maker; it is evident, that they would herein have kept only the form of their religion, without admitting its power and influence. But nothing can be more contrary to reason than this, or more severely reprimanded in the holy Scriptures, both of the Old and New Testament.

⁸ Gen. ii, 24.

⁹ Jura, formulæ de omnibus rebus constitutæ, nequis aut in genere injuriæ, aut in ratione actionis errare possit. Cic. Orat. pro Q. Roscio Comædo.

A SUPPLEMENT

TO

TO THE PRECEDING DISSERTATION.

THOUGH the preceding hypothesis of Dr. Shuckford, concerning The Creation and Fall of Man, is supported with considerable ingenuity and learning, yet it is so very discordant from generally received and long established opinions, that there is some reason to fear that most readers will hesitate to receive it, as having its foundation in reason and truth.

To represent man, when just coming from the hand of his all-perfect Creator, as little better than the most uncultivated savage; knowing little or nothing of his being and its end, and having almost every thing to learn from the slow progress of experience; ill accords with the opinions of almost all religious people, on the original state and perfection of man.

Foreseeing, that these particulars of the author's Creed will give but little satisfaction to many; the Editor begs leave to close the preceding Dissertation with the following extract of a Discourse by the learned Vitringa on the Tree of the Knowledge of Good and Evil. Observ. Sacr. tome ii, lib. iv, c. 12.

On the Tree of the Knowledge of Good and Evil.

THE passages, on which the present inquiry is founded, are in the second chapter of Genesis, ver. 9, 17. Out of the ground made the LORD GOD to grow every tree, that is pleasant to the sight, and good for food: the tree of life also in the midst of the garden: and the tree of knowledge of good and evil—and the LORD GOD commanded the man, saying, of the tree of the knowledge of good and evil thou shalt not eat of it; for in the day that thou eatest thereof thou shalt surely die.

We propose to show why this tree was denominated the tree of the knowledge of good and evil; and what was the design of prohibiting the use of it to our first parents.

The current opinion, respecting the first of these points, is, that the tree received its denomination from the event; because our first parents, having fallen in consequence of eating of its fruit, knew, by experience, the good which they had lost, and the evil which they had incurred.

This interpretation, though patronized by great names, and maintained by able pens, labours under insuperable difficulty: and that, whether we suppose the tree to have been so called by God himself before the issue, or by Moses after it. The difficulties are these:

I. The Hebrew phrase, דעת טוב ורע, i. e. “knowledge of good and evil,” cannot well bear such a construction. “To know good and evil,” in the style of the Scripture, is to understand the nature of good and evil, of right and wrong; and, judging accurately concerning them, to choose the one and shun the other. In this lies the force of the tempter’s argument to the woman, “Ye shall be as God, יאֱלֹהִים; knowing good and evil.” God cannot know evil by experience; and the Devil was not such a fool as to think of seducing our parents by assuring them, that misery would be the reward of compliance. So afterwards, in that pathetic lamentation, not sarcastic jeer, over the poor apostates: “Behold the man (who) was (היה) as one of us, to know good and evil.”¹ Here man is said to have known good and evil before his fall. After it, he knew evil by experience, but not good; and his faculty of judging correctly concerning both was woefully perverted. He knew good and evil as God knows them; not by experiment surely, but by a clear perception of their natures, for it is thus only that God can know evil; and as it is absurd and blasphemous to imagine, that man, by plunging himself into sin, could become like God, his knowledge of good and evil must have been possessed in the state of innocence, and consequently could not consist in the experience of both.

¹ Gen. iii, 22. Vide Boston, Tractatus Stigmologicus, p. 30, 31.

If any doubt remain, as to the scriptural use of the phrase, it will probably be removed by a passage in Deuteronomy, chap. i, ver. 39. "Your little ones, which ye said should be a prey, and your children, which in that day had no knowledge between" or of "good and evil, they shall go in thither." Little children do actually experience good and evil; but they have no discriminating acquaintance with the nature of either; they can form no judgment on the subject, so as to choose the one and refuse the other. Such being the sense of the expression to "know good and evil," it is evident, that the tree in question was not denominated from its reference to the Fall of Man.

II. If we now repair to the fact, we shall strengthen our interpretation.

It is not true, then, that man, fallen from his state of integrity and blessedness into a state of sin and misery, did or could by such experience know good. With evil, indeed, he acquired a practical acquaintance, as he had previously known it only in theory. But how he should learn good from being thrust headlong into the depths of calamity, being both excluded and alienated by sin from the love and fellowship of God, and from all real joy, is most inconceivable! "By contrast," you will say, "his misery taught him the value of the good which he had forfeited." Certainly. But this solution supposes, that he did not know good when he was in full possession of it; and it is inconsistent with the idea of experience; for to learn a thing by experience implies the presence of the thing when the experiment is made. But the good was now gone, and therefore could not be a subject of experience.

Let us go on to ask, what end was to be gained by naming the tree from the event? Did the Most High God design to reveal to man, by such an anticipation, his approaching crime and wretchedness? But how does it accord with the divine wisdom to appoint a tree as the test of his obedience, and to proclaim, in the very appellation of the tree, his future disobedience, and its dire effects? Shall we say, that he did not understand the meaning of the appellation? With what view was it bestowed, then? To the Creator it was of no use; for man's sake it must have been given. But how for man's sake, if its sense was withheld from him? Will it be said, on the other hand, that the name was not annexed to the tree, till man had discovered, by his fall, the relation which it bore to his condition and prospects? But still, what benefit could accrue from his learning, when his probation was over, that his state had been prefigured by the name of the tree?

It appears, then, that the tree was not denominated from the event; and that the "knowledge of good and evil" is not such a knowledge as arises from experience.

We must look for something more satisfactory.

To know good and evil does in truth denote that faculty of judgment, by which a rational being distinguishes good from evil, choosing the former and rejecting the latter: that which Paul styles διακριτικὴν κατὰ τὸ καλὸν καὶ κακόν,² the discerning between good and evil. Assuming this as having been proved before, there are only two reasons for the denomination of the tree. Either it was endued with some physical virtue of sharpening the powers of man in discriminating between good and evil; or it was placed in Paradise, not as a physical, but moral cause of that knowledge, warning him to avoid death, and the source of death, which were figured by that tree; and to cleave to life, the opposite of death.

The first of these, although it has amused some speculative minds, is hardly tenable. For it is not easy to see why the Creator should forbid the use of a tree, to which he had imparted the quality of perfecting man's faculty of judging; nor how, upon this supposition, he could be free from the imputation of tempting his creature to sin, by the very means, which he had selected as a criterion of duty; nor, finally, how the taste of a tree, possessing such singular virtue, should have produced, in our beguiled parents, an effect the reverse of its own qualities! For, if it had the intrinsic charm of enlarging their knowledge and improving their faculties, then the short way to perfection would have been sinning against God! These things it surpasses all the limits of sobriety to affirm; and our conclusion necessarily is, that the tree of "the knowledge of good and evil" was so called, because, from the divine institution, it was a moral cause of that knowledge, i. e. it was a visible, familiar, and permanent lesson, by which man was not only admonished of the eternal distinction between good and evil, but was put upon his guard as to the quarter from which alone evil could assail him. This will receive additional light from the Second part of our inquiry, which relates to the design of prohibiting the use of the tree to our first parents.

Regarding that modesty, which ought to limit our researches into the divine plans, and obeying the general dictates of scripture and reason, we may perceive, that the prohibition answered the three-fold purpose of trial, of instruction, and of a sacramental pledge.

² Heb. v, 14.

That man should love and obey God, would spontaneously demonstrate itself to his pure conscience and his sound intelligence. But in that first age of his being, there could hardly exist an occasion of proving his obedience and love, without the intervention of a positive precept. Transgression of those commandments, which afterwards were written on the two tables of the moral law, was either physically or morally impossible: and yet it was in itself fit, and for the ends of moral government indispensable, that man's devotedness to his God should be brought, even in his best estate, to some direct and effectual test. All the orders of rational beings, of whom the Scriptures give any account, were subjected, at their creation to probationary law: but in what manner a state of probation could exist without a positive precept is inconceivable. Nothing else could afford an opportunity of evincing submission to the divine authority, because nothing else could present to holy creatures a case of collision between their will and the will of their God. It is doubtful whether, without some such prohibition as that relating to the forbidden tree, the Devil, sapient as he was, could have rendered a temptation to sin intelligible to our first parents. For, as nothing else was required of them but what their own pure nature led them instinctively to do, they could have no sense of restraint. In every thing else, the will of God coincided with their own propensities; so that, throughout the whole range of their gratifications, there was not to be found either the occasion or the matter of trespass. Some positive statute, therefore, which might control their will in a given instance, was requisite to produce and preserve in their minds the sense of their dependence upon God, and his authority over them, without which his moral government could have no place. The very fact, of their being under moral government, seems to have demanded some positive test of their loyalty; as the very fact, of their being rational creatures, supposes them to have been subjects of such a government. The contrary supposition is mere atheism. The propriety, therefore, of a positive test of their obedience, resulted from their accountable nature. And the more simple this test was in itself, and the more easy the duty which it prescribed, the more conspicuously was the benignity of their God revealed, and the more inexcusable was their own rebellion. What simpler test could they have chosen, than abstinence from a particular tree, however "good for food and pleasant to the eyes?" What duty could be of easier performance, seeing it did not intrench upon a single enjoyment; as they were surrounded with similar enjoyments, the LORD God having made "to grow, every tree that is pleasant to the sight, and good for food?" What could be more condescending, on his part, than the appointment of so delightful a probation? And what more wanton, more thankless, or more provoking on theirs, than the violation of its terms?

Disobedience under such circumstances, was of an aggravated sort: but it will appear still more flagrant, from the consideration, that this very tree, whose touch was death, was fraught with salutary instruction. Placed in the midst of the garden, and often meeting the eyes of our first parents, it could hardly fail to teach them such truths as these:—

That God is the lord of all things; and, consequently, that man's dominion was neither absolute nor independent; that, in the enjoyment of God alone is the satisfying good of man; that, in judging of good and evil, man is not to be directed by his own reason or pleasure, but by the revealed will of God; that a man had not yet arrived at his highest happiness, but was bound to expect and desire a more perfect state, yet in that way alone which God had appointed; that, if he would escape death, he must avoid the cause of it, i. e. sin, or the breaking out of his desires beyond those limits which God had assigned to them. How much farther the unclouded mind of the first man might have carried his reflections on the forbidden tree, to what sublime conceptions of the divine nature, and works, and providence, it might have led him, we, in our shattered state, with our discordant affections and obscure lights, are poorly qualified to judge. Yet, disabled as we are, by the Fall, from taking such rapid, capacious, and elevating views of whatever is fair, and good, and magnificent in the creature and the Creator, as were competent to a sinless being, we can discern enough to persuade us, that the tree of knowledge of good and evil must have been, to innocent man, a rich source of intellectual improvement and moral joy.

The third use of the tree of knowledge of good and evil was that of a sacramental pledge.

Our first parents were placed, not only under the general obligations of moral law, but under a peculiar moral constitution, which the sovereign goodness of God superadded to their condition as accountable creatures. This constitution is ordinarily termed the covenant of works; by which, in the event of their adhering to the terms of their probation, the divine faithfulness was engaged to confer on themselves and on their posterity an immortality of bliss. But, in the event of their failure, that same faithfulness was engaged to subject them and their progeny to the penalty of the law. It will be perceived, that punishment, upon the commission of sin, was a matter of course. For, that a creature should rise up in rebellion against the Creator, and suffer no inconvenience on account of his crime, is a contradiction, if not in words, yet certainly in things. Whereas the promise of eternal life was purely gratuitous; no creature having a right to demand more than this, that so long as he continues obedient he shall not be miserable. Nor can any good reason be assigned, why the Most High God, if it so pleased him, may not create rational beings for a temporary existence only, and, when his purposes are fulfilled, remand them back again to nothing. The promise, therefore, of eternal life, converted the law of obedience into a pacific covenant, of which the tree of life and the tree of knowledge were the two sacraments; the former being a visible document of God's faithfulness to his promise, and the latter a visible document of his faithfulness to his threatening. And thus the assurance of life or death being exhibited to our first parents by sensible signs, they were constantly admonished of the interest staked in their hands, and of the infinitely happy or horrible issue of their probationary state.³

³ See the Christian's Magazine, New York, 1807, p. 67.

INDEX.

The Numerals, i, ii, iii, iv, refer to the Volumes, and the Arabic Figures to the Pages.

A.

AARON appointed to accompany Moses to Pharaoh, ii, 243. With Hur, holds up the hands of Moses in the battle against Amalek, iii, 42. Permitted to see the God of Israel, 49. Makes the Israelites an idol, 89. Mitigation of his offence on that occasion, 91. Consecrated to the priest's office, 114. His behaviour on the death of Nadab and Abihu, ib. With Miriam, opposes Moses, 120. Priesthood confirmed to him by a miracle, 124. His death on Mount Hor, 165.

Abel killed, i, 35. Nature and design of the sacrifice offered by him, iv, 48.

Abihu, his offence and death, iii, 114.

Abilities of understanding, ought to be different in different men, iv, 204.

Abimelech, king of the Philistines, makes a covenant with Abraham, ii, 58.

Sole proprietor of the land in his kingdom, 88.

Abiram, with Korah and Dathan, his rebellion, iii, 123.

Abraham, where his ancestors lived, i, 157. Date of his birth, 168. Left Ur to go to Haran, ib. Removed into Canaan, 168. Went into Egypt, ib.

His religion, 172. Returns into Canaan, ii, 49. Separates from Lot, 50.

Whom he rescues from captivity, 51. Receives the promise of a son, 52,

53. Goes into Philistia, 55. Defence of his conduct in sending away Ishmael, 56. Enters into a covenant with Abimelech, 58. Required to offer up his son Isaac, ib. Marries Keturah, 62. Accounts given of him by the profane writers, ib. His contemporaries in the heathen nations, 66.

He and his descendants worshipped two distinct divine persons, 244, 253.

Mistakes of his contemporaries concerning him, 283.

Achan, his transgression and death, iii, 225.

Acrisius makes laws for the council of the Amphictyones, ii, 188.

Actæus, king of Attica, ii, 166.

- Adam, whereof made, iv, 70. Where placed, ib. What immediate command he received from God, ib. Called to name the creatures, 71. Instantly understood the meaning of God's voice, how, 73. Did not at first make long soliloquies, 76. Did not name the creatures all at one time, 84. When first taught to use sounds of his own for the names of things, 85. Learned the use of words by being called to name the creatures, ib. Had no innate language, ib. Named the woman, 91. Did not make the reflection, that the man and his wife were inseparably to live together, ib. His first day not a day of hurry and confusion, ib. When he began to think, did not instantly abound in a variety of conceptions, 92. Placed at first amongst a few plain objects, ib. Heard at first from God nothing but what was plain and intelligible, ib. How he began to make words, 93. The state of his original knowledge, 97. Not endowed with a sudden apprehension of the nature of the living creatures, ib. Had no such knowledge of the animal world as Milton supposes, ib. Had no innate knowledge of God or himself, 98. Not a philosopher, ib. Had no innate science, ib. Nor innate sentiments of morality, ib. All his ideas from sensation and reflection, 99. Knew no more of God than what he had seen or heard could occasion him to think of him, ib. Had only a capacity of attaining just notions of his duty, 100. Had no innate astromy, ib. Was created in the image of God, what meant by that expression, 102. Not endowed with an unerring understanding, 106. His capacity quick and lively, ib. Had all the powers of a sound mind, ib. Sufficiently endowed, if he would have kept God's commandments, 116. Having done the will of God, might, by the tree of life, have lived for ever, 120. Did not sin against God immediately after his creation, 142. With Eve, at the time she eat of the forbidden fruit, 145. Not superior to Eve in understanding, to reject the temptation, 146. Afraid of God because naked, why, 164. Not at first sensible of God's omnipresence, 166. What he meant by declaring himself afraid, because naked, ib. Not appointed to die the very day he transgressed, 191. Would not have lived for ever by eating of the tree of life after his transgression, 195. By eating of the forbidden tree, did not become wise as God is wise, 196.
- Adam and Eve both created on the sixth day, iv, 67. Their first notions of things narrow and unimproved, 75. How their knowledge enlarged, ib. How they formed their first language, 76. Blessed by God on the day of their creation, 91. Did not at first understand the relation they stood in to each other, 93. Why first employed in the garden, 95. Groundless opinions of writers concerning their original knowledge, 97. Not surprised, at hearing the serpent speak, ib. Were both together on that occasion, ib. 145. Believing the serpent a proof of their ignorance, 98. Whilst they continued obedient, continued in the hand of God's counsel, 115. Their eating or not eating, in itself of no moment, but for the commandment of God, 116, &c. Did not transgress on the day of their creation, 141. Expected great advantages from their eyes being opened, 163. The tempter's promise, how fulfilled to them, ib. Their eyes not opened as they expected, ib. Wanted to hide themselves from God, 166. Did not make themselves aprons, 165. Their being naked, not meant as to their clothing, 167. Their high notions of the serpent reprehended, 170. • Knew not at first what enemy had hurt them, 173. Might, from what God said to them, reflect, that the serpent did not speak of himself, ib. Knew not the full meaning of what was said to them concerning the serpent, ib. Did not apprehend what God said concerning the serpent to belong merely to that animal, 175. Did not die immediately upon eating the forbidden fruit, 191. Could not have prevented their dying, after God's sentence, by eating of the tree of life, 195.

Adrichomius, his mistake about the situation of Seir, ii, 128.

Adversary, who seduced our first parents, iv, 147. The manner in which he was permitted to tempt them, 148.

Africanus, account of his Chronographia, iii, 140.

Age, the brazen, next the times of Jupiter, why so called, iii, 78.

Agriculture, its origin and progress, iv, 190.

Aholiab and Bezaliel build the tabernacle, iii, 110.

Aish, Hebrew word for man, its derivation, iii, 82.

Alcmena, the inscription and antiquities found in her tomb, ii, 176.

Alexander the Great obliged to prove himself a descendant of Helen, ii, 191.

His passage over the sea of Pamphylia not to be compared with that of the Israelites over the Red Sea, 280. His object in marching to the Temple of Jupiter Ammon, iii, 194.

Alphabet, not invented so early as letters, i, 144. Specimens of the ancient Samaritan, 151. Phœnician, 152. Greek, 154, 164. Latin, 157.

Amalekites, attack the Israelites, iii, 42.

Amphictyon, King of Thessaly, ii, 187. Attica, 173.

Amphictyones, council of, established by Amphictyon, ii, 187. Design of it, ib. Laws made for it by Acrisius, 188. Changes in the states which furnished its members, ib. Its constitution altered by Augustus Cæsar, 189. Place of their meeting, 190. Not two councils of that name, ib.

Analogy, runs through all the intelligences of God's creation, iv, 153.

Ananim, first king of Lower Egypt, i, 133.

Androgynæ, whence the fable of them, iv, 68, n.

Anecdote of Moses, when a child, ii, 220, n.

Animal food, when first granted to mankind, i, 72.

Animals, named by Adam, iv, 77. Not named all at one time, 84. Names of them not innate in Adam's mind, 85. Nor dictated to him by the voice of God, 86.

Antediluvian world, its chronology, i, 57, 58, 68. Number of its inhabitants, 51.

Antediluvians, Berosus's account of them, i, 41. Sanchoniatho's account of them, 42. Egyptian accounts of them, ib. Their longevity, 48. Their religion, what may be conjectured about it, 51. Their wickedness, which occasioned the flood, what, 56.

- Apollo, son of Jupiter, iii, 60. His travels and actions, 85.
- Apophis, the king of Egypt, who was drowned in the Red Sea, iii, 161.
- Appetites, not the cause of the first sin, iv, 105. Gross, arise from the corruptible body, 198.
- Appointments, God's, conspire to make up one universal design, iv, 198.
- Aprons, not made by Adam and Eve, iv, 165.
- Arabians, had not corrupted their religion in the days of Job, or of Jethro, i, 183.
- Arad, king of, attacks the Israelites, iii, 165.
- Aram, where he and his sons settled after the dispersion from Babel, i, 108.
- Ararat, mount, where situate, i, 80.
- Arbaces, probably introduced the Nabonassarean year into Media, i, 9.
- Arcas, king of Arcadia, iii, 77.
- Areopagus, origin of that court, ii, 185. Reason of its name, according to Æschylus, ib. Number of its judges not always the same, 186. Extent of its authority, 187. Its great reputation, ib.
- Argos, the rise of that kingdom, ii, 180.
- Argus, his family and genealogy, iii, 69.
- Ark of Noah, its dimensions, i, 41.
- Arphaxad, where he lived after the confusion of tongues, i, 108.
- Arsinoe, city, where situate, iii, 33.
- Arcas, who so called at the first rise of kingdoms, iii, 80.
- Ashur settled in Assyria, i, 167, 118.
- Askanez, what country he planted at the dispersion of mankind, i, 104.
- Ass, Balaam's, reproves that prophet, iii, 177. That miracle considered, 178.
- Assessment of the Israelites, how much money raised by it, iii, 110.
- Asia, or Aseth, first corrects the length of the year, i, 8; iv, 7.
- Assyrian empire from Ninus to Sardanapalus, its existence and extent considered, ii, 23.
- Astronomical observations at Babylon agree with the Scripture chronology, i, 122.
- Astronomy, the Chaldean, probably invented by Belus, i, 124. Of the ancients, not exact, 193. Its use in the ancient agriculture, ii, 77.
- Athlius, first king of Elis, ii, 181.
- Athothes, king of Egypt, contemporary with Abraham, ii, 66.
- Atlas, why said to support the heavens, ii, 181.
- Augustus Cæsar alters the constitution of the Amphictyones, ii, 189.

B.

- Babel, tower of, when begun, i, 83. How long the project of building it was continued, 103.
- Babylonia, the kingdom of Nimrod, i, 112.
- Babylonians, when they began their astronomical observations, i, 124.
- Bacchus, Grecian, fable about his birth explained, iii, 78.

- Bacchus, Indian, said to be the founder of the Indian polity, ii, 71. Not Sesostris, 72. Arguments to prove him the same person with Nosh, 74.
- Balaam, his country, where, iii, 176. His answer to the messengers of Balak, ib. The directions he received from God, ib. Wherein his fault consisted, ib. Not a magician, but a worshipper of the true God, 181. Why he sought enchantments, 182. Rebuked by his ass, 177. Dismissed by Balak with contempt, 184. His advice to the Midianites, ib. His views in giving it, ib. His circumstances and character, 185. Slain by the Israelites, 191.
- Balak, king of Moab, sends to Balaam, iii, 176.
- Balch, a city of Persia, Abraham never lived there, i, 182.
- Bashan, kingdom of, conquered by the Israelites, iii, 191.
- Beards of the Israelites, said to have turned yellow, iii, 94.
- Belesis, see Nabonassar.
- Belus, second king of Babylon, i, 118. Not the same person with Nimrod, 123. Probably invented the Chaldean astronomy, 124. His tower, 148.
- Belus, son of Neptune, quits Egypt, ii, 161. Goes to Babylon, 162. Improves the Babylonian astronomy, ib. His name not Egyptian, 163. Not the same with Belus, the second king of Babylon, 164.
- Berosus, his extravagant history of the long lives of the antediluvian kings, i, 16. His account of the Flood, 41.
- Bezalel and Aholiab build the tabernacle, iii, 110.
- Birthright, Esau's what, ii, 113.
- Blood forbidden to be eaten, why, i, 78.
- Body, become mortal, presses down the soul, iv, 198. Of great consequence to the soul, to what body it is joined, ib.
- Body of sin, we see in ourselves of the necessity of being delivered from, iv, 199.
- Bolingbroke, Lord, his remarks on the various readings in the Scriptures, iv, 29. On the different endowments of mankind, 46, n. On the transgression of Eve, 61, n.
- Born again, necessity of our being, iv, 199.
- Burnet, Dr., his objections to a literal interpretation of the Mosaic account of the creation, considered, iv, 13. His theory of the antediluvian earth, 126. Of the deluge, 127. Supposes the fall of man to have taken place immediately after his creation, 141.
- Burning bush, miracle of, ii, 241.
- Burnt offerings, law of, iii, 103, n.

C.

- Cabiri of the ancients, who, i, 132.
- Cadmus builds Thebes, ii, 174. Date of that event, ib. Consideration of the arguments, whether he were a Phœnician or an Egyptian, 176. Manner in which he determined the site of the city Cadmea, 178. Fable of his sowing the serpent's teeth, considered, ib. Introduced the Phœnician letters into Greece, 179. Entertains Jupiter, iii, 77. Date of his marriage, 78.

- Cain kills Abel, i, 35. His punishment, 37. His sorrow and repentance, ib.
 The mark set upon him, 38. Absurd conjectures on this subject, ib. m.
 Removes into the land of Nod, 38. Arts invented by his descendants, ib.
 Why he built a city, 39.
- Caleb, his efforts to appease the rebellion of the Israelites, iii, 122. His inheritance, 245.
- Calf, golden, set up by the Israelites, iii, 89.
- Callimachus, rejected the Cretan account of the tomb of Jupiter, iii, 79.
- Callisthenes, his account of the astronomical observations at Babylon, i, 122.
- Calypso's island, supposed situation of, ii, 181, n.
- Canaan, son of Ham, what countries settled by him, i, 114.
- Canaan, land of, peopled sooner than Egypt, i, 135. Government of, originally founded on principles of liberty, ii, 88. In what manner divided amongst the Israelites, iii, 247.
- Canaanites, their religion in the days of Abraham, i, 183. Had no temples in the days of Moses, iii, 113. Whether any companies of them escaped from Joshua by flight into other lands, 254. Whether they made any settlements in Lesser Asia or in Greece in the days of Joshua, 255.
- Canon Chronicus of Sir John Marsham, account of, iii, 151.
- Capacities of men border upon the angelic state, iv, 112. Not such as to be an unerring direction to all truth, 105.
- Capellus, his arguments to reconcile the Hebrew and Septuagint chronology, i, 64.
- Caphtorim, where he settled after the dispersion from Babel, i, 113.
- Casluhim, what country he planted, i, 113.
- Castor, his account of the time when Cecrops settled in Attica, ii, 167.
- Cat, why reputed sacred by the Egyptians, ii, 193.
- Catalogue of Eratosthenes, account of, iii, 136.
- Cecrops quits Egypt, ii, 161. Settles in Attica, 166. Date of his reign there, ib. Contemporary with Moses, 168. The means he adopted to civilize his followers, 171. His people at first not numerous, 172. His care to instruct them in religion, 173. Why he was called Δεσπότης, ib.
- Cedrenus, his opinion about Belus, ii, 164.
- Centimani, whom, iii, 56. Why so called, ib. In alliance with Jupiter, 74.
- Ceremonies, most ancient ones used in religion, what, i, 180, 186.
- Ceres, sister to Jupiter, iii, 58. At his death, settles in Attica, 85. Taught Triptolemus to sow corn, 86.
- Chaldeans, their religion in the days of Abraham, i, 183. The first idolaters, 192.
- Chedorlaomer, the same with Ninyas, ii, 50.
- Chinese records agree with the chronology of Moses, i, 48. Their account of Fohi, 82. Their language original, 90. Their government the same now as at its foundation, ii, 76. Their account of the Sun standing still in the days of Joshua, iii, 242.
- Chinese Fohi, the same with Noah, i, 82.
- Chiron, the constellations he formed, considered, ii, 8.

- Christ, the person who is to conquer the old serpent, iv, 184.
- Christians not obliged to abstain from eating blood, i, 79.
- Chronicon, of Eusebius, account of the, iii, 144.
- Chronographeon, Egyptian, some account of, iii, 128.
- Chronographia, of Africanus, some account of, iii, 140. Of Syncellus, account of, 148.
- Chronology, of the antediluvians, according to the Hebrew, i, 57. According to the Samaritan, 58. According to the Septuagint, 61. Arguments of Capellus to reconcile them, 64. Chronology of the Babylonian empire, 121. Difference between the Septuagint, Samaritan, and Hebrew, respecting the birth of Abraham, 169. Sir Isaac Newton's, considered, ii, 7.
- Chronus, said to have sacrificed his son, ii, 60. Probably the same person with Abraham, ib.
- Circumcision, practised earlier by Abraham than by any of the heathen nations, i, 193. Arguments for Abraham's learning it from the heathens refuted, ib. Discontinued by the Israelites while in the wilderness, iii, 219. Revived by Joshua, ib. Reasons of its discontinuance, 220. Practised very early by the Egyptians, 221.
- Cities of Greece chose their tutelar deities, when, iii, 73.
- Cities of refuge appointed, iii, 253.
- Clayton, Bishop, his Strictures on Dr. Shuckford's account of the Heathen gods, &c., iii, 1. His account of the origin of the Grecian Fable of Charon, 3. His reasons against considering Jupiter to be a real person, 5. Chronus and Time supposed by him to be the same, 6. His opinion of the other deities mentioned by Manetho, 7. His account of the Egyptian god Cneph, 10.
- Clothing given to our first parents, what, iv, 200.
- Cloud, pillar of, directs the march of the Israelites, ii, 278. Covers the tabernacle, iii, 113.
- Cneph, an Egyptian god, represented by a serpent, iv, 178.
- Coats of skins, in what manner appointed our first parents, iv, 200.
- Colonies, probability of some being established in Africa, &c., from Canaan, iii, 254.
- Command concerning the forbidden tree, suitable to what God had made man, iv, 117. Why such a command given, 118. Some positive command necessary to be given to our first parents, 121.
- Confusion of tongues, i, 183. Probable cause of it, 195. How many languages arose from it, 97.
- Corinthian history, begins, where, ii, 182.
- Corn, how furnished to the Israelites on their entrance into Canaan, iii, 223.
- Counsel, God's, Adam's rejection of it, subjected him to all error, iv, 120.
- Cranaus, king of Attica, ii, 173.
- Creation, the, discovers a wonderful connection between all things, iv, 109.
- Cres, king of Crete, contemporary with Abraham, ii, 67.
- Cretans, anciently famous for their history, iii, 55. Pretended to have the tomb of Jupiter, 79.

- Crete, the state of, in the brazen age, iii, 78. Thought to be well situated for universal empire, 87.
- Ctesias, probability of his account of the Assyrian empire, i, 16.
- Cubit, three sorts of, in use amongst the Hebrews, i, 41.
- Cumberland, Bishop, his opinion of the era of Sesostriis, iii, 125, 127.
- Guretes, who the persons so called, iii, 73.
- Cush, the land of, not Ethiopia, but Arabia, i, 110. Probably so called from Cush the son of Ham, 109.
- Cyclops, whom, iii, 57. Fable of their one eye explained, ib. The artificers of Jupiter, 74.
- Cyphers, the Egyptian, why invented, ii, 199.
- Cyril, St. misquotes Diodorus Siculus, iii, 210.
- Cyrus the Elder, his account of himself, when dying, i, 206.

D.

- Dactyli Idæi, probably the companions of Cadmus, ii, 179. Date when they lived, iii, 55.
- Danaus leaves Egypt, ii, 161. Said to have constructed the first ship, 166. Accident by which he obtained the kingdom of Argos, 180. Date of his reign, ib. Not the brother of Sesostriis, iii, 125.
- Dathan, with Korah and Abiram, their rebellion, iii, 123.
- Death, sentence of, particularly pronounced against Adam only, and why, iv, 191. Not inflicted immediately after his transgression, ib. Fit and proper, in the reason of things, after man had sinned, 195.
- Dedan, where he settled at the dispersion of mankind, i, 113.
- Deiphon, son of Celeus, nursed by Ceres, iii, 85.
- Deists, modern, their character of Moses, iii, 197.
- Deluge, none in Attica in the time of Ogyges; nor in Thessaly, in the time of Deucalion, ii, 182. Did not dissolve the whole globe, iv, 128. Effects of it to be accounted for by considering the effects of smaller inundations, 130. Strata occasioned by it, accounted for, 131.
- Depravity of man, consequent upon the Fall, iv, 198.
- Deucalion, king of Thessaly, when, ii, 181. The flood of, probably the universal deluge, 182.
- Devil, the serpent prompted by, to deceive our first parents, iv, 147. Can do nothing but by divine permission, 150.
- Di Consentes, who the gods so called, iii, 72.
- Difference between Gen. xxxv and Gen. xlvii reconciled, ii, 149.
- Differences in religion, what, in the time of Abraham, i, 172.
- Diodorus Siculus, his account of the rise of false religion in Egypt, i, 189. Proof from him, that Noah was the Indian Bacchus, ii, 74. His account of the ancient Egyptian constitution, 89.
- Directions, our first parents' rejecting God's, was a great perversion of human life, iv, 160.

- Dispersion of mankind, i, 99. Commonly received opinion concerning it, not true, 101. Most probable account of, ib. Did not reach at first to Spain or Italy, 114.
- Divine appearances to Abraham, ii, 53, 54. To Jacob, 122, 130, 133. None before the days of Abraham, 253. To Joshua, iii, 224.
- Division of the earth by the sons of Noah, i, 103. Eusebius's account of it rejected, 115.
- Dodanim, thought to have planted Rhodes, i, 107, •

E.

- Eagle, the river Nile anciently so called, iii, 84.
- Earth, originally produced nothing but by the word of God, iv, 70. Did not produce full grown trees at the creation, 188.
- Ebal and Gerizim, the law for building the altar, and writing the law there, how executed, iii, 225.
- Ecclesiasticus, author of the book of, his opinion of the cure of the waters at Marah, iii, 33. His learning, 34. Time at which he wrote, ib.
- Eden, land and garden of, where situate, i, 68; ib., 134, 139. Known by the Jews, in their captivity, to be not far from the waters of Babylon, 136.
- Edom, king of, refuses a passage to the Israelites, iii, 165.
- Edomites, make their first king, ii, 136.
- Egypt, not originally a despotic government, ii, 88. Anciently an elective kingdom, 92. The parent of superstition, 99. An account of its priesthood, ib.
- Egyptian dynasties and antiquities explained, i, 43. Arts and learning, by whom invented, 134. Letters, at first, not hieroglyphical, 146. Pyramids, eighteen, by whom built, 165. Largest pyramid, by whom erected, 188. Religion, by whom corrupted, ib. With what views, and for what end, 133. Errors, most ancient, what, ib. Idolatries very ancient, 196. Most of them not so early as the days of Joseph, 197. Kingdoms, not founded at first upon despotic authority, ii, 88. Ancient constitution, what, 89.
- Egyptians, not the first inventors of letters, i, 141. At first worshipped the true God, 184. Not corrupted in religion in the days of Abraham, 185. Imitators of Abraham in circumcision, and other religious rites, 189. Quickly outstripped all other nations in their numerous idolatries, 195. Infected all the neighbouring nations with their abominations, 199. Their consecrating animals, ii, 192. When they began this practice, 193. For what reason, ib. Canonized their heroes, 194. Their most celebrated hero gods, whom, ib. Why deified, ib. When this practice began, ib. Did not deify men newly dead, 195. Their hieroglyphics not their most ancient letters, 201. Perplexed their ancient history, how, 203. Their fables about Isis and Osiris, 204. Their theology arose from their learning, 206. Their errors in religion, how occasioned, ib. Their learning, what, 226. Their astronomy, ib. Their geometry, 227. Their physiology, ib. Their astrology, 228. Their magic, ib. Whether they had any lewd dances in their sacra in the time of Moses, iii, 94. Their antiquities, what books to be searched for them, 128. Their opinion of the original product of the earth, iv, 69. Reputed the serpent to be an emblem of the good God, 178.

Elam, planted Persia, 107.

Eldad and Medad, prophesy, in the camp of Israel, iii, 119.

Elders, seventy, appointed to assist Moses, iii, 119.

Elim, when the Israelites went thither, iii, 35. Like a place described by Strabo, ib.

Elisha planted the Cyclades, i, 106.

Employment of our first parents, in the garden, iv, 188.

Enchantments, heathen, for the cure of the bites of serpents, iii, 169, 171. Used by Balaam, of what sort, 181.

Enoch, proof of his having had a revelation from God, iv, 55.

Enoch's book, a fiction, i, 55.

Eratosthenes, account of his catalogue, iii, 136.

Erectheus, not the same with Erichthonius, ii, 174.

Erichthonius quits Egypt, ib. 161. Invented chariots, 191.

'Epos of the mythologists, what meant by, iv, 13.

Esau sells his birthright, ii, 109. Why he is called profane, ib. Wherein his birthright consisted, 110. His resentment against Jacob, 122. Is reconciled to him, 131. An account of his descendants, 135. His character, 138.

Ethiopia, not the land of Cush, i, 110.

Ethiopians, two nations of that name, ii, 221.

Europs, second king of Sicyon, contemporary with Abraham, ii, 66.

Europeans, not early acquainted with letters, 136.

Eusebius, his account of the division of the earth rejected, i, 115. His review of the ancient history, ii, 68. Account of his Chronicon, iii, 144.

Eve, her creation, iv, 71. What her first idea of death, 74. Understood immediately what the serpent said to her, 77. What she expected in having her eyes opened, 80. Reason of her name, 94. Not tempted before she had observed, that the animal creation had not the gift of speech, 144. Tempted before she knew it to be miraculous for an animal to speak, ib. Not alone, when the serpent spake to her, 145. The sentence passed upon her, 187.

Exit of the Israelites out of Egypt, ii, 273. Heathen accounts of that event, 274.

Eye, of the body, not able, without rule or measure, to raise a regular structure, iv, 204. Of the mind, unable, without rule, to build us up in every virtue, ib.

Eyes, Adam and Eve's, opened, how, iv, 164.

Ezra, in what manner he might add to the books of Scripture, iii, 260.

F.

- Fable of the Egyptians concerning the length of the year, i, 14, n. ii, 195. Of Cadmus sowing the serpent's teeth, ii, 178. Of Hercules killing the eagle, which preyed upon Prometheus's liver, iii, 84.
- Faith, a part of natural religion, i, 172. In what God had revealed, the only principle on which the men of the early times could have a right knowledge of the Deity, ii, 245. Mankind not easily brought to the obedience of it, iii, 99. Mistakes of different writers concerning the doctrine of, iv, 54. Comes by hearing, 156. Obedience of it, to be paid unto God, 157.
- Fall, not immediately after the creation, iv, 80.
- Fallax, peculiar use of that word in Virgil, iv, 193, n.
- Feasts, Jewish, not regulated by the Moon, iii, 16.
- Females, opinion of the ancients, respecting their right to govern, ii, 106. Their reigns generally glorious, 107.
- Flesh, not eaten till after the flood, i, 72.
- Fohi, first king of China, i, 48. Contemporary with Noah, ib. Probably the same person, 82.

Games, public, how managed, in the most ancient times, iii, 92.

Garden of the Lord, mentioned to Abraham by Lot, the same as Moses's garden of Eden, iv, 135. Alluded to by Ezekiel, ib.

Generation, different meanings of that word, ii, 16.

Genesis, book of, supposed to be written by Moses while in Midian, ii, 222.

First and second chapters of, not contrary to each other, iv, 67.

Geography of the antediluvian world, i, 68.

Geographers, the most ancient heathen, only moderns with regard to the Scripture geography, iv, 133.

Gephyraei, the followers of Cadmus, ii, 177.

Gerizim. See Ebal.

Gibeonites, deceive the Israelites, iii, 228. Refuse to join the confederate kings, ib. Whether the Israelites were justifiable in entering into treaty with them, 229.

Girgashites, whether they fled from Joshua into Africa, iii, 254.

Goz, his name inquired by Moses, ii, 243. Explanation of that name, 243—256.

In what sense seen by Moses, iii, 49. Created both the man and the woman on the sixth day, iv, 67. His word produced all things, 70. The command which he gave to Adam, ib. Caused Adam immediately to understand what was spoken to him, 73. Did not give our first parents any innate language, 75. Called Adam to name the creatures, 76. Did not direct Adam what names to give them, 85. Enjoined man and wife to live together, 91. Did not confound Adam's first thoughts with a variety of ob- jects, 92. His blessing upon our first parents, 94. Did not endue Adam with an unerring understanding, 106. Made a revelation to man, as soon as he was created, 114. The first command he gave Adam, suitable to man's nature, 117. His first command, how to be understood, 118. Did not cause the serpent to tempt Eve, 147. His prophecies to our first parents, enlarged by farther prophecies in after-ages, 174. His sentence against our first parents not to have been defeated by their eating of the tree of life, 195. Appointed Adam and Eve clothing, in what manner, 200. Appointed sacrifices, when, 301. Instructed Adam in all necessary knowledge after the fall, 202. His word the rule of truth, 205.

- God of Israel, whom intended by that appellation, iii, 50.
- Gods of Egypt, rudeness of their sculpture no proof of their antiquity, ii, 207.
- Gods of human form, their origin, iii, 51.
- Gomer, where he settled at the dispersion of mankind, i, 103.
- Government, civil, in India, built upon the foundation of paternal authority, ii, 82.
- Greece, uncertainty of its history before the time of Cecrops, ii, 180. Dates of the foundation of its several states, 181.
- Greek alphabet, specimens of, i, 154, 164. Additions to, 155.
- Greeks received their letters from the Phœnicians, i, 137. Disguised all their ancient accounts with allegory, ii, 179. Called Græci, 190. And Hellenes, 191.

H.

- Hailstones, the Canaanites destroyed by a storm of, iii, 237.
- Halirrothius slain by Mars, iii, 75.
- Halley, Dr., his account of the astronomy of the ancients, ii, 14.
- Ham, the youngest son of Noah, i, 103. Parts of the world settled by his descendants, 109.
- Haran, land of, whence so named, i, 166.
- Hardness of heart, not produced in Pharaoh by God, ii, 270.
- Harduin, Father, his ridiculous solution of a Scripture difficulty, i, 170.
- Havilah, land of, where, i, 69. Well known in the postdiluvian world, iv, 133.
- Havilah, son of Cush, where he lived, i, 108.
- Hazor, city, burnt by the Israelites, iii, 245.
- Heathens, their opinion of the way in which miracles might be wrought, ii, 231. Never prayed to one god for deliverance from another, 258.
- Heathen writers confirm the Mosaic account of the creation, i, 22. Methods by which they obtained their knowledge, 25. Their attempts to overthrow the sacred history, ii, 68. Their accounts of the Israelites leaving Egypt, 274. Mention the Sun standing still at the command of Joshua, iii, 238.
- Heavenly bodies, the first objects of idolatry, i, 189; ii, 231.
- Hebrew, probably the first language in the world, i, 89. Specimen of the old Hebrew or Samaritan letters, 151.

- Hebron, in Canaan, built seven years before any city in Egypt, 135.
- Heliopolis, opinion of the priests of, about the passage of the Israelites over the Red Sea, ii, 282.
- Hellas, the name of Greece, at first only a part of Thessaly, ii, 191. Never called so by Homer, ib.
- Hellen, king in Thessaly, ii, 190. The Greeks called Hellenes from him, ib. The great influence of his descendants in Greece, 191. Instituted the Panathenzan games, ib.
- Hellenes, the Greeks so called, ii, 190. Only those under the government of Hellen received that appellation at first, 191. The Greeks in general never called so by Homer, ib.
- Hercules, three persons of that name, iii, 84.
- Herodotus, his opinion of the antiquity of Semiramis, considered, ii, 24. His account of the Egyptian polity, 89.
- Heroes, when first worshipped, and why, ii, 194, 195.
- Hiddekel, a river known to Daniel, iv, 133.
- Hieroglyphics invented by the second Tasutus, ii, 200. The Egyptians had two sorts of, ib.
- Historians, ancient, way in which their histories were collected, ii, 47.
- History, ancient profane, probably much corrupted, i, 13. Romantic accounts given by, ii, 44, &c.
- Hobab, son of Jethro, journeys with the Israelites, iii, 119.
- Homer, his notion of the divine right of kings, ii, 92.
- Horeb, a mountain contiguous to Sinai, iii, 40.
- Horites, possessed the land of Seir, ii, 134. Dispossessed by the children of Esau, 135.
- Hur assists Aaron to hold up the hands of Moses, whilst the Israelites were in battle, iii, 42. He and Aaron have the charge of the people, 46. Did not probably outlive the sin of the golden calf, 90.
- Husbandry, the first, only gardening, iv, 189.
- Hyagnis, said to have improved music, ii, 192.
- Hyginus, his fable of Prometheus, iii, 81.

I.

- I AM THAT I AM, explained, ii, 247.
- Idolatry, none before the flood, i, 58. First practised in Chaldea, 192. Most gross in the nations most acquainted with the Egyptians, 199.
- Idols, that term explained, ii, 97.
- Image of God, what meant by, iv, 102. Opinions of the heathen on this subject, 104.
- Image worship, its origin, i, 200.
- Inachus, first king of Argos, contemporary with Abraham, ii, 66. Probable method by which he formed his kingdom, 67. Arguments of Sir John Marsham, against his existence, answered, ib.
- India fruitless attempts to conquer it by Ninus and Semiramis, i, 126. Reasons of the opposition they experienced, 127; ii, 82. What countries known by that name by ancient writers, ii, 76.

Indians, first made astronomy subservient to agriculture, ii, 77. Practice of their first physicians, 238.

Indian Bacchus, not the same person as Sesostris, ii, 72. Probably Noah, 74.

Indian polity, what, ii, 76.

Inscription, Sigeon, fac-simile of, i, 159, 160, 161. Fac-simile of one on the statue of Jupiter Urius, 162.

Isaac, his birth, ii, 55. Marries Rebekah, 63. Removes to Gerar, 114. Banished thence by Abimelech, ib. Who afterwards enters into an alliance with him, 115. Date of his death, 134. His character, 145.

Ishmael, his birth, ii, 53.

Isis, table of, described, ii, 211.

Israelites, date of their exit out of Egypt, ii, 221. Eat the first passover, 273.

Time of their sojourning in Egypt, 275. Murmur against Moses at Marah, iii, 31. March to Elim, 35. Distressed for provisions in the wilderness of Sin, 35. Relieved by a miraculous supply of quails and manna, ib.

Want water at Rephidim, 38. Defeat the Amalekites, 42. Their march to Sinai, when, 48. Force Aaron to make a golden calf, 89. Whether they danced naked before it, 94. Whether they set up the calf, in imitation of the Egyptian sacra, 95. Upon what principle they fell into this idolatry, 97. Taxed towards erecting the tabernacle, 110. Numbered by Moses, 117. Their rebellion in the wilderness of Paran, 119. Afraid to enter Canaan, 121. Punishment denounced against them for their obstinacy, 122. Attempt to enter Canaan, but are defeated, ib. Retreat towards the Red Sea, 123. Their rebellion with Korah, ib. Arrive in the wilderness of Sin, when, 163. Their mutiny at Kadesh, ib. Bitten by fiery serpents, 167. Their several encampments from Kadesh to Pisgah, 175.

Conquer Sihon king of the Amorites, ib. Reduce the kingdom of Bashan, ib. Seduced to idolatry by the Moabitish women, 185. Numbered by Moses, 190. Give possessions to the tribes of Reuben and Gad, 191. Could not have been deceived with respect to the miracles wrought by Moses, 199. Never disposed to believe or depend upon him implicitly, 202. Their miraculous passage through Jordan, 217. Revive the rite of circumcision, 219. Besiege and take Jericho, 224. Defeated at Ai, 225. Deceived by the Gibeonites, 228. Not commanded to destroy all the inhabitants of Canaan, 229. Whether they might make league with them, 231. Whether justifiable in their treatment of the Gibeonites, 235. In what manner they divided the land, 247. Their embassy about the altar at Jordan, 253.

Isger, wrote a book about the migrations out of Egypt, ii, 161.

J.

Jabin, king of Hazor, conquered by the Israelites, iii, 244.

Jacob, his temper and disposition, ii, 109. Gets the birthright from Esau, ib.

Obtains the blessing from Isaac, 121. Departs for Mesopotamia, 122.

- Marries Leah and Rachel, 123. His bargain with Laban justified, 124. Leaves Laban, 127. Returns to Canaan in great prosperity, 128. Sends to his brother Esau, ib. Wrestles with an angel, 130. Trials at Shechem, 131. Reforms his family, 132. Removes to Hebron, 133. Goes into Egypt, 143. His death and character, 144. Mention made of him by profane writers, 146.
- Japhet, the eldest son of Noah, i, 103. Not at the confusion of Babel, ib. Parts of the world settled by his descendants, ib.
- ЈАГОВАН, universally known as the name of the supreme God in early times, ii, 249.
- Jericho, taken by the Israelites, iii, 224.
- Jethro, receives Moses, and gives him his daughter, ii, 220. His advice to Moses, respecting the government of the Israelites, iii, 45. Persuaded to accompany the Israelites to Canaan, 119.
- Jewish year; length of, j, 11. Method by which computed, iii, 6. Their feasts not regulated by the Moon, 16.
- Jews, their opinion respecting their national birthright to the blessings of the Messiah, ii, 112.
- Job, time when he lived, ii, 117. Book of, not written by Moses, 223. In what verse written, 224.
- Jordan, passage through it, considered, iii, 218, &c.
- Josephus, his account of Seth's pillars, i, 55. Of some particulars in the life of Moses, ii, 220. Refutation of his story of the change of the waters of Marah, iii, 33. His extracts from Manetho, 138.
- Joseph, sold by his brethren, ii, 134. His advancement, 139. Interprets Pharaoh's dreams, 140. Is made deputy over Egypt, ib. Raises the king immense riches, 141. Remarks upon his management, ib. Why he bought not the priests' lands, ib. His brethren come to Egypt, 143. Embalms Jacob, and buries him in great state, 147. By what king of Egypt he was advanced, ib. His death, 148.
- Joshua, his behaviour on the return of the twelve spies, iii, 122. Appointed by God to lead the Israelites upon the death of Moses, 192. Takes the command of the people, 214. Sends spies to Jericho, ib. Sets up the stones in Gilgal, 217. Revives the use of circumcision, 219. Would not have revived it without a special command from God, 222. Conquers the five kings of the south of Canaan, 237. Commands the Sun and Moon to stand still, ib. Victorious over the kings of the north of Canaan, 244. How long engaged in subduing that country, 245. Divides the land, 245—252. His inheritance, where, 252. His admonitions to the Israelites, 256. His death, 257. Whether he wrote the book called by his name, 258.
- Jubilee, year of, when to be kept, iii, 211.
- Julian year, longer than the ancient, i, 12.
- Juno, wife of Jupiter, assists him in the government of his kingdom, iii, 71. Celebrated in Greece for her abilities, 87.
- Jupiter, of the Greeks, contemporary with Moses, iii, 55. Difficulties attending his history, ib. Fabulous account of his preservation when an infant,

- 58. Succeeds his father in the kingdom of Crete, 59. Marries his sister Juno, ib. His other wives, and children, 59, 60. How many generations he lived before the Trojan war, 60. Further evidence to settle the era in which he lived, 62—70. His politics and improvements in his country, 70. His assistants, and what posts they held under him, 71. Why he and his colleagues were held in higher estimation than other heroes in after ages, 72. His times, why called the silver age, 73. The opposition he met with, and from whom, 74, &c. Who were his allies, ib. Travels from Crete into other countries, 75. Goes into Arcadia, 76. Not worshipped by Lycaon, ib. Worshipped the luminaries of Heaven, 77. Date of his visit to Cadmus, ib. In love with Semele, 78. Reason we have no account of his death, ib. Cretans pretend to the possession of his tomb, ib. His great wisdom, 79. The new scenes of life opened by him, ib. Reasons of his severity in the punishment of Prometheus, 81. No grounds for supposing his children succeeded to his kingdom, 85.
- Justin, his account of the wars between Sesostris and Tanais, considered, i, 127. His account of the exit of the Israelites from Egypt, ii, 275.

K.

- Kibroth Hattaavah; rebellion of the Israelites there, iii, 120.
- Kingdoms, account of their formation after the flood, ii, 76, 84, 86, 88. All the ancient, not hereditary, 91.
- Kings, the first corrupters of religion, i, 203. Calculation of the average length of their reigns, in different periods, ii, 18, 20. The Indian kings originally had the sole property of all the lands in the kingdom, 79. Ancient opinion of their divine right, 92. Their ambition in the early times to derive descent from the gods, iii, 67.
- Kircher, his opinion concerning the first inventors of letters, i, 139.
- Kittim, the father of the Macedonians, i, 105.
- Knowledge, state of our first parents', when in Paradise, iv, 97.
- Korah, Dathan, and Abiram, their conspiracy, iii, 123. The grounds of it, 124. How reduced, ib.

L.

- Laban, his gods, what, i, 201. Deceives Jacob, ii, 123. Persues Jacob, but is reconciled to him, 128.
- Labour of our first parents, what, iv, 188.
- Lacedaemonians, akin to the Jews, iii, 53.
- Lamech's speech to his wives explained, i, 39.
- Land of Eden, not in Coele-Syria, i, 69. But in Chaldaea, ib.
- Land of the garden of Eden in the neighbourhood of Babylonia, iv, 134.
- Language, nature and origin of, i, 84; iv, 41. Man only capable of, ib. Mistaken account of its origin, ib. No innate language, 85. Original of it,

86. First language, of what sort, ib. What particular language most likely to have been the first, 88. Chinese language an original, 91. Causes of the mutability of language, ib. These not the causes of the confusion at Babel, 94. Difficulties of different writers in accounting for it, ib. How it may possibly be accounted for, 95. How many languages arose at the confusion of tongues, 97. Did not differ much at first, 98.
- Latin alphabet, specimens of, i, 157.
- Latins received their letters from the Greeks, i, 136.
- Law, the ceremonial, given before the idolatry of the golden calf, iii, 101.
- Laws, written, first given by Moses, iii, 209.
- League, what the meaning of that word, iii, 234.
- Learned men have often embraced the grossest absurdities, ii, 286.
- Learning, Egyptian, state of, in the time of Moses, ii, 226. Human, the source of false religion, 284.
- Legislators, ancient, paid a surprising deference to paternal authority, i, 78.
- Lehabim, father of the Lybians, i, 113.
- Lelex, first king of Laconia, iii, 53. Settlements made by him, ib. Probably an Israelite, 54. Date of his reign, ib.
- Lucas, who so called at the first rise of kingdoms, iii, 80.
- Letters, invention of, i, 135. Not early amongst the Europeans, 136. Brought into Italy from Greece, ib. Received by the Greeks from the Phœnicians, 137. Not invented in Phœnicia, 139. Brought into Phœnicia from Syria, ib. The same letters used at first in Phœnicia, Syria, Samaria, Canaan, and Assyria, 140. Not invented by the Egyptians, ib. Probability of their being propagated into all the west from Assyria, 141. Not invented in Assyria, nor by Moses, nor by Abraham, ib. Probably used before the Flood, ib. Noah supposed to be acquainted with them, 142. Absurd conjectures about their origin, 143. First letters not alphabetical, 144. Nor hieroglyphical, 147. Use of alphabetical letters very early, 148. A conjecture about the original of them, ib. Derivation of the modern European letters, 150. Specimens of the old Hebrew and Samaritan alphabets, 151. Of the Phœnician, 152, 153. Of the ancient Greek, 154, 164. Written originally from the right hand to the left, ib. Written afterwards versus, 154. Several letters taken afterwards into the Greek Alphabet, 155. The old Roman letters, 157. Specimens of those used in the Sigeian inscription, 159, 160, 161. Copy of an ancient inscription on the statue of Jupiter Urius, 162. Fac-simile of the Lord's Prayer in ancient Greek, 164.
- Levites, support Moses on occasion of the Israelites' idolatry, iii, 91. Set apart for the service of the tabernacle, 117.
- Life, the most dead parts of matter not entirely destitute of, iv, 111.
- Longinus, his character of Moses, ii, 239.
- Lord's Prayer, fac-simile of an ancient one, i, 164.
- Lot rescued from captivity by Abraham, ii, 52. Saved from the destruction of
- Sodom, 54. Fate of his wife, ib. The father of Moab and Ammon, 55.

- Lucian, ~~he~~ injudicious cavil at Moses's account of the creation, ii, 240. His ridicule of the fable of Prometheus, iii, 83.
- Lud, the father of the Lydians, i, 108.
- Ludim, the father of the Lybians, i, 113.
- Lupercalia, when instituted, iii, 76.
- Lycaon, king of Arcadia, his character, iii, 76. Entertains Jupiter, who kills him, ib. Why said to be turned into a wolf, ib. Did not worship Jupiter, ib.
- Lycæus, Jupiter, an altar erected to him, iii, 76.
- Lycurgus appointed sacrifices of small value, ii, 142. His opinion of written laws, iii, 208.
- Lyre, invented by Mercury, ii, 239.

M.

- Madai, the father of the Medes, i, 107.
- Magic, practised before the time of Moses, ii, 228.
- Magicians, of Egypt, withstand Moses, ii, 257. Really performed miracles, 262.
- Magistrates, their duty to establish religious worship, ii, 103.
- Magog, where he lived, i, 103.
- Mán, cannot be placed higher than between the animal and angelic state, iv, 112. Not created with unerring reason, 114. Not without a revelation from the beginning, ib. Why required to obey God's voice, 118. By obeying God's voice would have been made wise, and fit for glory, 120. Guided by his Creator, might have advanced unto all truth, 136. After the fall, born to a duplicity of nature, 199. Mind of, not so slow in invention, as that we can always trace the steps of it, 201. A creature a degree above the instinct of animal life, 204. Not made so perfect as to want no guidance but his own, ib. His perfections, both of body and mind, to a degree only, ib.
- Manetho, his Egyptian antiquities considered, i, 42. His object in writing them, 47. Tomes of, considered, iii, 133. Extracts from, in Josephus, an account of, 138.
- Mankind, origin of, i, 35. Not from eternity, iv, 67. Origin of, known only from Moses's history, ib. Imperfect, wherein, 200. Had our first parents not sinned, whether mankind might not have been born immortal, 20.
- Manna, given to the Israelites in the wilderness, iii, 35. Rabbinical fancies concerning it, ib. n. Supply of it ceases on their entrance into Canaan, 223.
- Marab, its signification, iii, 32. No place so called by profane writers, ib.
- Mark, St., monkish fable concerning his festival, iii, 128.
- Mars kills Halirrothius, and is tried before the Arcopagus, iii, 75.
- Marsham, Sir John, gives the best account of the Egyptian antiquities, i, 44. Proves Mizraim to be the same with Menes, 129. Answer to his objections against the existence of Inachus, ii, 67. His remarks on the ancient

- kings of Sicyon confuted, 69. Mistaken as to the king of Egypt who advanced Joseph, 147. Falsely supposed Belus, the son of Neptune, to be the same with Belus, the second king of Babylon, 164. In error with respect to the council of the Amphictyones, 190. An account of his Canon-Chronicus, iii, 151. His tables of the kings of Egypt, 152, 153, 158. His remarks on the brazen serpent, 167.
- Mars, their supposed abilities to cure the bites of serpents, iii, 169.
- Meat, recommendeth not to God, iv, 120.
- Mercury, the second, author of many of the Egyptian superstitions, ii, 199.
His three-corded lyre, 239.
- Mesech, where he lived, i, 103.
- Meton, cycle of, probably not discovered by him in its present state, ii, 11.
- Middleton, Dr., his objections to a literal interpretation of the Mosaic account of the Creation, considered, iv, 15. Refutation of his arguments against the genealogy of Christ, 20.
- Midwives, the Egyptian, ordered to destroy the children of the Israelites, ii, 157.
Meaning of Exod. i, 21, respecting them, ib.
- Milton, his notions of Adam, when first created, poetical, but not likely to be true, iv, 92; n. His relation, how Adam named the creatures, groundless, 97. Does not suppose Adam and Eve's transgression on the same day they were created, 142. His account of the serpent tempting Eve not warranted by Scripture, 145.
- Minerva, her difference with Neptune about the Athenians, iii, 75.
- Minos, falsely said to be the son of Jupiter, iii, 63.
- Miracles, not to be wrought by art, ii, 261. Really wrought by the magicians of Egypt, 262. How they were enabled to perform them, 264. The passage of the Red Sea a real one, 279.
- Miriam and Aaron oppose Moses, iii, 120. Death of Miriam, 163.
- Mizraim, settled in Egypt, i, 113. Time of that event, 129. The same with the Menes of the heathen writers, ib.
- Mneves, not the same person as Moses, iii, 209. Governed his people by unwritten laws, 210.
- Moabites, seduce the Israelites to idolatry, iii, 185.
- Monceius, his account of Aaron's making the Israelites naked, iii, 94.
- Montfaucon, F., his description of the table of Isis, ii, 211. Errs in his explanation of the Egyptian images, 207, 210.
- Monuments of the antediluvian learning, none, i, 54.
- Moon, Jewish feasts not regulated by, iii, 16. Stands still at the command of Joshua, iii, 237.
- Mosaic account of the creation, to be literally understood, iv, 67. Drs. Burnet and Middleton's objections to, considered, 15.
- Moses, his account of the creation, i, 21. Confirmed by several heathen authors, 22. His genealogy of the antediluvians, 57, 58. His birth, ii, 219. Preserved by Pharaoh's daughter, ib. Made commander of the Egyptian armies, ib. Anecdote of, when a child, 200; n. His faith in the promises of God with respect to the Israelites, ib. Flies to Midian, ib. Date of his birth, 221. Said to have married the king of Ethiopia's daughter, ib. Supposed to have written the Book of Genesis in Midian, 222. Not the author of the Book of Job, 223. Learned in all the learning of the Egyptians, 226. Skilful in writing both prose and verse, 239. His song, in what verse written, 240. Is appointed to go to Egypt, 241. Circumcision of his son, 242. Asks the name of God, and why, 243. Goes, with Aaron, to Pharaoh, 257. Confirms his mission by a miracle, ib. Endeavours in vain to persuade Pharaoh to dismiss the Israelites, 266, 268. Not angry with Pharaoh at his last interview, 272. Conducts the Israelites out of Egypt, 273. Did not lead them by his own conduct or contrivance, 276. Divides the Red Sea, 278. Fictions of the Hebrew writers respecting that event, 279. Leads the Israelites into the wilderness of Shur, ib., 31. Probably not directed thither by God, 32. How tried and proved at Marah, ib. Smites the rock at Rephidim, 38. His hands being held up, the Amalekites are defeated, 42. Is visited by Jethro, 45. With Aaron, Nadab, and Abihu, sees the God of Israelites, 49. Continues in the mount forty days and nights, ib. Finds the Israelites worshipping the golden calf, 89. Reduces the idol to powder, and makes the people drink it, ib. Expostulates with Aaron on the subject, ib. Commands the Levites to slay the idolaters, 91. Goes up the mount a second time, 109. Taxes the Israelites towards building the tabernacle, 110. Erects the tabernacle, 112. Takes the number of the people, 117. Chooses seventy elders to assist him in the government, 119. Sends out the twelve spies, 121. Leads the Israelites back towards the Red Sea, 123. Rebellion of Korah against him, ib. Disobeys the command of God at Kadesh, 163. Makes the brazen serpent, 167. Numbers the people, 190. Exhorts the Israelites, 192. Delivers his book to the Levites, ib. Dies in mount Aba-rim, ib. Where buried, ib. His character and conduct examined, 193. Had no selfish views, ib. His manner of leading the Israelites considered, 194. True reason of his keeping them so long in the wilderness, 195. Must have been directed by God in the prospects he set before them, ib. Character given of him by modern deists, 197. His divine mission proved from the facts recorded by him, 198. Those facts unquestionably true, ib. Could not have deceived the Israelites, 199. The impartiality of his history proved from his account of the rebellions of the people, 204. Not partial, even to his own character, 206. Would not have given written laws, except by divine command, 207. The first who gave written laws, 209. Some particulars in his laws considered, 211—214. His account of the creation different from that of the Egyptians, ib., 11. Wrote a real history of the origin of mankind, 67. His history differs from the Egyptian philosophy, 70. Brings Adam into the world in the most natural manner, 92. His relation of the beginning of our first parents' lives not fabulous, 95. Shows that man was not left insufficiently provided for, 108. His account of the forbidden tree, literally interpreted, agreeable to all revealed religion, 118. His garden of Eden not a fictitious scene, 123. Speaks of hills more ancient than the deluge, 126. His Eden might re-

- main in its primitive situation after the flood, 128. His description of the garden considered, 132. His Paradise not placed in an obscure part of the earth, 134. Afraid of his rod when turned into a serpent, 177.
- Mount Scir, where situated, ii, 128.
- Mountains coeval with the world, iv, 126. Their great height no argument against the rotundity of the earth, 127.
- Murder, no express law against, before the flood, i, 37. After the flood, to be punished with death, 80.
- Muses, thought to have been, originally but three, iii, 60.
- Music, when invented, ii, 239.
- Mythologists, their extravagant fictions, iii, 58. Their accounts of persons said to be descended from the gods, upon what founded, 66. Latin, their fable about Prometheus, 81. Greek, their fable about Prometheus, 82.
- Mythology, some account of the Egyptian, ii, 199. Not so early as the time of Moses, iv, 6.

N.

- Nadab and Abihu, their deaths, iii, 114. Wherein their crime consisted, 115.
- Nabonassar, first corrects the Babylonian year, i, 9.
- Nakedness of the Israelites, absurd fancies concerning, iii, 94. Of our first parents, what meant by, iv, 163.
- Name of God enquired by Moses, ii, 243. His nature discovered by his name, 246. I AM THAT I AM, explained, 247.
- Names, famous men in Egypt called by those of their gods, ii, 202. Divers names given to the same person, 203. One name used for several persons, ib. Heathen and rabbinical notions about them, 243. Not arbitrarily given in early times, 245. Human names not always rightly given, 246.
- Nasc, does not always signify a temple, ii, 216.
- Naphtuhim, king of Memphis, i, 133. First taught architecture, physic, and anatomy, ib.
- Naturalists, their phenomena of the deluge, how to be accounted for, iv, 130.
- Neptune, probably an inventor of shipping, ii, 162. Assisted Jupiter in governing his kingdom, iii, 71. His dispute with Minerva about the Athenians, 75. Settles in the island Atlantis, 86.
- Newton, Sir Isaac, examination of his chronology, ii, 7. His argument concerning the length of the reigns of the ancient kings, answered, 16. Confutation of his argument respecting the Assyrian kings, 23.
- Nimrod, king at Babel, i, 117. Did not engage in war, 118. Origin of his authority, ib., ii, 83. Not the same person with Belus, or Ninus, i, 122.
- Nineveh, built by Ashur, i, 125.
- Ninus, second king of Assyria, i, 119. First practised war, ib., ii, 90. Contemporary with Abraham, ii, 66.
- Ninyas, successor to Semiramis, i, 121. The same with Chedorlaomar, ii, 50. Contemporary with Abraham, 66.
- Noah enters the ark, i, 41. Quits it again, 71. Animal food first granted to him, 77. Never came to Shinaar, 80. Called Fohi by the Chinese, 82. Settled to the north of India, ib. When his descendants came to Shinaar, 83. Probable that he had a knowledge of letters, 142. Founder of the first polity, ii, 71. Taught mankind agriculture, 75. Plan upon which he probably erected his government, 76. Father, priest, and king to his people, 81.

Numa, not willing to leave his sacred books to posterity, iii, 208.

Nyctimus, successor of Lycaon in the kingdom of Arcadia, iii, 77.

O.

Ogyges, king of Attica, ii, 181. The flood of, probably the universal deluge 182.

Ophiogenes, their supposed abilities to cure the bite of serpents, iii, 169.

Opinion, human, hard to distinguish from real truth, iv, 205.

Ops, who the person so called, iii, 58. Travelled from Orete into Phrygia, 86.

Called also Rhea and Cybele, ib. Never worshipped in Crete, 87.

Origin of image worship, ii, 207.

Orus, the Egyptian, thought to become the star Orion, ii, 196.

Osiris, how represented by images, ii, 210.

Ouranus, king of Orete, iii, 56.

Ovid, his fable of Cadmus sowing the serpent's teeth, explained, ii, 178.

P.

Palladium, no such idol in the days of Æneas, i, 202.

Panathenæan games, instituted by Hellen, ii, 191.

Papists, chargeable with idolatry, iii, 98.

Parents, our first, had no excuse for their transgression, iv, 157. Why not permitted to escape death, 196. Not driven out of the garden instantly after their transgression, 200. After the fall, would naturally think it decent to be clothed, 202.

Passover, its institution, ii, 273.

Pastor kings of Egypt, their conquest of that country, ii, 153. Probably were the Horites, 155. Date of their invasion, 156. Oppress the Israelites, ib.

Paternal authority, deference paid to, by ancient legislators, ii, 89.

Pathrusim, king of Thebes, i, 134. Author of the Egyptian learning, 135.

His death, 165.

Pelasgus, first king of Arcadia, ii, 181.

Pentateuch, arguments in defence of its having been written by Moses, iii, 21.

Persians, at first worshippers of the true God, i, 181. In what manner they corrupted their religion, 194.

Person, one to descend from the woman, who should conquer the great enemy of mankind, iv, 181.

Pharaoh, his opinion of the miracles of Moses, ii, 333. Refuses to part with the Israelites, 207. His object in requiring his magicians to work mira-

- oles, 258. His impious obstinacy, 268. This hardness of heart not produced in him by God, 270. His rage against Moses, 272. Resolves to pursue the Israelites, 278. Is overwhelmed with all his army in the Red Sea, 279. What king of that name perished in this manner, iii, 128.
- Pharaoh's dreams interpreted by Joseph, ii, 140.
- Pharaoh's daughter, adopts Moses, ii, 219.
- Philistines, idolatry of, i, 199. True worshippers of God in the days of Abraham, 183. Whence their strength and increase of people, iii, 256.
- Philo, the Jew, his observation upon the Jewish law, iii, 208.
- Philosophy, speculative, first corrupted religion, i, 207. True, will teach us to think the useful inventions of life were given by God, iv, 201.
- Phinehas, kill Zimri and Cozbi, iii, 185. That action considered, 186, &c.
- Phocus, king of Phocis, ii, 182.
- Phœnician alphabets, specimens of, i, 152, 153.
- Phœnicians, not the inventors of letters, i, 139.
- Phoroneus, first taught the Greeks to kindle fire, iii, 82.
- Phut, the son of Ham, settles in Arabia, i, 113.
- Physic, studied early in Egypt, ii, 234.
- Physicians, first mention of them in Scripture, ii, 235. In what their practice at first consisted, 236.
- Pictures, not the first letters, ii, 201.
- Pillar of the cloud before the Israelites, not an artificial signal, iii, 198.
- Pillar of light, said to attend the march of Thrasylulus, what proof we have of it, iii, 199.
- Pillars, the most ancient idols, i, 200.
- Plato, his opinion about the names of the heathen gods, ii, 246. His advice, in order to know the names of the gods, ib. His account of Prometheus, how to be understood, iii, 82.
- Pliny, method to cure bitter waters, recorded by him, iii, 34.
- Plutarch, his opinion about the heathen hero-gods, ii, 197. His explanation of the Delphian inscription, 248.
- Pluto, invented funeral rites, iii, 57. Assisted his brother Jupiter in governing his kingdom, 71. At Jupiter's death settled in Tartarus, 85.
- Poll, first and second taken at Sinai, iii, 110, 117. A third taken in the plains of Moab, 190.
- Polycæon, king of Messene, ii, 182.
- Polysyllables, a conjecture about the rise of them, i, 96.
- Pope, Mr., examination of some sentiments in his Essay on Man, iv, 44.
- Prideaux, Dean, his opinion of the interpolations in the Scriptures, iii, 260.
- Priestcraft, did not rule the heathen world, ii, 93.
- Priesthood, first settlement of the Roman, ii, 93. Of the Grecian, 95. Of the Asiatic, 99. The Egyptian not so extravagant as some have imagined, 103. The Asiatic, not so exorbitant as has been represented, 104.
- Priests, not appointed amongst the Indians in early ages, ii, 80. Their qualifications amongst the early Romans, 93. Kings and rulers performed the priestly duties amongst the early Greeks, 95. More numerous in Egypt.

than in other nations, 99. Disputes between those of Egypt and Abraham on the subject of Religion, 115. Their lands not bought by Joseph, and why, 141.

Princes of the tribes appointed, iii, 117.

Prohibition given to our first parents, considered, iv, 157.

Prometheus, time in which he lived, ii, 181. Fable relating to him examined, iii, 81. In what he offended Jupiter, 83. What punishment Jupiter inflicted on him, 84.

Prophecies, the design of them, iv, 173. Spoken by God to our first parents, enlarged by the prophecies in after-ages, 174. Full event of them not known until fulfilled, ib.

Prophets, false, their origin, ii, 98. True, did not always understand their own prophecies, iv, 173.

Proseuchæ, used in the time of Abraham, i, 181.

Providence, has an unexpected influence on the affairs of men, ii, 241.

Psylli, their supposed abilities to cure the bite of serpents, iii, 169.

Purification, a part of the ancient religion, ii, 266, n.

Pyramids, eighteen, by whom built, i, 165.

Python, who, fable of Apollo's killing him, iii, 85.

Q.

Quails, given to the Israelites, when in distress for food, iii, 35. Common on the coast near the Red Sea, ib.

Queens, opinion of the ancients respecting their right to govern, ii, 106. Their reigns generally glorious, 107.

R.

Rabbins, their fictions about the manna, iii, 35. Concerning the well at Beer, 42. n. Their defence of Aaron about the golden calf, 90. Their whimsical interpretation of Numb. xiv, 9, 129.

Rahab, her behaviour to the spies considered, iii, 214—216. Alive when the book of Joshua was written, 258. Afterwards married to a prince of Judah, ib.

Raleigh, Sir Walter, his opinion of the conduct of Moses, ii, 277.

Reason, unassisted by Revelation, could not in the most early times lead men to true religion, ii, 206. Proneness of mankind to follow its dictates in preference to the commands of God, iii, 99. Not a sufficient guide to man, iv, 108.

Rebekah, her opinion of Jacob better grounded than Isaac's, ii, 121.

Rectitude in which Adam was created, what, iv, 105.

Refuge, cities of, appointed, iii, 253.

Religion, of the antediluvians, i, 51. Of Abraham, what, 173. Of the several nations with whom he sojourned, 181. Of the Persians, ib. Of the Chal-

- deans, 183. Of the Arabians, ib. Of the Canaanites, ib. Of the Egyptians, 184. General agreement respecting it in the early ages of the world 185. The ancient heathen, derived from that of Abraham, 187. In what way the true religion was at first departed from, ib. Kings the first corrupters of it, 203. Revelation, not reason, the origin of the true religion, 206. Religion anciently considered as a positive institution of God, ii, 100. Disputes respecting it between Abraham and the Egyptian priests, 115. What introduced into Greece by the Egyptians, 192.
- Rephidim, place so called, where, iii, 38.
- Revelation, had there been none in the early times, men would not for ages have attained just sentiments of God and his worship, ii, 207. Necessity and certainty of, iv, 25. The origin of all our information, 63. Made to man as soon as created, 114.
- Ridicule, not a just way to determine what is true, or what is false, iv, 157.
- Riphat, settled near Paphlagonia, i, 107.
- River that watered the garden of Eden, its description, iv, 136. Gihon and Pison known to the author of the book of Ecclesiasticus, 138.
- Rivers Pison and Gihon not mentioned by profane geographers, iv, 139.
- Rock at Horeb produces water for the Israelites, iii, 38. Erroneously supposed to have followed them, ib.
- Romans, their treatment of the Carthaginians not to be justified, iii, 235.
- Rome, at first an elective monarchy, ii, 21.
- Romulus, first formed the Roman year, i, 10.

S.

- Sabbath, order of the, amongst the Israelites, iii, 7.
- Sabta, where he settled at the dispersion, i, 112.
- Sabtecha, settled in Arabia, i, 112.
- Sacrifices originally of divine appointment, i, 53, 74. Animals used for this purpose from the time of Adam, 72. Several sorts of, in Abraham's days, 177. What animals used for, in his time, 180. Origin and use of, iv, 48. Nature and design of that offered by Abel, ib. Not the invention of men, 57. Institution of, 245.
- Salatis, the first of the Pastor Kings of Egypt, ii, 153. His oppression of the Israelites, 156.
- Samaritan alphabets, specimens of, i, 151.
- Sanchoiatho, his account of the antediluvians, i, 42. Of Chronus sacrificing his son, ii, 60. Time when he lived, iv, 7. His account of the ancient Egyptian theology, 9.
- Satan, his being permitted to have a power to cause the serpent to speak, contradicts no principle of true philosophy, iv, 148.
- Saturn, king of Crete, iii, 55. Marries his sister Rhea, 58. Meaning of the fable of his devouring his children, 59. His reign, why called the golden age, 70. How far he civilized his people, 79.

Saviour, our, his divinity proved from the Old Testament, ii, 256. Proved to be the seed of the woman, promised to our first parents, iv, 180—184.

Scaliger, his mistake about the time of Cecrops, ii, 170.

Scholiast upon Callimachus, his remark upon the inscription on the tomb of Jupiter, iii, 79.

Science, natural, grows by experience and observation, iv, 99.

Scripture and philosophy agree as to the nature of man, iv, 199.

Scriptures, appear to have been in some places interpolated, i, 198; ii, 151; iii, 260. Give no countenance to the idea, that serpents might be charmed, iii, 171. On the various readings of, iv, 28—37. Internal proofs of their divine origin, 39, 40. Teach us, that revelation, and not philosophy, is the origin of all our information, 63.

Sculpture. the rudeness of it, no argument for the antiquity of the Egyptian images, ii, 207.

Seba, where he lived, i, 112.

Seed of the woman, meaning of that phrase, iv, 180—184.

Seir, the ancient inhabitants of, ii, 134. Conquered by the children of Esau, 135.

Semele, mother of Bacchus, by Jupiter, iii, 78.

Semiramis, queen of Babylon, i, 119. Attempts the conquest of India, 120.

Opinion of Herodotus concerning her antiquity, ii, 24. Contemporary with Abraham, 66.

Sensuality of nature in every natural descendant of our first parents, ii, 173.

Septuagint, the additions therein to the last chapter of Job, ii, 117.

Serpent, used very few words to Eve, except what she and Adam had heard from God, iv, 79. Meaning of its name, 144. Did not tempt Eve when alone, 145. Did not speak of itself, 146. Did not change its nature on that occasion, 147. Nor its form, 169. Import of the curse pronounced upon it, 169—186. Reckoned among the beasts of the field, 176.

Serpents, fiery, the Israelites destroyed by, iii, 167. Different kinds of, mentioned, 168. Charms used by the heathens for the cure of their bite, 169. Not originally destroyed by mankind, iv, 175. Highly honoured in early times, 178. After the flood became terrible to mankind, 177.

Servitude, how it began, ii, 85.

Sesac, probably the same with Sesostris, ii, 29.

Sesostris, probably the same with Sesac, ii, 29. Not so great a conqueror as generally supposed, 32. Not the Indian Bacchus, 72. Extent of his conquests, ib. Did not live in the time of Moses, iii, 125. Not the brother of Danaus, ib. Nor the same person as Ægyptus, ib. Not the son of Pharaoh, who was drowned in the Red Sea, 127.

Seth's pillars, Josephus's account of, i, 55.

Shadow, whimsical conceit of the Rabbins about it, iii, 122.

Shaftesbury, Lord, his remarks upon the Egyptian priesthood, considered, ii, 100. Answer to his remarks on Joseph's not purchasing the priests' lands, 142. His observations on Jethro's advice to Moses, iii, 45.

Sheba, where he lived, i, 113.

- Shekel, Jewish, of silver, of what value, iii, 110.
- Shem, the second son of Noah, i, 103. Parts of the world settled by his descendants, 107.
- Sicyon, kingdom of, began when, ii, 180.
- Sigeon inscription, fac similes of, i, 159, 160, 161.
- Sihon, king of the Amorites, defeated by the Israelites, iii, 175.
- Slavery, prohibited amongst the Indians in the earliest ages, ii, 80. Prejudicial to the commonwealth, 84. Its origin, 85.
- Sleep, into which Adam was cast, considered, iv, 89.
- Sodom destroyed, ii, 54.
- Spencer, Dr. his mistake about the origin of the Jewish rites and ceremonies, i, 187; ii, 217. Answer to his remarks on Ezekiel xx, 26, iii, 108.
- Spies, the twelve, sent out by Moses, iii, 124.
- Spirits, evil, not concerned in the ancient magic, ii, 220. The scene of their demerit not fully known to us, iv, 154.
- Statutes not good, no part of the ritual law, iii, 100. What these statutes were, and when given, 106.
- Strabo's geography, when composed, iv, 139.
- Strata, those occasioned by the deluge, no proof against Moses's description of the garden of Eden, iv, 128.
- Sun, miracle of its standing still at the command of Joshua, iii, 237. Remarkably pertinent to the circumstances both of the Israelites and Canaanites, ib. Astronomical objections against the truth of this miracle, answered, 238. Not unobserved by the heathen astronomers, 240. Occasioned the fable of Phaeton, 241. The Chinese accounts of it, 242. Could not be a mere vapour in the air, 243. Other objections to it answered, ib.
- Syncellus, account of his Chronographia, iii, 148.
- Syphis, king of Egypt, his speculations upon religious subjects, i, 188; ii, 117. Pretended to have had divine revelations made to him, 188. Date of his reign, ii, 115.

T:

- Tautus, the second of that name, author of the sacred animals and hieroglyphics of Egypt, ii, 200.
- Tabernacle finished, iii, 110. And set up, 112. A visible demonstration given of its having been directed by God, 113. Purpose for which it was made, ib. First structure in the world for the purposes of religion, ib.; ii, 215. Erected at the division of Canaan, when and why, 246, 247.
- Table of Isis, described, ii, 211.
- Tables of the kings of Egypt, iii, 152, 153, 158.
- Tangier, inscription said to have been found there, iii, 254.
- Tarshish planted in Cilicia, i, 105.
- Tartarus, where situate, iii, 56.
- Tax, laid upon the Israelites towards building the tabernacle, iii, 110.

- Temples, none built by Cecrops, Cadmus, or Danaus, ii, 215. None erected before the Jewish tabernacle, ib. Not large when first built, 216. Made no great figure in Homer's time, ib. Solomon's much larger than any then in the world, 217.
- Terah, not the inventor of images, i, 201.
- Texts of Scripture, cited and explained, iv, 311.
- Thales, first corrected the Greek year, i, 10; ii, 10. Imperfection of his astronomical knowledge, ii, 12.
- Thebes, in Egypt, when built, i, 131.
- Themis, who the person so called, iii, 85.
- Thermopylæ, meaning of that word, ii, 187.
- Thessalus, king of Thessaly, ii, 181.
- This, a kingdom in Egypt, i, 165.
- Thusimares, the king, who advanced Joseph, ii, 147.
- Tillage of the ground a laborious employment for Adam, iv, 187.
- Tiras, the father of the Thracians, i, 107.
- Titans, whom, iii, 57. Opposed Jupiter, 75. Men of a most excellent character, ib.
- Togamah, where he lived, i, 103.
- Tomes of Manetho, some account of, iii, 133.
- Tower of Belus, description of, ii, 163.
- Tree, whether any one could naturally cure the waters at Marah, iii, 33.
- Tree of knowledge, sufficiently distinguished from all others by its situation, iv, 92. Prohibition of, the rule for our first parents walking humbly with God, 205.
- Tree of life, had our first parents not sinned, whether it would have sufficed mankind unto all ages, iv, 203.
- Tribes of Israel, the situation of their inheritances in Canaan, iii, 247. Where their lands were situate, not to be now exactly ascertained, 251. The two tribes and a half build an altar at Jordan, 253.
- Truth, the word of God the rule of, iv, 205.
- Tubal, where he lived, i, 103.
- Typho, called the Bear star, ii, 196.

U.

- Usher, archbishop, his date of the birth of Judah considered, ii, 152, 153.

V.

- Vaticination, whence the learned heathens thought it to proceed, ii, 232.
- Venephes, a king of Egypt, i, 165. Supposed to have built eighteen pyramids, ib.
- Virtue and vice cannot exist where there is no choice, iv, 159.
- Vitringa, on the tree of the knowledge of good and evil, iv, 209. Why the tree was so called, ib. Not so called in reference to the fall of man, 210.

Placed in the garden for the purpose of trial, 212. Of instruction, 213.
And as a sacramental pledge, ib.

Vulcan, settled at Lemnos, iii, 86.

W.

Water, miraculously produced at Horeb, iii, 38. Did not follow the Israelites through the wilderness, 42.

Waters, bitter, at Marah, iii, 32. How such waters were cured by the heathen, 34.

Wilderness, not absolutely without water, iii, 39. What sort of place, 195.

Words, in themselves mere sounds, iv, 42, 74. Do not convey to us the speaker's intention till we have learned their meaning, ib. Never before heard, could not naturally be understood at first hearing, ib. Those spoken by the serpent to Eve not metaphorical, 78. Those recorded by Moses, not the very words spoken by the serpent, 79, n.

World, not from eternity, iv, 67. Its origin known only from the history of Moses, ib. Of the same appearance before the flood as after, 128. Not everywhere broken by the deluge, ib.

Worship of the heavenly bodies, its origin, 189. Of images, i, 200. Religious, duty of magistrates to establish, ii, 105. Of heroes, when established, and why, 194, 195. Of images, origin of, 207.

Writing, the manner of it amongst the ancients, i, 150, &c.

X.

Xerxes, his answer to Pythius the Lydian, ii, 91.

Y.

Year, probable length of, before the Flood, i, 8. First corrected in Egypt, ib. The Babylonian, 9. The Median, ib. The Grecian, 10. The Roman, 11. The Jewish, ib. The ancient, not so long as the present Julian, 12. Fabulous account, given by the Egyptians, of the additions made to it, 14, n. iii, 9. The antediluvian year not lunar, 48. The Jewish, how computed, iii, 6. Of Jubilee, when to be kept, 211, n.

Years, Sabbatical and Jubilee, some account of, 211, n.

Z.

Zathraustes and Zamolxis compared with Moses, iii, 201.

Zelophehad, case of the inheritance of his daughters, iii, 190.

Zimri, slain by Phinehas, iii, 185.

Zoroastres, or Oxyartes, a king of Bactria, i, 119.

TEXTS OF SCRIPTURE

CITED AND EXPLAINED.

	Page.
Genesis i, 14	ii, 77
26	iv, 102
27.	iv, 67
29	iv, 71
31	iv, 68
ii, 6	iv, 69
8	iv, 70
9	iv, 194
10	iv, 136
15	iv, 188
16, 17	iv, 108
18	iv, 73
19	iv, 83
20	iv, 86
21	iv, 89
24	iv, 206
iii, 1	iv, 98
5	iv, 77
7	iv, 164
11	iv, 168
15	i, 173
21	iv, 200
22	iv, 196
iv, 1	ii, 254
7	i, 96
11, 12, 14	i, 37
23	i, 39
26	i, 53; ii, 254
v, 29.	i, 78
ix, 2	ii, 83
x, 11	i, 125
32	i, 99
xii, 7	i, 176
8	ii, 115
xv, 12, 16	iv, 90

	Page.
Gen. xv, 16	ii, 53
xvii, 1	iii, 50
xviii, 1	iii, 50
xx, 16	ii, 55
xxi, 15	ii, 56
33	i, 176
xxii, 18	i, 174; ii, 113
xxvi, 16	ii, 114
24	iii, 50
xxvii, 25, 36	ii, 110
40	ii, 122
xxviii, 21	ii, 116
xxx, 33	ii, 124
xxxi, 43	ii, 116
xxxii, 28	ii, 130
30	iii, 50
xxxiii, 19	ii, 119
xxxv, 2	ii, 132
9	iii, 50
xxxvi, whole chapter	ii, 135
xli, 43	ii, 140
xlili, 32	ii, 236
xliv, 5	ii, 229
xlvi, 8	ii, 149
16	ii, 150
27	ii, 150
34	i, 198
xlvii, 22	ii, 142
xlviil, 22	ii, 112
xliz, 13	iii, 252
Exodus. i, 10	ii, 154
21	ii, 158
iii, 13	ii, 243
14, 15	ii, 247
iv, 11	iv, 79
21	ii, 270
v, 2	ii, 259
vi, 3	ii, 254
vii, 3	ii, 270
9, 10, 12	iv, 176
viii, 9	ii, 271
19	ii, 260
ix, 12	ii, 270
x, 1	ii, 270
xi, 3	ii, 269
8	ii, 272
10	ii, 270
xii, 1	ii, 273
35	ii, 274

Exodus xii, 40	ii, 275
xiv, 18	ii, 250
xv, 25	iii, 31
xvi, 16	iii, 36
xvii, 10	iii, 43
xix, 5	iii, 102
xxiii, 8	iv, 79
32	iii, 232
xxiv, 10	iii, 49
11	iii, 51
xxxii, 24	iii, 90
25	iii, 92
26, 27, 28	iii, 92
35	iii, 90
Leviticus x, 3	iii, 116
8, 9	iii, 114
19	iii, 115
xvii, 10, 11	i, 78
xix, 31	ii, 230
xx, 27	ii, 230
Numb. iii, 39	iii, 118
xi, 22	iv, 87
29	iii, 120
31	iii, 120
xii, 1	i, 112
xv, 39	iii, 116
xxi, 4	iii, 166
xxi, 11—20	iii, 175
xxii, 20	iii, 177
22	iii, 177
xxiii, 1	ii, 228
xxiv, 24	i, 105
xxv, 12	iii, 188
13	iii, 189
xxxiii, 44, 47	iii, 175
54	iii, 247
Deut. iv, 15	iii, 52
vii, 1, 2, 5, 16, &c.	iii, 231
ix, 21	iii, 40
xii, 11, 12	i, 79
xviii, 10, 11	ii, 229
xx, 10, &c.	iii, 229
11	iii, 233
xxviii, 60	ii, 235
xxxii, 8	i, 97
39	iv, 33
xxxiv, 6	iii, 192
Joshua iv, 18	iii, 217
v, 9	iii, 218, 221
11	iii, 222

		Page.
Joshua	xi, 19, 20	iii, 230
	xix, 47	iii, 250
	xxiv, 1	iii, 256
	2	i, 166
Judges	xxi, 14	iv, 87
1 Sam.	xxvi, 12	iv, 89
1 Kings	ix, 21	iii, 233
	xviii, 36	ii, 117
2 Kings	v, 11	ii, 244
	xviii, 25	ii, 251
	xix, 9	i, 111
1 Chron.	i, 35—54	ii, 135
	v, 1, 2	ii, 111
	xi, 18	i, 79
2 Chron.	ii, 16	i, 110
	viii, 7, 8	iii, 233
Job	iv, 13, 15, 16	iv, 90
	xv, 7,	iv, 126
	xxxi, 26, 27	i, 195
	xxxii, 8	iv, 106
Psalms	1, 5	i, 179
	lviii, 4, 5	iii, 171
	lxviii, 15	ii, 271
	lxxviii, 16—20	iii, 39
	xc, 2	iv, 126
	xcv, 10	iii, 39
	civ, 16	ii, 271
	cv, 41	iii, 93
	cvi, 33	iii, 163
	cxix, 18	iv, 78
	142	iv, 205
Prov.	iii, 5	iii, 99
	xvi, 10	iii, 211
	xix, 15	iv, 89
Eccles.	x, 8	iii, 171
Isaiah	xviii, 1	i, 112
	lii, 6	ii, 154
Jerem.	iv, 4, 5	iv, 171
	vii, 21	iii, 103
	22	i, 74; iii, 103
	viii, 17	iii, 171
	xlvi, 9	i, 114
	li, 27	i, 104
Ezek.	viii, 14	i, 132
	xx, 11	iii, 104
	21, 23	iii, 109
	26	iii, 108
	xxix, 10	i, 110
	xxxviii, 2	i, 103
	6	i, 104

		Page.
Daniel	viii, 19, 26	iv, 90
	xi, 29, 30	i, 105
Micah	vi, 8	iv, 203
Wisd.	ix, 15	iv, 195
Ecclus.	xvii, 5	iv, 76
	xliv, 22, 23	ii, 111
Matt.	ii, 2	ii, 194
	iv, 4	iii, 41
John	iii, 10	iv, 199
	iv, 22	i, 75
	vii, 18	iii, 164
	viii, 56	i, 176
	xvii, 17	iv, 205
Acts	vii, 14	ii, 150
	xxvi, 7	ii, 112
Rom.	i, 20	ii, 206
	26	iv, 197
	ii, 14, 15	iv, 100
	vii, 18, 19	iv, 198
	ix, 6, 7	ii, 113
	8	ii, 113
	11	ii, 110
	11, 12	ii, 138
	17, 18	ii, 270
1 Cor.	i, 24	iv, 197
	x, 4	iii, 41
	13	iii, 199
	xi, 10	iii, 93
2 Cor.	viii, 13, 14, 15	iii, 37
	xi, 3	iv, 149
Gal.	iii, 19	iii, 102
1 Tim.	ii, 14	iv, 146
Heb.	iii, 2	ii, 243
	vii, 6	i, 107
	xi, 3	ii, 206
	3—6	ii, 245
	4	i, 73
	5	i, 75
	7	iii, 215
	17—19	ii, 58
	24	ii, 220
	31	iii, 215
	xii, 16, 17	ii, 110
1 Peter	i, 20	iv, 197
1 John	iv, 12	iii, 49

W. W. WOODWARD,

Is now Stereotyping

SCOTT'S FAMILY BIBLE, in five volumes quarto, from the last revised and enlarged London standard edition. The first volume may be expected in the month of February, 1825. This will be by far the most elegant edition ever published in Europe or America. Price to Subscribers, 5 dollars per vol. in boards, 6 dollars in sheep and 7 dollars in calf. Fifth copy gratis for every four subscribed or purchased. Proposals, with a specimen, will be furnished any Gentleman who will drop a line to the publisher, post paid. The Life of the author, with an elegant Portrait, will be annexed to the fourth vol. of the work or first of the New Testament. Also, BUCK'S THEOLOGICAL DICTIONARY, stereotyping in one large octavo vol. revised and greatly improved. JOSEPHUS'S WORKS, complete in 4 volumes octavo, will also be published in January.

Lately Published,

BROWN'S ANTIQUITIES of the Jews, in 2 large octavo volumes.

BUCK'S WORKS, complete in 6 vols.

WARDLAW'S LECTURES on the Book of Ecclesiastes, in 1 volume, octavo.

BRADLEY'S SERMONS, on popular subjects, 1 vol. 8vo.

LETTERS ON THE SACRAMENT, by S. Bayard, Esq. 1 vol. 12mo.

LETTERS ON THE ETERNAL SONSHIP OF CHRIST, addressed to Professor Stuart, 1 vol. 12mo.

WITHERSPOON'S MORAL PHILOSOPHY, 1 vol. 12mo.

M'EWEN ON THE TYPES.

VILLAGE SERMONS, 4 vols. 12mo.

SCOTT'S WORKS, in 8 volumes, the last volume containing his life.

A liberal discount allowed on Books in the various departments of Literature.

DS-1
- SS
v. 3-4

3 2000 009 834 443

